We should elect a President and a Congress which will see to it that, while carrying out the Marshall plan and our foreign policy, not a dollar, not an ounce of food, not a pound of material, is wasted, unwisely used, or expended for any purpose other than to further the ending of war and the helping of those peoples and nations who are willing to make sacrifices and fight for their own independence and security.

The people are entitled to a President and a Congress which, while aiding others, preparing for our own national defense, will keep ever in mind the well-known truth that our resources are not inexhaustible, that the willingness of our people to conscript men for foreign service is not without limit.

The New Deal mistakes of the past few years are water over the dam. We must minimize the injuries they caused.

The President and the Congress having adopted the Marshall plan, enacted conscription, those are now national policies. I shall follow the thought of Stephen Decatur when he said:

> Our country. In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong.

In following national policy and in serving you, it will be my purpose to see to it that we do not weaken ourselves and endanger our national safety by exhaustive, wasteful, unwise giving, or conscription of men. That we at all times retain our sovereignty and adhere to the principles which guarantee the people's freedom and independence. That we do not become involved in every war no matter where or why fought. In short, that, when the people "vote American," we make sure that we act for America.

Open Letter From Howard Fast

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. VITO MARCANTONIO
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting the following open letter to the American people written by Howard Fast:

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

NEW YORK, June 15, 1948.

MY FELLOW AMERICANS: In a sense, it is presumptuous of me to attempt to speak to all the millions of good people who inhabit this land. For many months now almost all of our newspapers have been closed to me; the magazines, too, and the radio as well. To slander a man; then to permit him no answer, no defense; there is the simple rule of free press in today's America.

Yet I would be remiss indeed if I did not raise my voice concerning the refusal, yesterday, of the United States Supreme Court to hear the appeal of the board of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. This is not a time for silence and forbearance.

In a few days 11 men and women will go to prison. Their crime, for which they are being punished, is twofold: Firstly, they are anti-Fascists; secondly, they have devoted years of effort to healing the sick, to feeding the hungry, to aiding the lame and the halt who have fought for Republican Spain. For this they are branded as criminals.

For 2 years, we, the board of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, have been hounded and persecuted and questioned, and no other facts but those I list above emerged.

Hundreds of pages of sworn committee and court testimony have been taken. Yet no other facts but those I list above emerged.

There are those who say we are foreign agents. They lie in their teeth! There are those who say we are un-American. I call them un-American—for I know of no better Americans than my fellow members of this board, no more loyal, no more devoted to those splendid principles that once made the very name America such a good sound in the ears of all men.

That we are going to jail is not a matter of great consequence. We personally accepted these jail sentences rather than surrender our principles and the principles of our Nation to the ethics of the Un-American Committee. But the reasons why we go to jail are a matter of great—indeed tragic—consequence to all Americans.

For, with our imprisonment, anti-fascism becomes a crime under the law of the land. Charity becomes a crime. To aid the sick and the hungry becomes a crime—if the politics of those you aid are not the politics of the Un-American Committee.

This is the burning, terrible shame of America today! This is what we cannot and must not accept! I need not and will not apologize for my native land. I know it too well and love it too deeply. Tens of millions of you have read my books; I need not testify to you that I have never written a work except out of love and concern and respect for the land which gave me birth and sustenance. I cannot remain silent while a group of evil men attempt to make that land an abomination, in the eyes of free people everywhere.

My voice will be heard. The voices of the 10 brave men and women whose sentence I share will be heard. And yours must be heard, too—for this is a long step toward the beginning of the awful night, that terrible and inhuman night which has descended upon so many nations and which men call fascism.

HOWARD FAST.

Draft Law Will Not Prevent Another Bataan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOWARD H. BUFFETT
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am including the following letter to Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall and a reply from Col. C. G. Blakeney of the Secretary's office:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1948.

The Honorable KENNETH C. ROYALL,
Secretary of the Army,
Department of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On January 17, 1947, Brigadier General Trudeau, in a speech dealing with the manpower requirements for the Military Establishment, made the following statement:

"If we were to face a crisis tomorrow, most of our forces in occupation zones could be overrun and destroyed; in the United States we have neither the force to control emergency situations, nor the troops even to prevent sabotage of an elementary nature at critical points in our industrial, transportation, and communication systems."

I am writing to ascertain two things:

1. Are the military establishments now existent in Berlin, Vienna, and Korea strong enough in manpower, equipment, and matériel to resist successfully an attack in force from foreign powers adjacent to them in each of these areas?

2. If not, have any legislative proposals been officially presented to the Congress by the Department of the Army and/or the Department of National Defense which were designed to enable the Army to place in these locations military establishments strong enough to resist successfully attacks in force by foreign powers?

Your cooperation in furnishing me with this information promptly will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD BUFFETT,
Member of Congress.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
SPECIAL STAFF, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1948.

Hon. HOWARD BUFFETT,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BUFFETT: Secretary Royall has requested that I reply to your letter in connection with two questions you have propounded to the Department.

The first question asks: "Are the military establishments now existent in Berlin, Vienna, and Korea strong enough in manpower, equipment, and matériel to resist successfully an attack in force from foreign powers adjacent to them in each of these areas?" The answer to this question is that the military establishment in these areas is not strong enough to resist an attack in force. Our forces are deployed in foreign areas based on the mission of maintaining the internal security of a given area and to provide administrative machinery for the United States' share of occupation. One of the chief reasons for occupation is to establish a sound government based on democratic principles. To have sufficient personnel to resist a possible attack in a given area would require armed forces far in excess of those presently available to the Military Establishment. The only suitable mission for our forces in overseas areas appears to be that given above while depending on the authority and prestige of the United Nations to forestall any armed action from a foreign source.

The second question was: "If not, have any legislative proposals been officially presented to the Congress by the Department of the Army and/or the Department of National Defense which were designed to enable the Army to place in these locations military establishments strong enough to resist successfully attacks in force by foreign powers?" The Military Establishment as such, and particularly the Army, have long realized the present weakness in strength of its forces. The combined Army and Air Force strength of 1,070,000 men was decided on not because that number was sufficient but as a compromise, because of the effect it would have upon the economy of the United States to withdraw personnel from industry in order to increase the armed forces materially and the additional cost on the taxpayer. With this strength the Army has deployed its forces, and assigned missions thereto, so as to accomplish most effectively the mission placed on it by the President and the Congress. The Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, and the Chief of Staff of the Army have called attention to the need for:

1. Additional strength to build up the reserve components of the Army by inauguration of universal military training.

2. An expansion of the Regular Army by reinstituting the draft in order to build up the Army's strength of 822,000 men.

Even though both of these proposals were to be passed, it would still leave all garrisons in overseas areas without sufficient strength to resist an attack in force. It is believed that, at present, the number of men and the amount of equipment necessary to place enough personnel in the various areas overseas to resist any attack would be inconsistent with the national economy and the plans of the United Nations.

Your interest in this problem is deeply appreciated and I trust that this discussion will be helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,

C. G. BLAKENEY,
Colonel, GSC, Legislative and Liaison Division.

The Right to Work

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. RALPH W. GWINN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GWINN of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Maurice R. Franks, director and editor of the National Labor-Management Foundation, Chicago, Ill., before the Committee on Education and Labor, May 12, 1948, on the subject entitled "The Right to Work":

Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee of Education and Labor, my name is Maurice Franks.

I appear here today at your invitation in the capacity of director of the National Labor-Management Foundation, an educational, nonprofit corporation, organized for the purpose of bringing about a better and clearer understanding between the workers, their employers, and the general public. I am also the editor of the Foundation's publication known as Partners. It is obvious that in these capacities, I am interested in the affairs affecting the workers and the employers, and one of the most important things affecting the American worker today, at least to my way of thinking, is his right to work, and that, gentlemen, is a most pertinent subject that calls for careful deliberation.

Just as a matter of record, I declare that I am not here before your committee representing any organization other than the National Labor-Management Foundation. I am not on the pay roll of any labor union nor that of any employers' association. I come before you with clean hands to give to you what I believe to be important information that may play its part in establishing for all time the natural prerogative of every American—his right to work—and I may add to this the natural prerogative of the employer—his right to make work available to all those who seek it, coming within legitimate requisites.

Now, gentlemen, this immediately brings us on the threshold of the subject matter having to do with the right to work. The Bill of Rights, under our Constitution, specifies, and in no uncertain language, that nothing shall interfere with this inherent right; and yet, in spite of this document of rights, we have evidence before our very eyes today that the workers of this Nation are compelled to meet requisites that have positively nothing to do with their actual employment.

No; I'm not going to "beat around the bush" on this subject; I'm going to tell you quite frankly what I have in mind, even though I already know that I will be highly criticized for telling you what I am about to disclose, and it has to do with dictatorial labor leadership—leadership that is as unnecessary as earmuffs in the summertime. But to try to explain it to certain leaders of labor unions is just like trying to converse with a person wearing earmuffs; they just don't seem to hear well, and simply because the argument doesn't listen well, as far as they themselves are personally concerned. Therefore, it becomes most important at this time for the gentlemen of this committee to lend their ears and have an open mind if we are to have unionism within these United States, within the bounds of Americanism; and, gentlemen, on that point we cannot have this type of unionism if we allow the dictators of labor to set up a government within our Government that infringes upon the rights of the citizenry that are guaranteed by the Government of their own through the Constitution and the bill of rights.

I'm not antiunion; I believe in unions, good unions; unions that operate on a basis of respect and responsibility, and when they do operate on this basis there is no shortage of followers and thereby no need of labor dictatorship. A man's right to work is a God-given right; yes, an inherent right; and no labor leader or union book of rules has the right to disregard these God-given endowments. In spite of this, we have laws on the statute books today, right here in these United States, that condone and even encourage the abuse of these fundamental prerogatives. Gentlemen, I have reference to the closed shop. No; not the closed shop that we knew under the Wagner Act that prohibited a man from obtaining work before joining a union. This little piece of deviltry removed all rights of the worker unless he joined a union before being employed, a system that is so repugnant and unfair when brought into its true light that it couldn't stand a chance of holding its own before the court of public opinion.

The public, like myself, deplores unfairness, and it was they who stormed the Congress for its elimination; thereby making it possible for Mr. TAFT and Mr. HARTLEY to place a prohibition against it within their Taft-Hartley labor law. Had this proviso ended the abuse of the American worker, I assure you, gentlemen of this committee, that I would not be here today; but if you are to be realistic about the condition, you must face the fact that you did not accomplish what you may have intended to be your real objective, because you did not get rid of the practice of compulsion. What you actually did was get rid of a particular name of compulsion when you outlawed the closed shop. That is what you did, gentlemen, you outlawed a name, you did not outlaw the practice because we still have a closed shop in practice; I mean the union shop. It is nothing more than the black cat of the closed shop dyed white, with a 30-day bleaching period, the bleaching being that under the union shop a worker is not compelled to join a union as a prerequisite of employment, but, gentlemen, under this system, he, too, must join the union for the right to continue to earn a living after 30 days of employment, whether or not he subscribes to the aims, objectives, and achievements of the particular union, whether or not the union is capable of representing him in an efficient manner by representatives of his own choosing, by men who come within the confines of dignity and responsibility. There is no sound argument that compulsory unionism in any form is a necessary instrumentality for good union operation. The greatest criterion that I can offer the committee on this point is backed up by the operation of the railroad brotherhoods.

Twenty-eight years of my working life has been spent with two of these unions, and during this period I had ample opportunity to examine the inner operations of the railroad brotherhoods as to their modes of operation, particularly those having to do with their membership. There are 21 separate and distinct unions on the railroads, with a potential membership of one-million-three-hundred-and-fifty-some-odd-thousand followers, meaning that if they were completely organized they would have some one-million-three-hundred - and - fifty - some - odd-thousand members. Do they have a closed or union shop? No, gentlemen, they do not. They operate on a basis of selling the bill of goods of unionism. Now, if I were to tell you that the railroad brotherhoods have 1,250,000 members, would you believe that they have sold a bill of goods. I believe you would almost answer in unison that they have. Well, gentlemen, they don't have 1,250,000 members enrolled in the brotherhoods. They have almost 1,500,000 dues-paying members, and without benefit of the union, or closed shop system, if you please. This may sound rather preposterous—a potential of 1,250,000 and an enrollment of 1,500,000. It does sound so on the surface, but when you go below the surface, you will find that these brotherhoods have really sold the bill of goods of unionism, and I repeat, without the benefit of compulsion through the medium of the closed or union shop.

After joining the brotherhoods of their own volition, they see enough beneficial results within the unions that even after they retire from railroading they still retain their membership; and those who entered the railroad field and left it for other lines of endeavor, respect the brotherhoods well enough to continue their membership; that's why they have more members than the actual potential, and that's why I lay my claim, gentlemen, that we do not need compulsion in any manner, shape, or form for a strong and effective labor movement within these United States. Therefore, it is obvious that the elimination of the union shop would not be a handicap, but in reality would be a great stimulus to a bigger and better union labor movement here in America because it would place unionism in the true position of Americanism; and when this system operates contrary to the principles of our Constitution and Bill of Rights, it is un-American and has no legitimate place within the confines of this system.

The Congress displayed a tremendous amount of courage by bringing through the Taft-Hartley law. I subscribe to it, not in toto, but I do say that there are some very fine provisions that will prove themselves to be for the betterment of the worker, the unions, the employer, and the Nation as a whole. Now you can display more courage, irrespective of what some labor leader may tell you, by outlawing the union shop; and you will get the same barrage of adverse criticism from the labor leaders who do not want a system that makes them less than dictators; but don't worry too much about them, and bring it through, and you will find, like the Taft-Hartley law, that when the worker really understands the actual intention behind your action, that he will back you up just as he is doing today with the Taft-Hartley labor law. There is not a man in this room right now that hasn't heard the new labor act referred to as a slave-labor law. Well, when this fancy label was attached to the law the average American worker, and particularly the union worker, believed it to be just that, but as time went on, and as he became acquainted with the law, he became conscious of the fact that it was not a slave-labor law at all. He realized, and is realizing more fully every day, that the good points of this law are playing an important role in unshackling him from the chains of the dictatorial labor leader and are really making him a free man. So vociferous were the cries of the labor leaders, and so cocksure were they, that the workers did not want the Taft-Hartley law, that they caused a poll to be taken among the workers of this Nation.

The American Federation of Labor made a poll available to their 7,500,000 members on this so-called slave-labor law. How many do you think voted on this poll out of 7,500,000. You'd never guess unless you have read the same figures that I have. Polls on economic issues, like polls on political issues, are more intense when the voters are voting against an issue; therefore, it is reasonable to assume that if the American workers, and particularly the members of the American Federation of Labor were not satisfied with the Taft-Hartley labor law in the main, that they would have availed themselves of the opportunity to vote against it, thereby equipping their leaders with a mighty important instrumentality for the repeal of this law. Especially would this have been done, since the poll was a secret ballot with no possible repercussion to the voters; but, gentlemen, out of 7,500,000 voters on this secret ballot, about 1/700 percent of them thought enough of the issue to even cast a vote, and this statement is backed up by the records of the American Federation of Labor, who just the other day disclosed the result of the poll. Out of 7,500,000 members just a little better than 10,000 of them cast a vote for or against the Taft-Hartley law, and that, gentlemen, should be conclusive proof to you that any new legislation that you may bring forth that is based on equity and sound Americanism will stand the test of the court of public opinion, and that court is constituted by men and women from every walk of life, including the members of our various unions. Yes, gentlemen, by all means, outlaw the union shop too; and speaking of a man's right to work, I want to take you just one more step into a subject that also needs correction.

I am going to pick on picketing. No, I'm not entirely against picketing, I firmly believe that labor has a right to let it be known through pickets, or any other means of communication, that they are not on good terms with their employer; but I see no reason why I, a member of the public, who has no grievance with an employer, should come under the rules and regulations of any union. I, as a free American citizen, should have the right at all times to go when and where I please, and yet, under the system of present-day picketing, I am not allowed to do this. Just a short time ago, over in Pennsylvania in a very small town, I wanted to visit with a friend of mine who owns a manufacturing plant. When I arrived at the gate of entrance, I was completely surrounded by pickets and told that I was not allowed to enter that plant; and believe it or not, I did not enter that plant. My friend was not allowed to see me on his own property, and by special permission from the charge d'affaires, my friend came outside to meet me. Just what kind of unionism is this? Who has the right to infringe upon my rights? Why does it take 100 and sometimes 5,000 pickets to tell the public that a plant is on strike? In my mind, this is not only unnecessary, but definitely un-American. This is mob rule. This is obstruction. Yes, gentlemen, this is confiscation of property.

I believe in free speech, and I reiterate that the unions have a right to let it be known that they are not getting along with the employer; but it doesn't take 100 men at an entrance, or 5,000 walking up and down in front of the plant, to acquaint me with the fact that the plant is on strike. This system of union strategy is as outmoded as the wood-burner on the railroad. It is not streamlined union strategy. It does not accomplish anything but adverse public opinion, and it should not be tolerated. One man at an entrance of a plant, or two at the most, equipped with the proper signs, would accomplish the same purpose, because no real sympathizer would cross the line, whether it be a human or imaginary line; therefore, I suggest that picketing be reduced to no more than two men at any one entrance. Mass picket lines, in my mind, are nothing but an act of dog in the manger. The strikers don't want to work, and they place themselves in the position of not allowing anyone else to work, even though the terms may be acceptable to the newcomer. As I said before, the right to work is inherent, and since it is, no dissatisfied worker should be allowed to prohibit anyone from taking a job that he gave up, and he should be intelligent enough to realize that if his grievance against the struck employer is legitimate, that it won't be long before his successor will be seeking other employment; thus, placing an unfair employer in the position of treating workers as they deserve to be treated. Yes, gentlemen, as I view compulsory unionism and mass picketing from all its angles, I have come to the conclusion that these practices within American unionism are not only unnecessary but rather picayune.

I thank you.

The Situation Confronting Us

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, many times an attempt has been made by me to visualize the situation which, because of previous blunders, now confronts us.

Over the months I have endeavored to select leading articles by well-informed individuals which would give a rather accurate and concise view of the world situation.

From one such article, I read:

Unless faced by Soviet aggression in western Europe this year, President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall will have to think seriously about whether present American foreign policy, centered on saving Europe, shall continue—and if so, how?

Although the majority of politicians are reluctant to admit it, all our major domestic policies, such as taxation and economic stability, are dependent on our policies with respect to the rest of the world.

Conditions which have existed since the end of World War II cannot continue. This country will have to decide either to deal energetically with the problems of Europe as they have been created by Russia and form what amounts to an alliance with the countries outside the iron curtain, or get out of Europe altogether and try to establish a protecting curtain in the Western Hemisphere.

According to the best American military and political minds, there can be no middle-of-the-road policy, since there is no real indication that the Kremlin has changed its expansionism in any way.

The overwhelming majority of American people are of European stock. Hence, our attention has been riveted on developments across the Atlantic. We have paid less attention to the Pacific, where China has been regarded as an important business investment. Up to the outbreak of the war Japan was a potential enemy, threatening our security.

Only relative attention was paid to the vast territories extending from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, where some 160,000,000 persons inhabit sovereign republics with immense prospects.

To most Americans, even those who are labeled isolationists, Europe is the chief center of foreign interest. Nothing but exceptionally powerful and dramatic stories from Latin America and Australia get top billing in American newspapers and newsreels.

Still, in becoming thus engrossed in European matters we are prone to overlook the fact, which is becoming increasingly obvious that Europe is a dying continent. Its civilization already has been transplanted to the Western Hemisphere.

The present tragic turmoil which is developing under our eyes is not accidental. Nor is it likely to be remedied, many realistic and unemotional observers fear, by vast expenditures or even armed intervention on our part.

PROGRESS MOVES WEST

Since the dawn of history world civilizations have moved from east to west. From the days of Babylon those civilizations have lasted a couple of centuries and been destroyed by invasions from Asia. From the ruins of one of the greatest of civilizations, the Roman, which was destroyed by barbarian tribes from the East, arose western Europe's civilization, which progressed billiantly until 1914, when World War I began.

World War II, far more destructive than its predecessor, accomplished nothing more than destruction, on a larger scale, than World War I.

In retrospect, it appears that World War II was unavoidable because European civilization had run its course. The destiny which decreed that civilizations should have a life span, just like the human beings who comprise it, is doing its work in Europe just as it did in the once prosperous and highly civilized Middle East, Greece, and Rome.

By the same token, world war III appears inevitable to many observers. There is no real reason why it should occur. The impoverished and war-weary nations of Europe would like nothing better than to be allowed to live in peace. But the same elements which ruined other civilizations have appeared again. They are the half-Slav, half-Asiatic masses from the East, the Soviet Union, which holds its 200,000,000 in as tight a grip as Genghis Khan or Tamerlane ever held their warrior hordes.

UNITED STATES ALONE STANDS IN WAY

Europe is powerless in the presence of an immense military force backed by some 360,000,000 people who inhabit the land of the Soviet Union and its satellites and supported by vast natural resources. Its only hope for survival lies in the timely intervention of the United States, which has become so imbued with optimism for peace that it must now make a superhuman effort to put its powerful industrial and human resources to work in order to meet the fateful situation which confronts it.

We regard lightly the fact that from 1940 to date we have spent over $300,000,000,000 of America's substance, principally for World War II. Money may mean little these days, but besides spending money lavishly, we are depleting what used to be described as the inexhaustible natural resources of the United States.

According to most conservative estimates, another war soon would cost at least twice what we paid out in World War II. It not only would impoverish the United States, reducing it to the level of the already bankrupt European countries, but also would have a considerable impact on our social structure.

None of our politicians deny that the most drastic controls of all kinds will have to be imposed if we become involved in another war against one of the most ruthless totalitarian regimes the world has ever seen.

The unbelievably blundering policies of our statesmen during and after World War II, when we unquestionably had the power to dictate conditions for a better and freer world, can be ascribed again only to fate. Otherwise it is impossible to imagine how our Government leaders could avoid seeing where a policy of rank appeasement will lead us and the rest of the world, particularly since they have in their possession all the facts proving the Soviet's bad faith.

But these are things of the past which can no longer be changed. The cold fact of the matter is that we are now confronted with another world war and the Russians have the initiative. It is up to them to decide the time and place where their well-organized hordes will strike. This may occur in the next few months or the next few years. On one thing all our high-ranking officials agree: That sooner or later a war between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the west is inevitable.

The question which the next administration must decide is whether we are going to accept the Soviet challenge in Europe or Asia, or both. The alternative is to write off Europe, letting it go its own way while we concentrate on building our defenses in the Western Hemisphere with the assistance of the young Latin Republics.

Of course, military strategists will say that in this age of the atom bomb, supersonic jet planes, and all the other technical devices which the ordinary citizen does not even suspect, it would be foolish to imagine that in another war distance will be any handicap in committing aggression.

The problem which will confront the next administration, if it faces the issue realistically, will be as follows:

1. The American Government believes that the present European shell can be mended and preserved against Stalin's hordes from the east. It feels that it must not permit the initiative to rest with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It must proceed with a large-scale and rapid rearmament program and must, at the same time, provide the fighting forces of western Europe with the economic and military means to defend their freedom. Military assistance, estimated to cost about $4,000,000,000 in the first year, must be more emphasized than economic support.

2. The American Government is convinced that the peoples of this country cannot be induced to make an effort greater than during the last war until the Russians take the initiative. In such a case we will not have time to prepare, as was the case after Pearl Harbor. Many politicians believe that Russia does not intend to expand, for the time being, farther than the Atlantic. If they are correct, we must concentrate on establishing a strong defense line extending from the Arctic Circle to the southernmost tip of South America.

Within this concentrated defense area we must organize genuine harmony with those republics, which in coming decades will be strengthened by the arrival of immigrants from Europe, men and women who are strong and energetic enough to settle and develop those vast uninhabited areas in South America which lack only population.

Whatever the answer to this complicated problem may be, there is no question that the next administration will have to choose between taking the initiative to lance the Communist abscess which is festering in Europe, or will have to withdraw from present entanglements, taking a chance on the future in the hope that Moscow will find it too dangerous to continue its drive across the Atlantic and Pacific into American territory itself.

There is no question that our hit-and-miss foreign policies pursued since 1942 cannot continue without impairing the whole life of this hemisphere.

New York City Tenants Receive Raw Deal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. VITO MARCANTONIO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting the following letter to Hon. Tighe Woods, Housing Expediter:

Hon. TIGHE WOODS, Esquire,
Office of Housing Expediter,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WOODS: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 5 in reference to premises located at 429 East Eightieth Street, New York City. I am forced to state that I have never read so much double talk in my 12 years in Congress as is contained in your letter.

You do not justify or give any reasons that can be used as justification of the increase from 25 percent to 33⅓ percent above maximum existing rentals in the premises.

I am shocked. There is something rotten here. I have been informed also that blanket orders have been given from Washington to various local offices in this area to give the landlords something. In this case the something amounts to 25 to 33⅓ percent.

I am certain that Congress never granted you this kind of authority to extend this extraordinary gift to any landlord. I ask that you direct a rehearing where I will personally appear, and I shall present concrete evidence which will leave not the slightest doubt that the increase granted is exorbitant and unjustified.

Please advise me without delay as the tenants are suffering undue hardship. Further, this decision is being used by every chiseling real-estate office in this area to exploit tenants. This decision has been the long-awaited surrender on the part of the Housing Expediter which will now allow the landlords to move in for wholesale exploitation of the tenants of the city of New York.

Sincerely yours,

VITO MARCANTONIO.

Accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH H. BALL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the final edition of the RECORD a statement which I have prepared on the accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Although the second regular session of the Eightieth Congress is now ending, the first in 16 years organized by Republicans, it is apparent that its record both in terms of what it did and what it failed to do will be a major subject of controversy in the coming months of a national political campaign. Indeed, the attack on the Congress began long before it had finished its work and made its record.

This is not new or surprising. Congress has always been a favorite scapegoat on the American political scene, particularly for the party out of power. It is easy to see why this is so. No Congress that really deliberated and considered on their merits the issues presented to it could possibly in 2 years pass upon all of the controversial measures proposed to it and strongly supported by various pressure groups, some large and some small. Nor could any Congress that really functioned as a parliamentary body, through consideration, debate and decision, possibly satisfy all of the interested pressure groups with its final decisions on any of these controversial measures which it did consider and pass upon. That is why there are always plenty of vociferous groups eager to blame Congress either for what it did or what it failed to do.

This year, perhaps because the Congress and the White House were controlled by different parties, it appears that the debate over Congress' sins of omission and commission will be even more vigorous and perhaps more vitriolic than usual. Because I believe that in a public debate of that kind, if our democratic system is to survive, it is tremendously important that the debate bear at least some relation to the facts, I have undertaken the task of presenting in summary form just what the Eightieth Congress accomplished and what it did not do.

I shall admit at the outset that I am perhaps a prejudiced witness because I have served in five Congresses, beginning with the Seventy-sixth, and in my experience the Eightieth Congress was the hardest-working Congress and did the least rubber stamping of proposals of any in which I have served. I think it accomplished more than any other recent Congress.

In reviewing the record of the Eightieth Congress, let's start with some of the major measures for which there was considerable support which failed on final enactment. I can only think of six such—the long-range housing legislation known as the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, the $300,000,000 Federal aid to education bill, the so-called Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill for compulsory health insurance, the bills for a complete revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the proposals for price control and rationing, and the various so-called civil rights bill, such as the anti-lynch bill, the anti-poll tax bill, and the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill.

The housing and Federal aid to education bills both passed the Senate and I supported both of them. They both died in the House. They died there in the final analysis because in spite of strong public support for them there is also strong opposition among the people to both of them and so far the balance is fairly close. Eventually both bills will pass because support for them is growing, even though they may be somewhat modified before final enactment.

The general revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act was not considered by either House in this Congress simply because time did not permit. There are literally dozens of very controversial issues in the legislation, and it should be a major job of the next Congress.

The compulsory health insurance bill did not get out of committee in either House and is opposed about as strongly as any major bill pending. In my opinion, it will never be passed, but the Congress will continue to strengthen the public health program by providing for increased research on major diseases, plus much greater emphasis on the prevention of disease, but not socializing medical care except as people may set up voluntary systems similar to the Blue Cross hospitalization plan.

The so-called civil-rights bills are perennials which have appeared in every Congress in which I have served. Not only are they highly controversial, but they run up against the almost fanatical opposition of southern Democrats who make no bones about taking advantage of the rules of the Senate to filibuster them to death. Probably their presentation at every session is serving a valuable educational purpose, but it will take some drastic changes in Senate rules before any of them can be enacted.

President Truman proposed that Congress grant to him the extraordinary power to control prices and ration goods whenever he felt it necessary. The Congress did approve a very mild measure permitting industries to agree, with approval of the Department of Commerce, on a voluntary program for allocating scarce materials. But Congress rejected completely price controls in peacetime on what I believe to be the sound grounds that first it would be totalitarian, and, second, that price controls never have worked in peacetime and will not work.

Of the entire foreign-policy program considered by the Eightieth Congress, and it was a tremendous one, only one minor measure, that providing for a $65,000,000 loan to the United Nations to finance construction of its new headquarters in New York, failed of passage. It passed the Senate but died in the House, where there was strong opposition because only the United States participated in the loan and not other members of the United Nations. Senator VANDENBERG had advised against that type of loan but the administration did not heed his advice. Incidentally, this record on foreign policy is a remarkable display of the overcoming of partisanship in a Presidential election year when the administration was controlled by the Democrats and the Congress by the Republicans.

So much for the measures on which the Eightieth Congress failed to act. Those measures which really have merit and public support will eventually be enacted and despite the pleas of those who want to cure all our ills overnight, I suspect that in the long run we will achieve sounder solutions and better ones for the cause of freedom by accepting the delays and the slowness of action which are inherent in a democratic system. Even though I supported strongly some of these measures which failed of passage, I would be the last to urge that the United States have a Congress reduced to the status of a Reichstag which merely voted "Ja" to every proposal made by the executive.

And when measured against the positive accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress, these measures which failed of enactment shrink to relative unimportance.

In the field of foreign policy, the Eightieth Congress in the 1948 session enacted the European recovery program, which is the most important foreign policy measure to come before Congress since lend-lease. It also extended the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for 1 year, passed the bill to admit to the United States 205,000 displaced persons during the next 2 years, and enacted the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, placing the State Department's information service and Voice of America broadcasts on a statutory basis. The Senate also adopted the Vandenberg resolution urging the elimination of the veto in the United Nations on questions involving the peaceful settlement of disputes and supporting regional security arrangements.

The 1947 regular and special sessions passed nine important foreign policy measures and also ratified the peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary. Among the measures passed were two different foreign-aid relief acts, the Greek-Turkish Aid Act, the International Refugee Act of 1947, and a law approving the trusteeship agreement between the United States and the United Nations covering the former Japanese islands.

Although for a time its final enactment appeared doubtful, the 1948 session finally enacted a long-range farm program in the closing hours of the session. The bill extended the present farm price support at 90 percent of parity through 1949 and provides for support after that on a flexible basis varying from 60 to 90 percent of parity, depending on the available supplies. The long-range bill also reorganizes the soil conservation and marketing programs and places their administration largely under farmer-elected committees in the various States and counties.

Some eight other farm bills were passed in the two sessions, including one extending indefinitely the Commodity Credit Corporation, which handles the price-support program, and another reorganizing the Federal crop-insurance program.

In the field of labor, the major accomplishment of the Eightieth Congress was the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act of 1947, known as the Taft-Hartley Act, which revised thoroughly the Federal labor-relations policy. The 1947 session also passed the Portal to Portal Act to meet the problem posed by unexpected and retroactive liability under the wage-and-hour law. A number of important acts, such as that increasing workmen's compensation benefits for longshoremen and harbor workers were also passed, along with the act granting a pay increase of $450 a year to postal employees and $330 a year to other Federal employees to meet higher costs of living.

Major accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress in the fiscal field included the passage of the 1948 act reducing income taxes an average of about 10 percent and the work on 44 appropriation bills which reduced appropriations in 1947 $3,163,000,000 under the budget estimates and in 1948, $2,741,000,000 under the budget estimates. In both instances the reductions were made without any cuts of importance in either the foreign-aid programs or the national defense program.

In the field of national defense the Eightieth Congress in the first session enacted the armed forces unification law and in the second session strengthened the national defense by providing a 70-group air force and enacted selective service in order to bring our forces up to the minimum strength essential to keep war away from this continent. Scores of other bills dealing with national defense were passed, including such measures as that providing for a promotion-on-merit system in the Army in 1947 and the uniform procurement bill passed in 1948.

At least a score of bills affecting veterans, including those increasing GI subsistence allowances and increasing benefits to disabled veterans and providing for payment of terminal leave in cash instead of bonds were passed by the Eightieth Congress.

There were scores of other measures, some of them controversial and all of considerable importance to our domestic economy, which were enacted and which are set forth in the complete tabulation below.

This brief summary, however, is enough to indicate why it was necessary for both the 1947 and the 1948 sessions of the Eightieth Congress to meet longer hours and hold more evening and sometimes all-night sessions than any other Congress in recent history. A tremendous volume of work was accomplished.

Looking forward for just a moment to the Eighty-first Congress, it would appear as of today that its major tasks will be a review of the Taft-Hartley Act, overhauling of the wage-and-hour law, a general tax-reform law, broadening the coverage of social security, the Federal aid to education and long-range housing bills, a reexamination of the European recovery program after a year's experience and finally putting into effect the reorganization of the executive branch which the Hoover Commission, established in 1947, has been developing and will recommend to the new Congress. That is a formidable agenda for any Congress and the Eighty-first will do well to act on all those measures in 2 years.

Following is a partial list of the various bills passed by the first and second sessions of the Eightieth Congress, broken down by subjects:

AGRICULTURE

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 130: Commodity Credit Corporation Extension Act of 1947. Extends the Corporation as an agency of the United States until June 30, 1948.

Public Law 320: Federal Crop Insurance Act of 1947. Places crop insurance on a county basis and extends such insurance only to counties in which income from insured crops is of primary importance.

Public Law 40: Foreign Farm Labor Supply Act of 1947. Provides for continuation of program through December 31, 1947, and for liquidation thereafter.

Public Law 8: Authorizes cooperation between United States and Mexico in stamping out foot-and-mouth disease or rinderpest in Mexican cattle so as to prevent the disease from spreading to United States cattle.

Public Law 305: Secretary of Agriculture shall maintain quality and maturity standards above or below parity and continue operations in the public interest. Called Marketing Agreements Act of 1947.

Public Law 243: Authorizes the Bureau of Census to collect and publish monthly statistics on the quantities and kinds of oil and fat products processors have on hand or in transit to consuming establishments.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

H. R. 6258: Continues price support for cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts, providing producers have not disapproved marketing quotas suggested by Secretary of Agriculture, at 90 percent of parity through 1949. On January 1, 1949, the long-range farm program, largely as passed by the Senate in the Aiken bill, becomes effective. It provides for support of prices of basic farm crops at from 60 to 90 percent of parity, the percentage varying in inverse ratio to the supply in sight. The act also provides for a considerable reorganization of the soil conservation and marketing services of the Department, and places local administration under farmer-elected county and State committees.

S. 1322: The Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act. Establishes the Corporation as a permanent agency for the purpose of stabilizing, supporting, and protecting farm income and prices. It is authorized to increase the domestic consumption by expanding or aiding the expansion of domestic markets and increasing the uses for such commodities. Finally it is authorized to procure commodities for the carrying out of our foreign relief commitments.

S. 2767: To facilitate the recruitment and distribution of farm labor in order to meet domestic and foreign agricultural commitments, a revolving fund is set up of $1,000,000 to pay the transportation, lodging, and subsistence costs of such farm labor recruited in the Western Hemisphere and Puerto Rico. Employers shall reimburse the fund upon conditions and terms prescribed by the Secretary of Labor.

APPROPRIATIONS

FIRST SESSION (1947)

The first session of the Eightieth Congress passed 22 appropriation bills. By careful study and many weeks of investigation Congress was able to cut the budget estimates sent up by the President for these bills a total of more than $3,163,000,000. The table below shows the President's estimates for the various departments and programs, the totals of the bills finally enacted into law, and the difference between the two:

Public law	Regular appropriations	Budget estimate	Law	Actual increaes or decrease
	Part I. Regular appropriations:
266	Agriculture	$802,360,608	$613,046,826	−$189,313,782

SECOND SESSION (1948)

The second session of the Eightieth Congress enacted 21 major appropriation bills totaling more than thirty-two and a half billion dollars. Again, Congress succeeded in reducing the budget estimates submitted by the President a total of slightly more than $2,741,000,000. The table below shows the budget estimates for the various departments and activities, the amounts finally appropriated and the difference between the two:

Bill No.	Title	Budget estimates	Public law	Reduction from budget estimate

FOREIGN POLICY

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 84: Devastated Countries Assistance Act of 1947. Authorizes $350,000,000 to send essential supplies to war-devastated countries. Earmarks substantial portion to care and feeding of children.

Public Law 75: Greco-Turkish Aid Act of 1947. Authorizes a $400,000,000 loan to Greece and Turkey, providing therein for cooperation with the United Nations.

Public Law 146: International Refugee Organization Act of 1947. Authorizes membership of the United States in that organization to aid in the resettlement of displaced persons. Reserves congressional consent to the resettlement of any persons in the United States or its Territories and possessions.

Public Law 369: Reestablishes the Institute of American Affairs and the Inter-American Educational Foundation as a single Government corporation in order to further strengthen the community of American nations.

Public Law 204: Congress approved the agreement between the United States and the United Nations for trusteeship of islands formerly held by Japan under mandate of the League of Nations.

Public Law 362: Puerto Rico Organic Act of 1947. Expands the power of self-government of the people of Puerto Rico to elect their own governor and he in turn is authorized to appoint the heads of the executive departments with the exception of the auditor and members of the supreme court, who will still be appointed by the United States.

Public Law 7: United Nations Site Act of 1947. Contributions to the United Nations site in New York City are deductible from income, estate, and gift taxes.

Treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary negotiated and signed at Paris on February 10, 1947, were ratified by Congress.

Public Law 389: Enacted during the special session of Congress called by the President. The Foreign Aid Act of 1947 authorizes $597,000,000 for aid to Austria, China, France, and Italy.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

Public Law 402: The United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 creates an information service to disseminate abroad information about the United States, its people, and policies. Act gives legal status to the Voice of America broadcasts. Creates an educational exchange service to cooperate with other countries in the interchange of persons, knowledge, and skills, etc.

Public Law 472: The Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 provides for economic aid from the United States to participating countries in the Marshall plan until June 30, 1952, unless terminated at an earlier date by congressional concurrent resolution. Authorizes expenditures for 1 year of $5,300,000,000 and necessary sums thereafter for relief and recovery purposes. Authorizes contribution not to exceed 72 percent of the total resources contributed to the International Children's Emergency Fund. Increases the subsistence under the Greek-Turkey Aid Act and finally authorizes aid to China.

S. 2242: Admits 205,000 European refugees to the United States in the next 2 years for permanent residence.

H. R. 6556: Extends the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for 1 year with some changes.

Senate Resolution 239: The Vandenberg resolution. Advises the President to work out agreements with other nations to strengthen the United Nations and expresses a willingness to remove the veto power in assembly proceedings.

H. R. 6801: Appropriates more than $6,000,000,000 to finance the foreign-aid program.

PUBLIC WELFARE AND LABOR

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 282: Enacts into positive law title 9 of the United States Code concerning the settlement of maritime disputes by arbitration.

Public Law 317: Authorizes up to $5,000,000 for aid to school districts overburdened by war-swollen populations.

Public Law 101: The Labor Management Relations Act of 1947. Popularly known as the Taft-Hartley Act. The act recognizes the equities in labor-management relations by providing for the protection of individual employees in their relations with labor organizations, for protection in collective bargaining, for enforcement of labor contracts, for minimizing strikes and labor disputes, and by insuring fair-labor practices on the part of both employers and employees.

Public Law 49: Portal to Portal Pay Limitation Act of 1947. Bans suits by employees against employers for time or overtime used in arriving at the actual place of performance of their principal work or payment for activities which are preliminary or postliminary to their principal work.

Public Law 298: Farm Labor Supply Camps Act of 1947. Aids localities to continue farm labor supply camps by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of such camps to purchasers who will continue them for that purpose.

Public Law 265: Postal Employees Pay Act of 1947. Gives supervisory employees in postal service compensatory time for work in excess of 8 hours per day.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

Public Law 426: Liberalizes the Civil Service Retirement Act. Sets out a new formula for the computation of annuities.

Public Law 642: Maintains the status quo in regard to certain employment taxes and social-security benefits until the coverage problem can be completely gone into.

H. R. 6916: Increases the pay for postal workers by $450 a year and for Federal workers in the amount of $330 a year.

S. 2237: Liberalizes the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act by increasing the benefits allowable for disability. Also increases the benefits allowable for death and funeral expenses plus increasing the benefits for widows and children.

NATIONAL SECURITY

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 253: National Security Act of 1947. Provides for the unification of the armed forces. A single Cabinet member, the Secretary of National Defense, heads the three departments of Army, Navy, and Air Force. Establishes a Central Intelligence Agency and provides for integration and coordination of the armed forces with all other departments of the Government.

Public Law 36. Army-Navy Nurses Act of 1947. Sets up a permanent Nurses' Corps in the Army and Navy with a total authorized strength of 6 to every 1,000 of the personnel of the Army and the Navy.

Public Law 96. Cadet and Midshipmen Pay Increase Act. Raises their pay from $780 to $936 a year.

Public Law 219: Coast Guard Personnel Act of 1947. Sets up a permanent commissioned personnel strength in the same percentages as that of the Navy.

Public Law 42: Suspends the import duty on copper for industrial and defense uses remaining in short supply until March 31, 1949.

Public Law 125: Provides for the study and investigation into the advisability of maintaining a permanent domestic tin-smelting industry and to investigate the availability of supply. Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall finance research in tin smelting and buy and transport tin for the Nation's armed forces and industry.

Public Law 319: Naval Vessels Conversion Act of 1947. Removes existing restrictions on the amount that can be expended per ship so that up-to-date equipment can be installed.

Public Law 381: Officer Personnel Act of 1947. Establishes a broad and comprehensive promotion system for the armed services in harmony with the needs and structure of the modern Army and Navy.

Public Law 24: Authorizes a study of the best methods of creating and maintaining an adequate supply of natural and synthetic rubber. Stock piling and rotation of rubber reserves together with certain controls authorized until more permanent legislation is effected.

Public Law 63: Submarine Experimental Construction Act of 1947. Authorizes up to $30,000,000 for submarine experimental construction.

Public Law 128: Voluntary Enlistment Act of 1947. Lowers the enlistment age to 17 with parental consent necessary. Makes enlistment conditions more attractive.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

Public Law 413: Armed Services Procurement Act of 1947. Enacts uniform provisions covering purchasing procedure for the armed forces, including the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Declares it the policy of Congress that a fair proportion of business done will be with small business. Forbids cost-plus-a-percentage contracts.

Public Law 460: Consolidates into the Organized Reserve Corps the units of the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and the Organized Reserves. Provides for inactive-duty pay for the Organized Reserves and the National Guard.

Public Law 469: Rubber Act of 1948. Provides for the maintenance of an adequate domestic rubber-producing industry. Exercises inventory control over natural and synthetic rubber. Requires at all times the maintenance of facilities, both Government and private, with a certain rated capacity.

Public Law 547: Authorizes the appropriation necessary for a 70-group air force.

H. R. 6402: Extends the terms of the Atomic Energy Commissioners for 2 years.

Selective Service Act: Provides for the drafting of 19-to-25-year-olds for a period of 21 months' service.

Public Law 549: Increases the membership of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics from 15 to 17. Purpose of the Committee is to supervise and direct the scientific study of the problems of flight toward formulating national policies in that regard.

Public Law 557: Establishes the Civil Air Patrol as a civilian auxiliary of the United States Air Forces and authorizes the Secretary of the Air Force to aid the patrol by releasing surplus buildings and equipment to them and by aiding in the training thereof.

SOLDIERS AND VETERANS

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 236: Provides additional death benefits to beneficiaries of aviation officers.

Public Law 151: Authorizes transportation of dependents and household effects of Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard to unrestricted domestic posts and overseas bases.

Public Law 338: Disabled veterans taking vocational rehabilitation courses with 30 percent service connected disability or more, receive compensation at the following rates: $115 single, $135 with one dependent, $20 for one child, $15 for each additional child, and $15 for dependent parent. All above rates per month.

Public Law 153: Federal Employees Military Leave Act of 1947. Government personnel while on military leave stand in the same status as private employees with respect to pay and employment protection.

Public Law 34: Government Life Insurance Renewal Act of 1947. Provides renewal of 5 year level premium term insurance up to 5 renewals without a medical examination.

Public Law 5: Government Life Insurance Reinstatement Act of 1947. Permits service personnel to apply for permanent or term insurance upon enlistment. Liberalizes restrictions. Insurance held by totally disabled veterans who fail to apply for conversion are automatically converted to ordinary life plan.

Public Law 82: Homestead Entries Act of 1947. Allows up to 2 years' service credit on homesteads. If both husband and wife were in the service, they can count their service jointly.

Public Law 377: Institutional on Farm Training Act of 1947. Veterans may take agricultural courses while working on their own farms and receive subsistence allowances. At least 8 hours attendance per month plus supervised work experience on the farm is required.

Public Law 270: Veterans of the Spanish-American War and the Civil War receive a 20-percent increase in pension.

Public Law 310: Interned service personnel and civilians interned by the Japanese are given a tax-exempt status for that period.

Public Law 254: Terminal Leave Bond Payment Act of 1947. Veterans can cash terminal leave bonds at any time after September 1, 1947.

Public Law 350: Terminal Cash Payment Act of 1947. In lieu of terminal leave cash payments will be made on base pay, plus longevity, and that reenlisted personnel may take a cash payment for accrued leave or transfer accrued leave to the new enlistment.

Public Law 115: To encourage veterans taking rehabilitation courses, a revolving fund of $3,000,000 is set up to extend temporary loans to veterans who might not otherwise be able to enter upon such courses.

Public Law 85: Veterans' Housing Act of 1947. Authorizes an additional $35,500,000 for housing construction for distressed families of servicemen and veterans.

Public Law 366: Mortgage Insurance Act of 1947. Increases private home building mortgage insurance by $200,000,000. In addition $750,000,000 in insurance is made available to veterans to purchase permanent housing.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

Public Law 396: Extends veterans' preference in Government service to mothers of exservicemen who lost their lives in any war or died from wounds resulting from such service. Grants 10 points preference on civil-service examinations and special privileges in regard to noncompetitive examinations.

Public Law 411: Increases the subsistence allowance of trainees under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act as follows: $75 if without dependents, $105 if one dependent, $120 if with more than one dependent. Above are monthly rates.

Public Law 421: Authorizes loans or gifts of condemned or obsolete material to veterans' organizations.

Public Law 458: Ratifies administrative promotions of employees on military furlough from the postal field service if the promotion was made between September 15, 1940, and Janary 1, 1948, to a position not then in an automatic grade and was unauthorized only because the employee was absent on military furlough.

Public Law 512: Increases the GI subsistence allowances and ceilings for full- and part-time institutional and on-the-farm trainees, as follows: Single person with no dependents, $75; with one dependent, $105; and with more than one dependent, $120. Part-time trainees receive an increase in proportion to the above. The ceilings for on-the-job training are increased as follows: Single with no dependents, $210; with one dependent, $270; and with more than one dependent, $290.

S. 2790: Authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to establish a secondary market for GI home-loan mortgages.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

FIRST SESSION (1947)

Public Law 289: Surplus Airport Act of 1947. Permits transfer of surplus airports and airport facilities without cost to any State, municipality, or tax-supported institution when used for the benefit of the public without discrimination.

Public Law 102: Emergency Flood Control Act of 1947. Appropriates $15,000,000 for immediate spending on emergency repair, restoration, and strengthening of levees and other flood control works threatened or destroyed.

Public Law 110: Forest Pest Control Act of 1947. Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to directly or in cooperation with the States, Territories, individuals, or organizations, to conduct surveys on all forest lands, appraise infestations and determine measures to remedy such infestations.

Public Law 89: Export Import Bank Act of 1947. Bank reincorporated as agency of Government, given broader powers, and extended through June 30, 1953.

Public Law 363: Authorizes the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to retire its capital stock by payment to the Treasury retaining a capital surplus of $1,000,000,000 and the borrowing power of the Corporation is increased to $3,000,000,000 to provide adequately for continuation of bank-deposit insurance.

Public Law 41: Federal Reserve banks are authorized to purchase and sell Government securities from the Treasury to permit the Treasury to obtain funds quickly to meet temporary situations or contingencies.

Public Law 132: Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act of 1947. RFC extended for 1 year with many changes in organization and powers and with a lending authority of $2,000,000,000.

Public Law 29: First Decontrol Act. Congress discontinues after March 31, 1947, broad powers of the President under the Second War Powers Act to control motor and water carriers, requisition property, assign priorities, and waive navigation and inspection laws. Portions of the act continued until June 30, 1947.

Public Law 188: Second Decontrol Act of 1947. A reduced list of materials in short supply in United States continued under control to promote home production and assist export of products required in foreign countries for production there.

Public Law 30: Sugar Control Act of 1947. Sugar control continued under moderate control until October 31, 1947. Inventory control continued until March 31, 1948. The Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to get rid of all controls when the situation was no longer critical.

Public Law 388: Sugar Act of 1947. Stabilizes the sugar situation by placing producers on a tonnage basis rather than a percentage basis. United States market is divided among the several domestic sugar-producing areas.

Public Law 162: Sets up a commission to study organization and operation of Government bureaus, and report its recommendations to Congress.

Public Law 311: Broadens existing powers by authorizing Federal home loan banks to accept mortgages having a 25-year maturity as mortgage collateral.

Public Law 129: Housing and Rent Act of 1947. Takes off controls on construction except recreational building. Extends rent control until March 1, 1948. Negotiated rent increases up to 15 percent allowed after March 1, 1948, for leases running to December of 1948.

Public Law 301: Low-cost housing and slum clearance released from prior laws which restricted building costs to low prewar levels.

Public Law 199: Presidential Succession Act of 1947. In case of the death or disqualification from office of the President or Vice President the Speaker of the House shall succeed, and if he cannot qualify, next in line shall be (1) the President pro tempore of the Senate; (2) the Cabinet, starting with the Secretary of State.

Twenty-second amendment to the Constitution: Limits the Presidential term in office to two terms, and in the case of a Vice President succeeding to office with more than 2 years to run, his tenure in office is limited to one additional elective term.

Public Law 17: Excise taxes continued by Congress on certain luxuries, including jewelry, furs, toilet preparations, and distilled spirits.

Public Law 100: Changes existing 1-year limitation on use of highway funds to 2 years to provide time to States and local areas for further building and repair of urgently needed roads.

Public Law 168: Federal Bureau of Investigation Retirement Act of 1947. Provides liberal retirement privileges for members of the FBI who have reached the age of 50 with 20 years of service.

Public Law 263: Employees separated from Government service with less than 10 years' service can withdraw the full amount previously deducted from their salaries for retirement purposes with interest at 4 percent.

Public Law 284: Government Utilities Supply Act of 1947. Congress authorizes Army and Navy Departments to sell power, steam, compressed air, water, sewage and garbage-disposal service, ice and mechanical refrigeration to welfare activities and private parties in immediate vicinity of military establishments where such utilities are not otherwise available.

Public Law 131: Authorizes States to disregard agricultural labor and nursing service as income earned in making old-age assistance payments until July 1, 1949.

Public Law 35: Postal Service Substitute Personnel Act of 1947. Upon appointment to a permanent status employees receive credit on a calendar basis rather than upon the number of hours of prior service. Promotion also is on a calendar basis.

Public Law 379: Social Security Act amendment of 1947. Increases amount employees and employers pay on social-security taxes to 1 percent through 1949, 1½ percent in 1950, and 2 percent in 1952. Federal grants to needy and blind continued until 1950.

Public Law 395: Enacted during the special session called by the President. Provides for voluntary industry-wide agreements effective until not later than March 1, 1949. Government officers and agencies may request in writing compliance by one or more persons to a plan of voluntary action with respect to any commodity. Continues until February 28, 1949, the controls over exports and rail transportation. Those over grain and production of distilled or neutral spirits are continued until January 31, 1949.

Public Law 394: Enacted during the special session called by the President. Increases the maximum amount of mortgages which may be insured under title 6 of the National Housing Act by $750,000,000.

SECOND SESSION (1948)

Public Law 548: Amends the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Revamps the Corporation by reducing capital stock from $350,000,000 to $100,000,000. Lists as one of its objectives the making of loans to small business. Reorganizes the Corporation's capital structure.

Public Law 606: Continues for a temporary period certain powers, authority, and discretions conferred on the President by the Second Decontrol Act of 1947.

S. 110: Popularly referred to as the Bulwinkle bill. Amends the Interstate Commerce Act so as to allow certain contracts and agreements between carriers which would otherwise be in violation of antitrust laws. Purpose of the act is to better utilize our rail transportation system as a whole.

Public Law 464: Housing and Rent Act of 1948. Extends until April 1, 1949, rent control and also continues until that date provisions for veterans' preference in new housing. Repeals limitation on recreational construction. Provides for termination of controls on maximum rents in areas and on housing accommodations where conditions justifying such controls no longer exist. Extends from April 1, 1948, until April 1, 1949, the provisions protecting tenants in publicly operated housing from eviction on grounds of income limitations.

Public Law 468: Amends the mortgage insurance provisions of the National Housing Act by increasing to $5,350,000,000 the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages which may be insured thereunder, and extending the provisions until April 30, 1948.

Public Law 471: Revenue Act of 1948. Reduces individual income taxes in percentages ranging from 12.6 percent in low-income brackets to 5 percent in the upper brackets. Allows married couples to divide their combined income in making out returns. Reduces the maximum aggregate tax on net income from 85½ percent to 77 percent.

Public Law 530: Seniority Act of Rural Mail Carriers. Prescribes the methods of advancement for rural carriers.

Truce in the Holy Land

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, an uneasy truce lies over Palestine—a truce which lies like a cloud of steam over an active volcano. Under leave I am including some recent comment on events which affect the Holy Land.

First is an editorial from the June 19 issue of the Nation:

The touch-and-go truce in Palestine offers no hope of ushering in a permanent peace unless certain basic facts are accepted. The sooner they are acknowledged on all sides, the better the chances of success. First and above all is the simple fact of Israel's existence as a sovereign power. Whatever negotiations are conducted at Rhodes by Count Folke Bernadotte must rest on an irreversible act of history, explicit in the United Nations resolution of November 29 and now formally recognized by 11 nations. Obviously, the Israeli will not surrender at the peace table what was granted them at Lake Success and what six Arab nations have not been able to make them surrender on the battlefield. Second, the British, in open partnership with the Arab states, cannot reasonably be thought to qualify as observers or as conductors of any mediation procedure. Their pressure on the mediator for an invitation to provide ships and planes to enforce an arms blockade was as gratuitous as it was inflammatory. It is known that the British idea of a settlement includes an Arab Palestine, ruled by Abdullah, which would be enlarged by the inclusion of the Negev and the port of Haifa—both assigned to Israel under the partition plan and essential to that state's viability—as well as Jerusalem, intended by the UN to be an international city. Through Abdullah, the British would retain control of all three areas. Finally, under the terms of the truce resolution the British should be blocked in their present scheme to deny oil to Israel by closing down the Haifa refinery while furnishing Transjordan with oil from a small plant in Kirkuk. The purpose of the truce, after all, was to provide an opportunity for a peaceful settlement, not to weaken Israel to the point where it could neither insist upon nor fight for the boundaries mapped for it by the United Nations.

INDICTMENT BY LAWYERS' GROUP

Even more devastating is an indictment prepared by the Lawyers' Committee for Justice in Palestine, of 11 West Forty-second Street, New York.

This is a nonpartisan, nonsectarian group. The members, it may be presumed, have taken a position; but beyond that they direct themselves to the legal aspects of the Palestine questions. In language devoid of emotional coloring they sum up the situation in words which condemn the betrayal of democracy by the western democracies more overwhelmingly than more robust words could do.

The indictment of the great powers of the west is contained in a letter sent simultaneously to President Truman, Secretary Marshall, Ambassador Austin, Senator Vandenberg, and Congressmen Martin and Eaton, the text of which follows:

JUNE 10, 1948.

MY DEAR SIR: The resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 29, 1947, for partition with economic union for Palestine was supported by the United States because it provided the most equitable solution for Palestine in view of the sharp tension between the Jewish people and the Arab peoples living there, created in no small measure by Britain as mandatory.

The resolution is still valid. It is still the only practicable compromise solution bringing a measure of justice to all the inhabitants of Palestine. Its fulfillment insofar as the Jewish people are concerned was advanced by the establishment on May 15, 1948, of the Jewish state provided for therein. The Arab state, giving Palestinian Arabs equal independence, as well as the international regime for Jerusalem, are yet to be established. They await the withdrawal from Palestine of foreign Arab armies invading the country to divide it amongst themselves.

The actions of Arab states have violated the resolution and the United Nations Charter itself.

Our Government must shoulder much of the responsibility for the present state of events in Palestine because of its failure in the period between February 18, 1948, and May 15, 1948, to take the necessary steps to implement the resolution, and especially because of our imposition of an arms embargo on December 7, 1947.

Britain also, by its obstructionist tactics toward and refusal to cooperate with the United Nations Commission, by arming and training Arab troops, by violating its pledges to withdraw the Arab Legion by May 15, 1948, and by opposing the cease-fire proposal of May 24, 1948, stands condemned as the chief instigator of the breach of peace that has occurred in Palestine. Britain's efforts to justify the invasion by Transjordan are particularly shocking. When United States Delegate Herschel Johnson, in August 1947, in connection with Greece, defined a threat to the the peace as "giving support to armed bands and going into the territory of another state." (UN Weekly Bulletin, August 5, 1947.) Britain gave full approval and support to the definition. Yet Bevin, when asked if he considered Transjordan's participation in the Palestine fighting an act of aggression, cynically replied "Certainly not. She has been invited to go into the territory by her fellow Arabs." (New York Post, June 2, 1948.)

Even Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, found it necessary to warn Bevin that Britain's policy toward Palestine "might destroy the United Nations," and that in his opinion, "Britain could do much to end the war in the Holy Land."

The state of Israel, recognized now by 10 nations, is a fact. Its continued existence as a sovereign and independent nation must not be interfered with or infringed upon.

Support for Israel strengthens the United Nations and restores the hope of the world that it will continue to be a world force for peace and justice, whose decisions cannot be set aside by aggression.

Arab rejection of the cease-fire order of May 24, 1948, brought further appeasement of aggression in the form of Britain's truce proposal of May 29, 1948, instead of punitive action by the Security Council. This truce proposal was but one further step by Britain in its support of Arab aggression against Israel and Arab violation of the United Nations Charter. Small wonder then, as reported in the New York Times, that the Arab states were delighted by the proposal (May 29, 1948).

We set forth without comment the following from the New York Times: "Complete silence on Israel's acceptance of the truce proposal was maintained by the United States delegation whose lack of expressed opposition to the British cease fire resolution was one of the key factors in the approval of it by the Security Council last Saturday" (June 2, 1948).

The British truce proposal, although adopted by the Council in a modified form on May 29, 1947 and accepted by Israel on June 1, 1948, must be condemned. It treats equally Arab aggressors and Israeli defenders. It permits Arab aggressors to maintain military positions achieved as a direct result of their aggression, yet it limits Israel in its efforts to secure the arms needed to repel these aggressive acts. The truce freezes the initial advantage in military equipment enjoyed by the Arabs, created in great part by our own arms embargo and the constant flow of arms to the Arabs from Britain.

In the very act of acceptance of the truce proposal, the Arab states committed a further threat to the peace by coupling their acceptance with a specific refusal to respect the independence and integrity of Israel. For they openly declared that at the end of the truce period aggression will commence again and that the peace will be ended unless Israel's independence is terminated. "We will never under any circumstances accept a Jewish state," declared Abdullah on June 2, 1948. The King of Egypt made a similar statement, while Jemal El Susseini, cousin of the Mufti and vice-chairman of the Arab Higher Committee stated bluntly at Lake Success that the truce would "only delay matters 1 month" unless Israel agreed to dissolve. "We will fight the existence of the Jewish state and we will not waver in this fight", he declared. (New York Post, June 2, 1948.)

The Security Council must, therefore, take immediate steps to determine the specific non-military sanctions under the Charter it will invoke against the Arabs if they break the truce or resort to warlike measures again at the expiration of the truce. The Council must call upon all member nations to adhere to these measures. The Council will thus be ready to act at once. Failure to do this now opens the door to more delay and more encouragement to aggressors. These nonmilitary sanctions provided for in article 41 of the Charter, include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of railroad, sea, air, coastal, telegraphic, radio or other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

That Transjordan is not a member of the United Nations organization does not free it from the consequences of its acts, nor exempt it from Security Council action. Article 2, paragraph 6 of the Charter provides that "the organization shall ensure that States which are not member States of the United Nations act in accordance with these principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of the peace and security." Ambassador Austin took the same position in June 1947, in connection with the Balkan reports: "The Council must treat alike all states using force against the territorial integrity of another—whether they are members of the United Nations or not."

We must be alert that the truce is not used in an attempt again to weaken or abandon the partition resolution, or to substitute for it any trusteeship, federalization or cantonization proposal that would destroy the existence of Israel as an independent state.

The record of the United States on Palestine is good in words, but not in deeds:

Arms are still being withheld from Israel.

No effective measures are being taken to prevent passengers from being taken off and cargoes from being confiscated from American ships.

It is time for us to act as well as to speak in support of the United Nations and Israel. Therefore, we call upon our President, our State Department, our Congress, and our delegation to the United Nations immediately to do the following:

(a) Accord de jure recognition of Israel, enter into diplomatic relations with it, and extend economic assistance to it.

(b) Take appropriate action against Lebanon and Egypt in respect to their acts against American ships, cargoes, and passengers in violation of international law.

(c) Discipline those officials of the executive departments of the United States Government who have endeavored to frustrate the United Nations Resolution of November 29, 1947.

(d) That Congress immediately investigate the extent to which American funds have facilitated British action in arming and financing Arab aggressors, and take measures to prevent any further economic aid from the United States to Britain from being so used.

(e) That our delegation to the United Nations move in the Security Council the immediate adoption of nonmilitary sanctions, to be applied at once in the event of further aggression against Israel.

Very truly yours,

LAWYERS COMMITTEE FOR JUSTICE IN PALESTINE,
BARTLEY CRUM,
National Chairman.
PAUL O'DWYER,
New York City Chairman.

The following general statement prepared by Mr. Alexander E. Racolin, the acting executive secretary, explains the position of the Lawyers' Committee for Justice in Palestine more fully:

The Lawyers Committee, although initiated by the National Lawyers Guild, is today an independent organization. The committee's purpose is to afford the bar with an opportunity to acquaint the American people with the activities of our Government in relation to Palestine and to express the bar's position on the issues involved, with special emphasis on the legal aspects of these problems.

The committee has and will continue to issue releases to the newspapers, conduct public meetings, to do research and prepare briefs on legal problems, to send delegations, and to take all steps likely to achieve justice for the inhabitants of Palestine. It has been our practice to discuss problems and methods of work with Dr. Benjamin Akzin, of the American Zionist Emergency Council, although we are in no way affiliated with the council.

We hope to coordinate the legal work being done by the various existing organizations concerning themselves with Palestine by inviting them to have their attorneys join us, either as individuals or as representatives of their organizations.

A memorandum has been prepared by the committee and submitted to Ambassador Austin bearing the signatures of almost 4,000 lawyers and was presented to him by a delegation of approximately 400 lawyers. It urged our Government to adhere to the partition resolution of the General Assembly on Palestine and to implement it. More recently we have urged our Government to lift the arms embargo, to withhold ERP aid to Britain so long as Britain continues its anti-Israel policy, and to take vigorous steps to prevent interference by Lebanon and Egypt with American ships, cargoes, and passengers, and to secure the release of all passengers detained by Lebanon and all cargo seized by Egypt. On June 4, 1948, the committee urged our delegation to the Security Council to support the Soviet resolution that a breach of the peace exists and that the Council issue a cease-fire order rather than the British truce proposal, and that nonmilitary sanctions be imposed in the event the Arab states failed to abide by the order.

Bartley Crum is the national chairman of the committee and Paul O'Dwyer the New York City chairman. It is the desire of the committee that other cities set up local committees in order that the purposes for which we were created may be more effectively achieved.

Please let me hear from you about the possibility of the creation of a committee in your city and as to any suggestions or comments you care to make. May I urge you to proceed to set up such a committee in your city as soon as possible.

BOYCOTT ADVOCATED

Just as demands which I voiced in Congress that Great Britain be punished through economic sanctions in the appropriation bill for European rehabilitation were effective in modifying the British oppression, so now the idea of a boycott against British goods is gaining wide discussion.

Here are just two paragraphs from a recent column by Dr. Frank Kingdon, the widely known liberal leader:

BOYCOTT

The British-dominated Iraq Petroleum Co. is prepared to cut Israel off from the precious fuel it needs for industry. Such a major economic boycott of the new state is plainly another cynical move dictated by savage British policy. Our Government should bring its full influence to bear on Britain to prevent consummation of such a scandalous procedure. Meanwhile, every liberty-loving American should retaliate by refusing to purchase British goods. A boycott of Britain is due to demonstrate where the American people stand.

APPLAUSE

Bevin does not represent the British people in his animosity to Israel. Throughout Britain audiences applaud newsreel pictures of the Haganah in action. Plain people know heroes when they see them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARENCE F. LEA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I became well acquainted with J. Frederick Richardson while serving as a member of the Lampert investigating committee on aviation about 23 years ago. In contact with him, I became well acquainted with his live, intelligent interest in public affairs and his wholesome attitude as to the problems of government.

His services and interest in public questions since that time have been helpful to the public and to hundreds of Members of Congress. With it all, he had a kindly disposition and appreciation of his friends that add much to the memory of him.

Address of George L. Radcliffe at Democratic State Convention of Maryland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD A. GARMATZ
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD the following speech made by George L. Radcliffe, former United States Senator from Maryland, at the Democratic State Convention of Maryland:

As chairman of the Democratic State Convention of Maryland, I gladly welcome you as fellow delegates on this historic occasion. Overwhelming evidence shows conclusively that the Democratic Party is entering this year a Presidential and congressional campaign after again having demonstrated in a successful and epoch-making manner its ability to give efficient government.

Since the election in 1948 is a national and not a State or local one, special stress this year will naturally be on national and international issues.

In Congress, Maryland has had an able representation headed by the resourceful, skillful, energetic, and competent Senator TYDINGS. It is likely that this convention will endorse Senator TYDINGS for honors even higher than what he now enjoys.

When Hon. William Preston Lane, Jr., took office, as Governor of Maryland, he faced an exceedingly difficult and harassing situation. This he met with courage, industry, ability, and good judgment. Already he has solved many very urgent problems of the State and is successfully engaged in working out a far-reaching program for the betterment of Maryland. He is living fully up to his promises to the people.

The youthful mayor of Baltimore city, Mr. D'Alesandro is keeping fully his campaign pledges. He is meeting his municipal responsibilities with buoyancy of spirit, energy, ability, and sound vision. He has already accomplished a very large part of his program for the improvement of Baltimore and will continue to render excellent service as mayor of Baltimore.

Throughout the State of Maryland the Democratic Party, which is generally in political control, continues to give an excellent and satisfying demonstration of good government.

The last 16 years have been as hazardous and as momentous as any in the history of our United States. The beginning of that period found this country and the world in a state of distress, economic upheaval, and danger so acute as to threaten the entire fabric of society. Our economic, financial, and social structure faced a collapse. The extreme gravity of the situation called for immediate action. It demanded far-reaching remedies.

No one questions that ruin was enveloping our country in 1933, when the Democratic Party was called by overwhelming vote of our citizens to take charge of our Federal Government. Immediate and constructive action in many directions was necessary, and we got it. Much legislation was passed along many lines, some of which was admittedly experimental and temporary in nature, but imperative demands of the depression required action at once.

Let me illustrate: The most of the credit facilities in our country had been destroyed or suspended. The Republican Party while in power had failed miserably to prevent, or to remedy that collapse. Business enterprises, big and little, would have been strangled but for the Federal assistance, wisely and quickly given.

One of the agencies utilized for that purpose was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which, under the beneficial guidance of President Roosevelt and Jesse Jones made loans to banks, insurance companies, transportation companies, and many other business concerns. Without these loans—many to Maryland companies—nearly all of these companies would have been out of existence. Yet so wisely and prudently were the loans made that the vast majority of them have already been repaid in full. No one has ever suggested how a country-wide collapse in business could have been avoided, if the RFC had not given the necessary support in those numerous cases where no adequate assistance from other public, or from private sources was possible.

Much more had to be done. For instance, over a million owners of homes were facing the loss of these homes from eviction because they could not meet payments on loans or secure credit elsewhere. Customary sources of credit for securing or preserving ownership of homes had ceased almost entirely to function.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation was formed as an agency of the Federal Government to grapple with this situation. It took over more than 1,000,000 mortgages on homes having mortgages, either in foreclosure or facing it. Had the HOLC not assumed these mortgages, millions of persons would have been dispossessed from their homes. Such disaster would have added so gravely to the misery and the general disruption of society, that it is quite possible that our national economic structure already dangerously strained, and staggering under tremendous burdens could not have endured.

The need for the HOLC was indispensable but fortunately not a continuing one. Therefore, when our banks and other lending institutions, aided very materially by Federal backing, had become able to assume some of their normal functions of supplying credit, the Federal Government stopped in 1936 the writing of new mortgages in the HOLC.

The results of the liquidation of these loans have been surprising. However, these mortgages have been liquidated without any substantial loss to the Federal Government. Seldom has any emergency measure been so effective and has accomplished its purpose so quickly. The concept of the HOLC was an inspiration. Its able administration, a blessing.

Let me cite another illustration: On the whole our banks had an enviable record for stability, but bank runs due frequently to hysterical fears of depositors, had been always a source of serious danger. One bank failing often pulled down others, and the depression caused very many of our banks to stop functioning. The Democratic administration moved quickly and effectively in rehabilitating our banking system.

The Government then believed that a move in the interest of allaying fears and the creating of confidence and stability was advisable after the banks throughout the country were reopened. Consequently the FDIC was created by which the Federal Government guaranteed the safety of bank deposits.

The result was a most happy one. Confidence in the stability of our banking structure returned almost immediately. No longer were there frenzied efforts to draw out funds from banks. No longer was fear begetting fear in our banking structure.

The FDIC whose creation had met with considerable distrust and opposition soon demonstrated that it was serving a useful purpose. No one today suggests that we do without the FDIC. It is regarded as a permanent feature of our system of government.

Since then very few banks have failed and the Federal Government has not lost a cent from its guaranty of bank deposits because the small fee which it collects from the banks for insuring their deposits has been sufficient many times over to meet any payments by our Government to depositors. Also big reserves available to pay losses have accumulated in the hands of the Government. Furthermore the FDIC is exercising a supervision over the operation of the banks which is generally regarded as wholesome. The FDIC is a fixture in our Government and is so regarded without question by both Republicans and Democrats.

Let me cite another instance from the many which are available. We are all familiar with the acuteness of the housing shortage due primarily to the fact that the needs of our war program required other uses for building materials. Many a veteran returning from the war has found it possible to secure a home only because of the assistance given by the FHA.

The Democratic administration put in operation a system of social security. The Republicans in power had merely talked about it. Some imperfections in plan and execution have become apparents and some have already been remedied. The significant fact is that so generally is our program of social security approved, that every political party, or prominent leader in it, seeks to retain social security and often desires to expand its scope of operations.

During the depression our States, cities, and counties were unable to meet all necessary costs of operating their governments, and of feeding hungry millions of people whom the Democratic administration on entering office in 1933 had found to be without jobs. No one knew or now knows how any other solution could have been found, if the Federal Government through PWA, WPA, and various other agencies had not provided jobs for those out of work and furnished food for starving people.

Time is lacking to refer to the many things done by the Democratic administration which have been of incalculable benefit to the people of this country. No one claims that all of these measures were wisely conceived or executed. Many had to be started without any precedent. Some imperfections in human planning and execution appeared and some were remedied as they became apparent. Many temporary measures, especially those of regulatory nature have been terminated. Some of the legislation is still regarded as controversial; but no other party in a period of 16 years or much longer has ever in the history of this country passed as much beneficial legislation, permanent or temporary.

But the call upon the Democratic administration for unusually difficult and momentous service had not ended. The international situation became more and more clouded. In some countries basic customary rights of the people were extinguished and despotic governments set up. History frequently records that a despot usually tries to distract his unhappy subjects from the realization of the loss of their freedom by launching upon an aggressive militant foreign policy. So history repeated itself when the totalitarian governments of Germany, Italy, and Japan attempted to conquer the world.

Their sinister intent was not entirely cloaked. I recall a conversation with President Roosevelt about a year before the outbreak of hostilities in Europe. In discussing with me a matter of domestic legislation, he suddenly exclaimed with a vehemence quite unusual for him. "We can control our domestic policies but we are facing an international situation which is gravely menacing our people, and yet they do not realize their danger."

Upon our people wearied from vast but successful efforts to overcome the depression, there was forced the necessity to make a tremendous preparation for our national defense, since war was apparently about to be thrust upon us. Step by step these stupendous preparations were made with amazing swiftness and success.

I chanced to be chairman in the United States Senate for 6 years of the Merchant Marine Committee. Our overseas shipping under Republican rule had fallen largely into disuse and was dangerously out of date and otherwise inadequate. No matter how effectively speed is secured, several years of preparation are necessary for obvious reasons before shipbuilding on a large scale is possible. Fortunately we started in 1936 to rebuild our merchant marine in the face of considerable opposition, and when we were forced into the war by the infamy of Pearl Harbor in 1941, we were already building indispensable ships, rapidly and in an ever-increasing number.

In spite of all of our successful efforts to get speed, and the resourceful and patriotic endeavors of our shipbuilders, other business men and labor, in 1917 and 1918, the First World War was over before we were able to launch our first ship under our war building program.

Such a dangerous plight in December 1941 would have meant unspeakable disaster to us. Immediately our ships had to meet the tremendously increased demands of our own war operations in the various waters of the globe. They had to service all of our allies. The demands upon our shipping were the greatest to which any country had ever been subjected at any time in history.

The job of building and of running our ships was well done. In a few years, in spite of the heavy losses by enemy submarines and bombs, we had the largest fleet of civilian ships the world has ever known, comprising two-thirds of the shipping of the entire world.

It would be the height of folly for us again to permit the supply of ships and our shipbuilding facilities to fall into disuse. The Republicans so blundered dangerously after the end of World War I. We must always operate and maintain afloat modern ships sufficient for overseas service in peace or in war. Such a policy is vital to Maryland as one of the greatest shipping centers of the world. Such facilities would be one formidable safeguard against our being forced into another war. The Democrats built an adequate merchant marine. The Democrats promise to retain it and they will do so.

It is unnecessary to recount the tremendous efforts put forth to win the war. Our war operations were on a scale more stupendous than ever known before. We had tried to persuade Hitler and Mussolini from deluging the world with blood. When our efforts to avoid war failed, the patriotic citizens of this country under Democratic leadership made the mightiest effort ever known in warfare. Never before have the people of this country united and cooperated in such a vast and comprehensive effort to preserve our liberties and to bring peace to the world. Of course, leadership was necessary. People of this country repeatedly placed that responsibility on the Democratic Party. History records that the choice was a wise one.

Some say that it is a tragedy that the atomic bomb was ever discovered or invented, but let us never forget that Hitler was making frantic efforts to create such a bomb. Had he succeeded in doing so ahead of us, even in the last year of the war when his armies were being battered and driven back, he might still have been able to turn the tide of the battle by the use of the atomic bomb. Under any circumstances our military and civilian losses would have been tremendously increased. New York, Baltimore, and Washington might have been totally destroyed.

One of the most fortunate events in history was the fact that we were the first nation after long, daring, and very expensive efforts on our part to find the atomic bomb. That bomb, in spite of the bloodshed which it occasioned, brought an end quickly to the Japanese war, thereby saving the lives of millions of Americans and of Japanese.

And so this tragic war which had been forced upon us came to an end, but unfortunately in some respects, not the kind of termination which we had sought. The end of fighting found the world hungry and with ravaged fields and dilapidated machinery gravely inadequate for the necessary production of food. It found many countries suffering from discord and violent animosities so acute as to threaten to plunge the world again into war.

History teaches us that the end of a big war may bring the end of fighting, but not necessarily peace in its truest sense. The effects of gigantic upheavals are not so quickly readjusted. Hunger, malnutrition, and nerve-racked bodies are still left to be reckoned with. It is an old story. Just as an individual recovering from an illness suffers from the fretful irritability of a convalescent, so nations do not find a true peace until people are restored mentally and physically to something like normal conditions. This dreary discordant period of convalescence has followed every big war.

When Roosevelt died just before the moment of victory, responsibilities greater than any new President in history has faced, were placed upon the shoulders of President Truman. He was called upon to act immediately in matters of colossal importance affecting vitally our country and the rest of the world. No one doubts that he endeavored to meet his responsibilities squarely and that he accomplished splendid results in a very short time. He has disposed satisfactorily of many different matters of vast importance.

As the head of our Government, he has sought zealously to secure the cooperation of all of our peoples irrespective of party affiliations. He has obtained much of such support in a part of our international program.

More progress has been made in the handling of our international difficulties, in spite of persistent Russian obstructive tactics, than is apparent. We still meet distrust and failure of cooperation in some quarters of the world. These we hope will fade out and we will continue to do what is reasonable to encourage their disappearance.

Sometimes we on the outside may not know what is really going on. We may not realize what problems those on the inside are facing, and why certain delays, or even apparent changes, in international policy are necessary. This is illustrated by our policy toward Palestine where we are trying to help to restore to the Jewish people their historic home.

I have abiding faith in what President Truman with the assistance of hard-working, patriotic, and competent Democrats and some Republicans are doing in the field of international relations. We have not threatened any nation nor attempted to dominate it. We are not trying to appease any nation. We are seeking through the United Nations organization and our economic cooperation and help to secure a just and enduring peace. Such a peace must continue to be our objective and we must not falter but press forward steadily toward that gleaming goal. Nor will we desist until the satellite nations of Russia are free to manage their own affairs.

When the Republicans acquired the control of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives about a year and a half ago, they boasted that they were going to readjust our economic system by the repeal of much legislation passed by the Democratic Party. They have failed to do so and they have not attempted to make any serious efforts to bring about their promised upheaval. The legislation passed by the Democrats has in the main continued unchallenged by the Republicans in the Halls of Congress. Much of it they even endorse in substance in their platforms.

The Republicans have conducted numerous investigations. These have proved to be costly and in substance barren of results.

The Republican Party must come before the people in the Presidential and congressional elections of this year with the attitude of having accepted very largely what has been done by the Democrats in both war and peace policies.

We hear general denunciations by the Republicans of the Democratic record, but never before in the history of this country has any party which has been out of power, as the Republicans have for a long time, been so ready to accept and to retain in overwhelming extent what has been done by their opponents in office. The Republicans are paying a big tribute to the efficiency of Democratic legislation and administration.

The question which the people of this country must decide on November next is whether the Democratic Party, whose leadership has carried us successfully through the depression, through preparation for war, the conduct of war, and of the postwar period, shall be supplanted by a party which by general admission has been consistently lacking in constructive leadership.

The irritation of our convalescent Nation led the people of this country in 1920 to get rid of Democratic leadership after World War I. Was the shift to Harding well advised? It was not. Neither Harding nor his Republican successors took any adequate steps to curb or to eliminate these unhealthy feverish conditions which led to the depression out of which we were extricated by the Democratic Party.

In Europe after both world wars there was a precipitous and unwise rush to discard their leaders who had led them successfully during those wars. The recent dropping of General Smuts, of South Africa, is a calamity to that country and to the world.

During the days of national and international convalescence we may think more of our troubles than of our blessings. Judgment is dangerously lopsided which permits our objections to a few matters to blind us as to the merits of the many.

We are more prosperous today than we have ever been in our history—much more prosperous than any of our allies. Over 60,000,000 people are employed in the United States, many more than at any time in our history, many more than it was believed by Democrats or Republicans could possibly at any one time find employment in this country. Our national income is vastly in excess of what it has ever been before. Would a prudent man or woman want to throw overboard the pilot who has brought us successfully through unparalleled perils and dangers?

We have a President whom we know is safe and sound. Truman has stood stanch against hairbrained or subversive schemes. The executive administration of our country in the hands of the Democratic Party has been subjected to the most terrific tests in our history and the Democratic Party has made good. The Democratic Party has sought to promote the just ends of labor, of capital, of agriculture, and in fact, of all forms of industry, and all causes entitled to governmental action.

In November thoughtful and fair-minded voters will consider and judge the record of the Democratic Party as a whole, not merely a part of it.

When the people of Maryland in November next make a careful estimate of pertinent relative values and reach a decision based upon sound proportions their conclusion will be that the Democratic Party, when subjected to the fiery ordeal, has made good, and is entitled to the continued support of the people of this country. They will vote for a Democratic President. They will reelect Congressmen SASSCER, FALLON, and GARMATZ, who fully deserve continued support and confidence. They will send to Congress for the first time Messrs. Beck, Bolton, and Austen, who richly deserve election.

Dunkirk Harbor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, so that the citizens of Chautauqua County who are interested in the improvement of the Dunkirk Harbor may know what has been done and what is planned for the further development of the water-borne traffic facilities at the Dunkirk Harbor, I am inserting at this point the following letter from Maj. Gen. R. C. Crawford, Acting Chief of Engineers of the United States War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washinton, D. C., June 17, 1948.

Hon. DANIEL A. REED,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. REED: In accordance with your request, I am pleased to furnish you the following information concerning the present status of the Federal navigation project at Dunkirk Harbor, N. Y.

The existing Federal project for Dunkirk Harbor provides for an entrance channel 16 feet deep and a harbor basin of the same depth, 2,420 feet long and 1,000 feet wide, protected by a pier on the west side of the entrance and a detached break-water extending eastward from the entrance channel. This project was completed in 1918.

The Corps of Engineers in response to a resolution by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives adopted in September 1945 recently completed an investigation of Dunkirk Harbor. Our report which is being printed as House Document No. 632, Eightieth Congress, recommends deepening the entrance channel to 17 feet in earth and 18 feet in rock, with a least width of 190 feet just inside the harbor structure flaring to a width of 320 feet about 600 feet lakeward thereof and extending to deep water; and removal of the rock shoal on the west side of the entrance channey to a depth of 17 feet with changes in the limits of the basin area at a cost to the United States of $390,000. The conferees' report on the river and harbor and flood control bill (H. R. 6419) as passed by the United States Senate on June 16, 1948 contains an item which would authorize this further improvement of Dunkirk Harbor.

As you know, at your request the Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives this date adopted a resolution directing the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to review the reports on Dunkirk Harbor, N. Y., contained in House Document No. 720, Sixty-first Congress, and subsequent reports with a view to determining if it is advisable to modify the existing project in any way at this time. This review study will consider further improvement of the harbor in the light of new developments which it is understood have occurred since out recent investigation of the locality. The study will be assigned to the division engineer of the Great Lakes Division and the district engineer at Buffalo who will initiate the necessary field studies at the earliest practicable date. In connection with the study, the district engineer will in due course hold a public hearing locally to accord all interested parties full opportunity to present their views and desires regarding the further improvements they consider to be now needed. Advance notice of the hearing will be issued by the district engineer who will advise you thereof.

After careful consideration of the project the district and division engineers will submit the basic report in response to the committee resolution to this office. The report will then be referred to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for review as required by law prior to its submission to Congress with recommendations.

Your continued interest in Dunkirk Harbor is appreciated and you may be sure that the further improvements now advocated will receive every consideration in connection with the authorized investigation.

Sincerely yours,

R. C. CRAWFORD,
Major General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

At the time the present recommendation was made, upon which the legislative authorization for an appropriation of $390,000 was enacted into law, it was not known to the Army engineers that the Buffalo Niagara Electric Corp. contemplated an ultimate investment of $47,000,000 just inside the harbor for a steam electric plant to serve the city of Dunkirk and the surrounding area.

The erection of the plant will require a large tonnage of coal, much of which will be water-borne, hence the necessity for a greater depth in the channel and the harbor for larger ships.

The Civil Functions Committee and each member thereof has been most cooperative in furthering legislation authorizing the appropriation for the Dunkirk Harbor.

The district engineer and the Board of Army Engineers have cooperated with the citizens of Chautauqua County in developing the facts in support of the project.

The criticism that the item of $390,000 is only a "housekeeping" item does not express the sentiment of the civic-minded people of western New York, but comes from those who are allied with those who fear and oppose the competition of water-borne traffic rates.

Hon. Fadjo Cravens, of Arkansas

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARTIN GORSKI
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I want to join the many Members who have expressed their regrets because of the leaving of our committee of the gentleman from Arkansas, FADJO CRAVENS. I have been closely associated with him on the Judiciary Committee and always found him to be a very fine lawyer, a man of the highest integrity, of fine principles, and I am sorry that he will not be with us next year. He did not seek reelection. His loss will be felt by the committee. He has served it well. He deserves the gratitude of all of us who have been working with him. He has given unstintingly of his time and has fulfilled every duty with honor and credit. I want to extend to him my heartiest best wishes for his future welfare. I want to wish him good health and a very long and happy life. May his future be bright and may it bring him greater honor and higher glories, which he so richly deserves.

The Draft—Past, Present, and Future

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS E. MARTIN
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, now that the draft bill, H. R. 6401, has been approved by both the House and the Senate and will undoubtedly be signed by the President, compulsory military service in peacetime will become an established fact in America. When it becomes the law of the land, it will be the duty of every American citizen to support it in every way. On the other hand, the President and Congress have the duty and obligation to examine our military policy and its historical background and to amend or repeal any laws of the land that may run counter to the American tradition, as soon as the President and Congress think it advisable.

The Constitutional Convention made the President the Commander in Chief of the armed forces. They took this action without debate and without clarification of their intent as to the extent of his powers as such, but our American history shows the development of these powers as practically unlimited in peacetime as well as in war.

The Constitutional Convention very carefully gave to Congress rather than the President the power "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a navy." Consequently, the President has always had to look to Congress for the exercise of those powers, and, without congressional authorization, the President has never been able to force any person to serve in the armed forces against that person's will.

Congressional authorization of conscription for military service and the appropriation of tremendous sums of money were absolutely essential for the successful waging of wars of the magnitude of World War I and World War II, and no one can deny that the draft is the most effective and efficient method for creating our armed forces, although it may not create the most efficient and effective armed force. For the purpose of protecting our Nation at war the draft is absolutely necessary. With the end of hostilities, however, we must consider the dangers of overconcentration of power in the President which the draft and the appropriation of tremendous sums of money give him in addition to his powers as Commander in Chief of the armed forces. Our forefathers very carefully avoided this tremendous combination of power in the President when they wrote our Constitution and in my judgment we cannot afford to draft our citizens into the armed forces and make them amenable to the Articles of War and to court martial in peacetime against their will just to make it easier for the President and his responsible leaders of the armed forces to secure the personnel of those armed forces.

Conscription was never authorized by Congress in peacetime until September 1940 when a world war was raging and our Nation was becoming dangerously involved and was being drawn or led into that war. Congress then, after a bitter battle, enacted the first peacetime draft in the history of our Nation. As was to be expected, the proponents of the draft in the Eightieth Congress have undertaken to portray the present international situation as closely analogous to that of 1940, but I firmly believe we are more nearly dominated today by the desire for power that will lift us to complete dominance of the world rather than for our defense only. The lust for unlimited power is the greatest single danger to a victorious Nation. That lust for power coupled with the concentration of unlimited powers of conscription and funds in the President, together with his duties as Commander in Chief of the armed forces thus created, not only rides roughshod over the very freedoms that made our Nation the promised land for all the peoples of this earth, but it can also lead us down the pathway of militarism to our doom and destruction.

I think the lust for power rather than the imminence of war is the controlling factor behind the enactment of the draft law. If war is as imminent as the proponents of compulsory military service say it is, how can they justify the following developments?

First. The complete failure of the responsible officials to build a stock pile of strategic and critical materials.

Second. The failure of Congress to enact legislation to help develop a healthy mining industry in America.

Third. The complete failure of responsible officials to maintain and preserve a balanced supply of weapons and ammunition from the huge supply we had at the end of World War II.

Fourth. The complete lack of effort by Government officials and by private industry to disperse and distribute our industrial development away from a few highly concentrated areas.

Fifth. The barn-storming political junket of the President away from duties that should have kept him more than occupied if war is approaching.

Sixth. The adjournment of Congress.

Our Nation must exercise eternal vigilance if we are to avoid the unnecessary destruction of individual freedom in peacetime. The clamp of the steel jaws of militarism and the subjugation of individual freedom should not be established as a permanent peacetime policy. If we are successful in avoiding or preventing world war III, I sincerely hope that our great Nation can discard the shackles of compulsory military service by the repeal of the draft law long before its expiration date.

By Bread Alone

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEWEY SHORT
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks heretofore granted, I submit the following editorial from the magazine Signs of the Times for June 15, 1948:

BY BREAD ALONE

While the European recovery program has been called "the greatest venture in constructive statesmanship" ever undertaken by any nation, yet we are prone to overestimate its power to help a stricken continent. Materialism has so distorted the thinking of the man in the street that he sincerely believes money can save the world.

Howard Mumford Jones indicts our foreign policy in the Saturday Review of Literature when he says: "What Europe hungers and thirsts after most deeply is moral and spiritual strength; what our policy insists upon giving Europe is materialism—a materialism which, whether you want to call it the Marshall plan, or the cold war against Russia, or the restoration of doubtful governments, or bolstering European currencies, springs from an erroneous concept of the uses of victory."

Spiritual and moral leadership are in grave danger of being sidetracked in the race for armaments and the attempt to secure the peace by balance-of-power politics. Have we no power in the spiritual realm to equal that of atomic bombs in the physical world? Europe is desperately short of the bare necessities of life, it is true; but she is dying for lack of faith and spiritual calm. We have not offered these fundamentals to the millions in need because, as a nation, we do not possess them. The America of 1948 is caught in paroxysms of fear. We are trying to buy good will with money; we hope that dollars will guarantee security. We hear lofty phrases of idealism, but they do not conceal our selfish aims.

"The essential appeal of fascism was to the soul," Jones reminds us. "Overburdened by the responsibilities of life, frightened by the incoherence of a state at once tyrannical and irresponsible, the individual European could through fascism share the strength of the corporate spirit. He became a member in a mystical body. Participation in the party not only removed the crushing weight of freedom and frustration from the average man; it also gave him the strength of great causes, the assurance that he shared the total life of the nation, the race, the world."

The Fascist governments are gone, but multitudes have no leader they can trust. It is an opportune moment for the pseudo-religion of communism to engulf the masses who are longing for a messiah. We can never fight communism successfully with dollars alone, for that system holds out a utopia of materialism to mankind. Our program must offer Europe that which is deep and enduring, as well as that which satisfies the needs of the moment, or we shall fail.

In our attempt to save Europe from disintegration, we seem to forget the Master's words: "Man shall not live by bread alone." When human beings lose faith in themselves and in God, they deteriorate into a fearful burden upon society. Bitter with cynicism, they say, "Life isn't worth living." They may be given food and clothing sufficient for their needs, but if the fire of faith has gone out of their eyes they are blind and helpless.

The apostles Peter and John, found the power of God to be greater than silver or gold. They found the helpless cripple at the temple gate expecting help from them. "I have no silver or gold," Peter said, "but what I have I give you. In the name of Jesus Christ, the Nazarene—walk!" (Acts 3: 6, Weymouth.) Have we nothing but gold and food to offer a distraught world?

"Man must be arched and buttressed from within," said Marcus Aurelius, "else the temple wavers to the dust." Along with the financial assistance we are sending to Europe, we must send the gospel of hope and regeneration. Inner resources can be strengthened only by the peace of Jesus Christ. The Master left His followers a precious legacy in His last will and testament. He did not promise them material riches, for He died a poor man, but He bequeathed to them a treasure so precious that the richest man on earth would give a fortune to possess it. "My peace"—this is the priceless gift the Son of God offers distraught humanity.

We promise freedom from want to our European allies, but with that must come freedom from fear and freedom from sin if they are to know peace of mind. Freedom from fear grows out of perfect love and confidence in the Heavenly Father. The miracle of faith drives out fear when a human being no longer trusts self but allows God to control his life. Freedom from sin comes when a lost soul accepts the full pardon offered by the Saviour of the world. Thus, the chains are broken forever and man finds genuine happiness.

This is the spiritual power America should give war-torn, disillusioned Europe. But before we can give the Gospel to others we must possess it in our own hearts.

John Hollis Bankhead

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. CLYDE M. REED
OF KANSAS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, April 21 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, late a Senator from the State of Alabama

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the late United States Senator JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD died, the United States lost one of its finest citizens and agriculture lost one of its most steadfast friends. Few men in the Congress have ever understood the needs of agriculture so well as did the late Senator BANKHEAD.

His friendship for agriculture was not confined to that of his own section of the country. His immediate interest, of course, was in cotton, but Senators from the Wheat Belt and the corn States as well found in him a friendly and sympathetic colleague. He was proud to be known as one of the leading Members in what was loosely called the farm bloc.

From the time of my entrance into the Senate until his death, JOHN BANKHEAD was one of my firmest friends and deserved the high respect and admiration in which all of his colleagues felt for him. He was a great man, a "gentleman of the old school," an orator of note, an intelligent student of economics, especially farm economics, and a patriot devoted to the welfare of his country. It was a great loss when JOHN BANKHEAD went off the stage of human affairs.

Report to the People of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin—II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. BYRNES
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report to the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin on my voting and attendance record during the special session and second session of the Eightieth Congress.

This continues a service I began last year when I included my complete voting and attendance record for the first session of the Eightieth Congress. This record can be found in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 93, part 13, on page A4091.

As I explained then, the purpose of this report is to collect, in one place and in concise form, information which is scattered through thousands of pages of the RECORD in order that my constituents may more accurately evaluate my congressional stewardship.

The basic reasons why such a report is necessary have been summed up by a publication which furnishes, for a fee, just such a service to newspapers, magazines, and others. In its advertisements, Congressional Quarterly states:

The complete official voting record of a Congressman for a single term of two years is buried in about 30,000,000 words of the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Votes are not tabulated by party or State—and sometimes the record is changed days and weeks—even months after a roll call. * * * It is impossible to make an accurate check on a Congressman's attendance record through official sources without hundreds of hours of tedious research and considerable knowledge of legislation. * * * Official records on Congress run to about 20,000,000 words a year—more than 100 pounds per set—more than 16,000 pages fine print. * * * But this ocean of printing does not show how a Congressman stands on many important issues.

I do not believe my constituents should be deprived, through the sheer impossibility of getting the facts, of an easy-to-read, compact record of my stand on the issues. I believe it is my responsibility to provide that record.

The record which follows includes all roll-call votes, all quorum calls and my votes on other important measures or measures of particular interest to my district on which there was no record taken. No attempt is made to include all of the hundreds of bills that were considered by the House during the session. The description of bills in the voting record is for purposes of identification only. No attempt is made to describe the measures completely nor to elaborate upon the issues involved. Upon request, I will be pleased to furnish a more complete description of any particular bill considered by the House, as well as a summary of the issues involved and the reasons for my position. The record follows:

Clifford J. Durr

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a genuine privilege to have known Clifford J. Durr, however slightly.

Senator PEPPER recently inserted in the RECORD biographical material about Cliff Durr, and therefore I shall not dwell on his background or accomplishments, other than to say that he exemplifies the very best in public administration. He has proved himself, at his peril and to his cost, courageous, outspoken, honest, and with a faith in the rightness of democratic principles, which he implements by positive acts.

It gives me pleasure to insert, under leave, the valedictory address in Cliff Durr's honor delivered by Wayne Coy, recently appointed Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission:

I wish to speak of a man—with full realization that the best speech about Cliff Durr is in our experience with him. Some of you have shared experiences with him far longer than I. I have no doubt that many of you feel that in a much more deep sense than I. You know him and have shared his life.

You have marshalled about him for battle with a fire in your heart that was hotter than the flame of a cannon. You have marched with him in his fight to prevent the corruption of the life-blood of our democracy. You know this man even though you may not address him as Cliff.

I like the patriotism of Cliff. He does not overlook the dangers that are within our borders. Nor does he hold any base shame for his own folk. He knows their underlying greatness. He is an exultant believer in democracy. If he is capable of wrath, all his wrath would fall upon those reckless sons of America who would sell our soul of liberty for restraints to be imposed by a few.

He sees the heart of our people. He sees there what all men hold precious. He sees this freedom as a cherished heritage for all. He sees no danger in the other fellow enjoying the same freedom as he enjoys. He has no easy-going tolerance for things that should not be tolerated.

I covet such patriotism for myself. I am angry at myself when I recognize my derogations from this standard.

The city of Washington is a long way from a vast area of our country and a long way from millions of our people. Probably one of the biggest temptations a public servant in the capital has to resist in the day by day performance of his duty is permit that distance to exist mentally as well as physically. He is subjected to diverse pressures, some subtle and some as bold as brass. And there are new intimidations every day. He must be eternally vigilant that he does not confuse the public interest with someone's private interest. On the other hand, he often finds a lack of sympathy or understanding or appreciation from the very people whose interests he is striving to further.

NO FAN MAIL

But that is all part of the American system. The people, having created this system, hope that those on the public pay roll will come to their task with an adequate sense of trusteeship. They do not feel obligated to bolster that sense of trusteeship by sending in fan mail.

In any event, the volume and complexity of governmental processes have increased so greatly that techniques have not yet been perfected to familiarize the masses of our people adequately from day to day with the real significance of our operations. It has been said that taxation without information is tyrrany. We hope that all those concerned with the communication media can eventually improve this situation.

In the meantime, public officials must be true to the faith reposed in them by the people, a faith that is more often implied than expressed. We need only to think of the medical profession with its Hippocratic oath to remind ourselves of the solemn obligation implied by such faith. The greater the reliance on faith between him who is served and him who serves, the greater is the responsibility for selfless, courageous leadership.

Part and parcel of this democratic system is the arrangement whereby men of differing political parties are placed on Government commissions. The expectation is that each will function as a miniature town hall meeting and that each member will exercise independent judgment and will speak his mind freely in the day-to-day deliberations. The assumption is that he will make a full and honest contribution of all that he has to offer in the way of intellect, intuition, specialized training, experience, and geographical background.

Actually, this day-by-day meeting and labor of men free to act according to their conscience, this clash of opinion are the very essence of our democracy. It is the wellspring of this Nation's vigor and progress. In our way of life, public servants are not expected to act as robots.

My own conclusion, from what I was able to observe as a broadcaster and from what I have experienced as a member of the commission is that in Clifford J. Durr this Nation has had an official who has exemplified the highest type of public service in the American tradition.

TOO PROPUBLIC?

Of Mr. Durr, fighting for his beliefs in the smoke and fury of battle, you can make this observation: 'There he stands like a stone wall."

And I can assure you that you do not know how immovable a stone wall can be until you have engaged Mr. Durr in debate.

Mr. Durr has been criticized for being too propublic. He has not seen fit to turn away that soft impeachment.

Because of his shining integrity, his keen intellect, and his disarming charm, most people who have differed with him have not been able to find it in their hearts to resent him. The few real enemies he has made are of such a stripe that their enmity is a badge of honor.

Today the name of Clifford J. Durr stands high on the roll of those who have contributed to American broadcasting in the public interest. He has always had before him the vision of broadcasting as a palladium of the people's liberties. He has had high aspirations for the fulfillment of broadcasting's destiny as a dynamic leader in moving this Nation toward the realization of the American dream.

He has envisioned goals of achievement that much of American radio has not yet attained—goals toward which it must move or mock the bright hopes that arise with each new technical advance in this electronic miracle.

The inauguration of facsimile, joining with AM, FM, and television to give this Nation four commercial broadcasting services, underscores the need for the type of broadgage, long-range thinking that Mr. Durr has brought to bear on our broadcasting problems.

Mr. Durr has been one of the most diligent and one of the most discerning architects of the house of radio.

OPPONENT OF NINETEENTH-CENTURY THINKING

He has been a consistent rebel against nineteenth-century thinking in twentieth-century electrical communications.

With the perceptiveness of a Hogarth, he has helped the members of the broadcasting fraternity to get a perspective on the follies and the foibles of their profession.

He has lost his share of skirmishes and battles, but it will be a sad day for America if his long-range objective of a more socially useful and a more democratic broadcasting system ever becomes a lost cause.

Some of the seed that he has sown has fallen on barren ground, but the other has borne fruit in the new concern among thoughtful people far and wide over the trends of our broadcasting system.

For these elements of the radio public, he has been the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

Because of his vast learning, his hair-trigger wit, his seldom-failing cheerfulness, and the real affection he has engendered, it is difficult to say good-by to this asscciate of ours. It is difficult to realize that this pleasant comradeship must end.

I know that I speak what is in the hearts of hundreds of his admirers over the Nation when I express appreciation for the splendid service above and beyond the call of duty that he has rendered in the communications field and when I give him our best wishes for all success and happiness in his future undertakings.

I regret that Cliff is seceding from the Commission. I would much prefer to see him continue to carry the load of drudgeries he has endured for the past 7 years. I am made selfish in this regard by my own responsibilities. Perhaps I hesitate to face them without his company.

If I forget thee, Cliff,
Let my right hand forget her cunning;
Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth,
If I remember thee not.

Introductory Address Before Graduating Class of Norwich University

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY
OF VERMONT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend into the RECORD my introduction of the Honorable WALTER PLOESER, who delivered the doctoral address before the graduating class of Norwich University, on June 7, 1948, at Northfield, Vt.:

INTRODUCTION

Congressman PLUMLEY'S introduction of Congressman PLOESER follows:

"The unexpected opportunity to be present today is affording me great pleasure. I appreciate the honor you have generously bestowed, in granting me the high privilege of introducing my colleague, the speaker of the day.

"Early in his career in Congress I marked him as one I would like to have on my committee. He has more than justified such selection and all my expectations.

" 'Sauviter in modo, fortiter in re' he is an antagonist worthy of any man's steel—when he either attacks or defends.

"On the basis of service rendered, ability demonstrated, both in and out of the Halls of Congress, he is an ideal public servant.

"We in the House of Representatives listen attentively, with pleasure and profit, and to our own advantage, whenever WALTER C. PLOESER speaks. You will now be afforded a similar opportunity.

"Hon. WALTER PLOESER, who will address you."

Address of Hon. Virgil Chapman, of Kentucky, at Unveiling of Statue of Henry Clay on March 3, 1929

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEWEY SHORT
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, much to our regret, several of the ablest Members of the House of Representatives are retiring from Congress at the end of this session.

Among those who are voluntarily leaving us is a stalwart son of Kentucky, who has served faithfully and well his great constituency for more than a score of years. Hon. VIRGIL CHAPMAN, of the old Blue Grass State, will be greatly missed by Members on both sides of the aisle. Those of us who have come to know him intimately and well respect his character, admire his great ability, and appreciate his loyal friendship.

On March 3, 1929, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] delivered an address at the unveiling and presentation of the statue of Henry Clay in our Nation's Capitol. It is one of the most eloquent encomiums ever paid by one Kentuckian to another. And no orators are to be found anywhere greater than those from Kentucky. Many times I have read the address of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] to different colleagues, and though it is not like hearing its delivery, every listener has considered it a masterpiece which should be preserved for all posterity. His address follows:

ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE CHAPMAN

Mr. Chairman, Dr. McVey, Dr. Hutchins, my fellow citizens of Kentucky, ladies and gentlemen, Oliver Cromwell said to a portrait painter, "Paint me as I am; leave out not one wrinkle, scar, or blemish, at your peril." This is no occasion for fulsome eulogy or extravagant panegyric. Rather is it proper to attempt an appraisal of the character and an estimate of the place in history of the men whom we memorialize today.

Henry Clay was born amidst the stirring scenes of Revolution, a few months after his great compatriot, Thomas Jefferson, had written the Declaration of Independence. The place of his nativity was The Slashes of Hanover, in the home county of the forest-born Demosthenes, Patrick Henry, whose clarion voice was as a bugle call to arms and whose inspired eloquence fired every patriot's heart. That other great Virginian, George Washington, was translating into armed force the sentiments which Jefferson had written in the study and Henry had thundered in the forum. Clay's plastic mind, like wax to receive and like marble to retain, absorbed its earliest and most enduring impressions in that environment of patriotic fervor and love of liberty.

At an early age it was his good fortune to become the amanuensis of the illustrious George Wythe, signer of the Declaration of Independence, Member of the Constitutional Convention, first professor of law in America, preceptor of Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, St. George Tucker, Edmund Randolph, and John Marshall. The great chancelor's office at Richmond was visited not only by his eminent pupils but also by such other friends as Patrick Henry, George Mason, and George Washington. Thus, the "Mill Boy of The Slashes," although deprived by circumstances of the privilege of acquiring an academic education, was afforded an excellent opportunity to improve the talents with which nature had lavishly endowed him, and no young American ever availed himself more completely of such a golden opportunity.

We see him at the age of 20 crossing the mountains to Lexington, intellectual center of the new State of Kentucky, and appearing at the bar, as he afterward said, "without patrons, without the favor or countenance of the great or opulent, without the means of paying my weekly board."

That was an exceptionally strong bar, boasting such beacon lights of jurisprudence as George Nicholas, Joseph Hamilton Daviess, and the elder John Breckinridge, collaborator with Jefferson and Madison in drafting the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1798, and attorney general in the Cabinet of President Jefferson.

Following the first dangerous Federal aggression, the enactment of the alien and sedition laws, threatening the life of the newborn republic, Henry Clay, barely of voting age, denounced those hated laws with such scorching invective that "indignation came like a dark shadow upon every countenance. The flame that burned in his own heart was caught up and lighted in every other."

After that speech, inveighing against Federal encroachments upon the reserved rights of the States, Clay's reputation as an orator was established, and his vision of an income from his profession of a hundred pounds a year in Virginia money became a reality.

That success at such a brilliant bar and among such a brave and generous people would open the door to a political career for a youth of his personality, character, and attainments was inevitable. At 29 Kentucky's adopted fair-haired son was commissioned a Member of the Federal Senate. At 34 he entered the House of Representatives, meeting then in this historic hall, the theater of many of his most brilliant forensic conquests. The young war party was ascendant. The need was for a leader who could vanquish in debate the sage of Roanoke, the most vituperative orator and greatest master of invective whose vitriolic utterances ever resounded through these corridors.

"It must be," said one, "a man who can meet John Randolph on the floor or on the field, for he may have to do both."

All eyes were turned to young "Harry of the West." He was chosen to the speakership the day he became a Member of the House, an unprecedented distinction, and Speaker Champ Clark described him as "the most renowned of all Speakers."

Mr. Clay's election to the speakership in 1811 marked the real beginning of the great career as a national political leader which ended only with his death 41 years afterward. That period was the golden age of American parliamentary history, and Webster, Calhoun, Benton, and Clay would have adorned any deliberative body ever assembled in the world. The only President during that epoch whose name looms in history as large and resplendent as their names was "Old Hickory" Jackson, whose heroic figure in bronze stands as a mute witness today to the unveiling of this statue of the greatest and most formidable of his great political antagonists.

In grim determination and inflexible will, strong though he was, Mr. Clay did not equal the invincible old man in the White House. In close reasoning and inexorable logic, Calhoun was his superior. In profound learning and classic diction his speeches were excelled by those of Webster the majestic sweep of whose sublime rhetoric and the grandeur of whose glowing perorations have been surpassed, if at all, in no speeches save those of Burke, among all in the English tongue. Yet as an intrepid and inspiring party chieftain, as a resourceful and redoubtable parliamentary leader, as a magnetic and charming personality, as a brilliant and versatile orator, taken all in all, Henry Clay has had no equal in the annals of America.

Without the advantage of power and patronage throughout most of half a century he was the master and the idol of his party, and his only equal in popular affection was the picturesque, indomitable, lion-hearted hero of New Orleans. So remarkable was Mr. Clay's personality that one eulogist said of him that he was able—"To cast off his friends, as the huntsman his pack,

For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back."

They would rally around his stately form, draw inspiration from his classic features, catch the gleam of his eagle eye, thrill to the silvery tones of his mellifluous voice, and unswervingly follow his standard even as the soldiers of France followed the white plume of Henry of Navarre. To them his battles were at once a crusade and a feast. They fought, as he did, with visors open, marching to such rallying tunes as—

"Oh, we'll sing a Harry Clay song by night
And beat his foes by day."

Dr. Robert J. Breckinridge, who knew him intimately, said:

"God had bestowed on him a personal presence and bearing as impressive as any mortal ever possessed."

Calhoun once said:

"I don't like Clay. I wouldn't speak to him, but, by God, I love him."

Richard M. Johnson, hero of the Thames, ardent supporter of Old Hickory, paid him this tribute:

"Every spot of ground Henry Clay touches he immortalizes."

Gen. John C. Breckinridge, great Democrat and successor to Clay as the idol of Kentucky, declared:

"As a leader in a deliberative body, Mr. Clay had no equal in America. In him intellect, person, eloquence, and courage united to form a character fit to command."

Appropriately descriptive of him is Hamlet's tribute to his father:

"* * * What a grace was seated on this brow;
* * * * * *
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command,
* * * * *
A combination and a form indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man."

The orator was greater than the oration. No adequate conception of the power of his speeches can be gained by their perusal. To those who would measure his oratory by the standard of his reported addresses we should say as did Aeschines to one who had only read Demosthenes on the Crown, "You should have heard the lion himself." In the Sage of Ashland nature mixed in perfect proportion all the elements that constitute the truly great orator. With his scintillating intellect, pure patriotism, physical, mental, and moral courage, masterful personality, imperious nature, superb histrionic ability, grace and naturalness of gesture, marvelous voice, and consummate mastery of crowd psychology, he was incomparably great before any audience, popular or deliberative. He could—

"* * * talk with crowds and keep his virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch."

A born leader, he was the Prince Rupert of debate, the Chevalier de Bayard of the forum.

His voice, flexible and melodious, possessed, we are told by his contemporaries, the tone qualities of a pipe organ. So magical was the power of that voice that his ancient enemy, eccentric old Randolph, of Roanoke, with whom he had fought a bloodless duel, and who is reported to have requested that he be buried with his face turned toward the West in order that he might watch Clay of Kentucky, the last time he visited this Capitol asked that he be carried to the Senate Chamber, where, feeble almost unto death, he cried:

"Lift me up! Lift me up! I came here to hear that voice again."

Then those two sages, erstwhile mortal foes, clasped in friendly grasp each other's hand and gazed through a mist of tears into each other's countenance, exemplifying the truth that—

"The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the daring."

Henry Clay's fame is based not only on his elcquence as an orator and his brilliancy as a party chieftain but also on the greatness of his achievements in the field of constructive statesmanship. Probably none of his compeers equaled him in prophetic vision of the expanding majesty of this Republic; none left as imposing and enduring monuments in the form of national legislation.

"He exercised this influence," says one writer, "not as an originator of systems, but as an arranger, and as a leader of political forces."

For him absolute fixity of mind and unyielding consistency—"The hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen, philosophers and divines"—cannot be claimed. In the titanic battle over the United States bank he was embarrassed as its chief defender by the record of his speech 20 years before, probably the ablest argument ever uttered against the recharter of the bank, but impartial history concedes the honesty of his convictions, the purity of his motives, and the integrity of his purpose.

Like most great statesmen, he was not only ambitious but also was a practical politician, and that is not a term of opprobrium but one of honor. His most fatal mistake of judgment, as he afterward recognized, was the acceptance of the premiership in John Quincy Adam's administration. That prevented the realization of his laudable and justifiable aspiration to be President of the United States. The charge that his appointment was the result of a bargain for Kentucky's support of Adams is universally branded as a calumny. Sincere and vibrant were the words of Mr. Adams himself, spoken at Maysville, Ky., in 1843:

"As I expect shortly to appear before my God, to answer for the conduct of my whole life, should those charges have found their way to the throne of eternal justice, I will, in the presence of Omnipotence, pronounce them false."

After the sunlight of truth had dissipated the storm clouds of partisan hatred, Mr. Clay was exculpated even by most of his bitterest political enemies. The retraction of the groundless charge by its author, George Kramer, and the irrefutable testimony of Benton, Blair, Van Buren, General Lafayette, and a host of other qualified witnesses support the verdict of history that Henry Clay was a noble-hearted, virtuous statesman of impeccable honesty and unsullied honor.

In his every utterance and every deed he visualized the splendor and grandeur of America's destiny. At 34 he was the dashing, fiery, intrepid leader of the so-called younger element that forced the administration into the second war with England, which resulted, to use his words, in giving our country "respectability and character abroad, security and confidence at home." He became the principal advocate of internal improvements and chief apostle of the American system. His reconciliation of Jackson and Calhoun to his compromise tariff of 1833 averted the horror of internecine strife and postponed for nearly three decades the tragedy of the War Between the States. While not the author, as is generally stated, of the Missouri Compromise, which was initiated in the Senate, had it not been for his wise leadership and sagacious rulings as Speaker of the House it would not have become a law. There was no grander act in the drama of his life than his fight for the compromise of 1850. Ominous clouds hovered close. Feeling that it was his last service to his country, he spoke with all the fervor of a soul that ardently loved both North and South and devoutly hoped for peace. His burning eloquence, pathos mingled with magnificence, was a voice from the brink of eternity.

"Without any earthly object of ambition before me," he said, "I am here expecting soon to go hence, and owing no responsibility but that which I owe to my own conscience and to God."

Never was a more impressive scene enacted in this Capitol than when in the old Senate Chamber he made his great speech of February 5 and 6, 1850, pleading with "thoughts that breathed and words that burned," appealing with all the emotion of his fast-ebbing life for peace and concord and union, and when he had finished men and women pressed around him, grasped his hand, and kissed his tear-stained cheeks.

The master passion of Henry Clay's life was love of freedom. His eloquence reached its sublimest heights in this historic Hall as he pleaded for recognition of the South American Republics in their struggle for liberation from the yoke of Spanish tyranny. Simon Bolivar, the great Colombian liberator, had those speeches translated into the Spanish language and read at the head of the embattled hosts of freedom in the South American revolution. By act of the American Congress, the people of the United States soon will present to the people of Venezuela a magnificent statue of Henry Clay in Caracas, the native city of the great Bolivar. The name of Henry Clay is inscribed in the pantheon of immortality as the father of Pan Americanism and enshrined in the hearts of those who love liberty throughout the Western Hemisphere. Of the great man, Sargent Prentiss truly said:

"His civic laurels will not yield in splendor to the brightest chaplet that ever bloomed upon a warrior's brow."

Henry Clay was one of the most human of all the human beings that ever lived. Always the center of the storm, to his friends he appeared as a demigod, to his enemies as a demagog. He was as bold as a lion, as tender-hearted as a little child. Impetuous and domineering, he was at times ill-tempered and vindictive. Naturally he became embittered when he believed he had been betrayed by those in whose friendship he had reposed implicit trust. It seemed that the Whig Party denied him the Presidential nomination invariably in years when any Whig could win and placed its banner in his hands at times when party victory was impossible. Gov. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, in his delightful Seven Decades of the Union describes a scene in a Pennsylvania Avenue hotel when the news of General Harrison's nomination was conveyed to Mr. Clay, who passionately exclaimed:

"Would to God there were two Henry Clays. One of them would make the other President of the United States."

Withal he was generous and magnanimous, as evidenced by his consent to the appointment of his old friend, John J. Crittenden, to the Cabinet of Filmore, only a few months after he had felt outraged by Crittenden's support of General Taylor in the Whig convention. Harmoniously blending into the last chapter of his life were the manifestations of mutual regard between the Old Lion and his former opponents, Benton and Van Buren. Beautiful was the renewal after a lapse of more than 20 years of the cordiality that had characterized the early friendship of Mr. and Mrs. Blair and its genuine reciprocation by him who had suffered most from the trenchant Blair pen.

On that last night yonder at the National Hotel, before his masterful spirit took flight from its tenement of mortality, Henry Clay's mind reverted to the scenes of his childhood and carried him back over the old trail through the primeval forest back to old Virginia. He was again for a moment the "mill boy of the slashes" and was heard to whisper childhood's holy prayer, which he had learned at his sainted mother's knee, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

He loved Kentucky and Kentucky loved him with a love that amounted to adoration; he loved Ashland, his beautiful home in the environs of Lexington; he loved his silken-coated, fleet-footed thoroughbred horses; he loved the marvelously beautiful, gently undulating fields and paddocks of the fairest pastoral country beneath the stars—the blue-grass region of old Kentucky; he loved all of Kentucky; he loved its brave, proud, and chivalrous people; he loved "its flowers, its birds, its dews, its rainbows, its glad streams, its vales, its mountains, its green, wooing woods, its moonlit clouds, its sunsets, and its soft and dewey twilights." His name is indissolubly associated with Kentucky's history and tradition. Kentucky is proud of his life of service; Kentucky cherishes his renown.

"His spirit wraps the dusky mountain,
His memory sparkles o'er the fountain;
The meanest rill, the mightiest river,
Rolls mingling with his fame forever."

Today Henry Clay takes his place beside Webster, Calhoun, Benton, Cass, Blair's son, and the immortal Jackson, whose figures in chiseled marble and molded bronze stand in this hall dedicated by act of Congress to the individual States as a shrine for the statues of the best loved among their illustrious dead. Such ceremonies as this are not for those whom we memorialize but rather are for us and those who are to come after us. Here in Statuary Hall we ought to consecrate our lives to the service of our country. We ought to dedicate ourselves to the preservation of constitutional government in its dual form and the maintenance of the equipoise among its three departments. Our jealous and vigilant gardianship of those vital, fundamental principles, which Henry Clay consistently and stoutly defended, will constitute the surest shield and most impregnable bulwark of those cherished liberties which it is our sacred duty to transmit unimpaired to posterity. Let us so shape our lives that those who gave us our great heritage shall not have lived in vain. Let us so live that the immortal spirits of our deathless dead shall seem to live in us and "through us shape far in the future equal destinies."

"God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

Transcript of Meet-the-Press Program in Which Hon. Karl E. Mundt, of South Dakota, Is Queried About His Communist Control Bill by Marquis Childs, Phelps Adams, Mae Craig, and Lawrence Spivak

OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, to the end that our office can supply the numerous requests which we have received for transcripts of the Meet-the-Press program of June 11, at which time I was questioned in this press conference of the air about the provisions and purposes of the Mundt-Nixon bill, I am herewith including the official Mutual Broadcasting System transcript of this entire program, as a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

ANNOUNCER. The most revealing half hour in radio, Meet the Press, America's press conference of the air, coming to you from Washington, D. C., the news center of the world.

We invite you to listen to an unrehearsed and spontaneous press conference as four of the country's ace reporters fire questions at Representative KARL E. MUNDT, of South Dakota, whose anti-Communist bill has stirred up a hornet's nest throughout the country. Each week, Mutual presents Meet the Press in cooperation with the editors of the American Mercury, one of America's most fearless, outspoken, and stimulating magazines. Our press conference will begin in just a moment.

Will the Communists rule the world? Friends of the Soviet insist they will rule it by force of ideas. Enemies of the Soviet feel they will rule it through aggressive action. Both friends and foes point to the gains made by the Communists during the past 3 years. One thing is certain. Groups in every independent country are aroused and are battling to further or to stop the forward march of communism. Here in America, we have spent years on investigation and talk, talk that started softly but rose at times to hysterical pitch, and having ignored the Communists completely, they are suddenly determined to take measures. Will those measures help or hurt democracy? All over the country, sober men are debating that issue. After months of study, Congress was presented with the Mundt-Nixon bill, which recently passed the House of Representatives. Will it smoke the Communists out? Expose them to the light of day and thus make them important or will it, as its oponents insist, drive the Communists underground and make them more dangerous than ever? Will it endanger the liberty of the very people fighting to preserve liberty? We hope tonight to get some of the answers to these all-important questions, for here in person is Congressman KARL MUNDT, one of the authors of the bill, and here to welcome Congressman KARL MUNDT and the members of the press is the well-known newsman and commentator, Albert L. Warner.

Mr. WARNER. Welcome, everybody, to another weekly news conference. Seated around the press table are Mae Craig, of the Portland (Maine) Press-Herald; Phelps Adams, of the New York Sun; Marquis Childs, of United Features; and Lawrence Spivak, of the American Mercury magazine. Facing the press table is Representative KARL E.

MUNDT, Republican, of South Dakota. He was born and brought up in South Dakota. He taught there in school and college. He operated farms and insurance business. With Representative RICHARD NIXON, of California, he has drafted the bill which won overwhelming approval in the House and now awaits action in the Senate committee. The bill defines the Communist movement as a foreign-dominated conspiracy aimed at setting up a totalitarian dictatorship in this country. The authors of the bill are convinced that the Communist Party as it is presently organized fits this definition. Communist Party members and officers would have to register and Communist propaganda would have to be labeled as such. Communists would be forbidden Government jobs and passports. Communist-front organizations would be obliged to register. Now, in the echoes of both applause and denunciation for this bill, I see Mr. Childs has the first question.

Mr. CHILDS. Congressman MUNDT, I wonder if you could tell us as simply and briefly as possible what you think will be the result of this bill. What are you really trying to do with it?

Congressman MUNDT. I think, Mr. Childs, that if this bill becomes law, as I hope and believe it will, that the result will be, first of all, that those members of the Communist Party who are actually members of the party will find themselves exposed because they have to register with the Department of Justice as such, and they have to list all their literature and label it as Communist literature. In addition to that, it will provide safeguards for which Americans, many of them, have been seeking a long time. That is, it will safeguard us from having to include Communists in the Federal pay roll. It precludes definitely the employment of Communists on the Federal pay roll. It does one other thing to Communists per se. It denies them a Federal passport so that they cannot legally leave the country and legally return. So much for the Communists.

Now, as to the Communist front organizations, it deals with them much less stringently but it does require them to label their literature as such and does compel them to keep accurate records and to file with the Department of Justice a record of their expenditures and a record of where they get their contributions.

Mr. SPIVAK. Well, Congressman MUNDT, if the Communists register under the act, they admit their guilt, don't they?

Congressman MUNDT. They admit that they're Communists to the extent as being a Communist is an admission of guilt, they do so admit guilt.

Mr. SPIVAK. Well, isn't that what your act tried to do at the beginning, to show that they are conspirators, that they are trying to overthrow our Government, and are guilty of something?

Congressman MUNDT. No, because the act places no penalty whatsoever on a man because he is a Communist. He pays no fine. He is denied no rights. He is denied two privileges, which go only to good citizens, and those are the privileges of holding employment in the Federal Government, and the privilege of securing a passport. More than that, he gets no penalty at all.

Mr. SPIVAK. Well, don't you, in the introduction to your act, define a Communist as someone who is guilty of conspiracy?

Congressman MUNDT. No; we have a separate clause, a separate section, section 4, dealing with conspiracy. We do define the Communist movement as a movement which is operating to deliver this country eventually by varying stages and degrees to the regime controlled in Russia, the Communist Party.

Mr. SPIVAK. Well, do you think the Communists, the members of the Communist Party, are part of a conspiracy?

Congressman MUNDT. Not all of them. I think some of them are innocent dupes. Some of them don't appreciate and realize the full extent of what it means to be a Communist. I do think the top leaders of the Communist Party are engaging in a conspiracy.

Mrs. CRAIG. Many witnesses object even to being asked whether or not they are Communists. They say it invades the secrecy of the ballot. Now, will you talk about that a minute?

Congressman MUNDT. Yes; because that has been recently tried out in the courts in connection with the Hollywood cases. These people were asked, "Have you ever been a member of the Communist Party or are you now a member of the Communist Party?" and they said they objected to answering it. The reason they objected to answering it was, of course, because we had their membership cards on file at the time we asked them the question. Had they said "No," they would have been guilty of perjury. Had they said "Yes," they probably would have lost their jobs in Hollywood, so they said, "We decline to answer." We feel it's a fair question. It's a question every voter is asked in South Dakota in the primaries, possibly in Maine, too, Mrs. Craig. I don't know, but in many States you are asked, "Are you a Democrat or a Republican?" and if you refuse to answer, you don't have the opportunity to function as a party member.

Mr. ADAMS. Congressman MUNDT, I find that many loyal Americans are not convinced that the Communist Party does seek to overthrow our Government by force or that it is controlled by a foreign power. What proof does your committee have on that point?

Congressman MUNDT. That's a splendid question, Mr. Adams, and our committee has literally volumes of proof. I might read you the shortest testimony that we have to that effect and it's among the most definite items. It comes from J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI, who, testifying before the House Committee on Un-American Activities last year, said this: "The Communist Party of the United States is a fifth column if there ever was one, and it is far better organized than were the Nazis in occupied countries prior to their capitulation." The truth comes not only from the FBI, not only from students of communism from the outside, we get it from men like Louis Budenz, the former editor of the Communist Daily Worker, who for many years was a Communist leader, who has testified under oath repeatedly that the function and the purpose of the Communist Party is to establish in this country, not only a totalitarian regime but a totalitarian regime controlled and dominated from the Russians abroad.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, anybody, Congressman, who has that purpose is guilty under your laws, is he not, and subject to a fine of $10,000 and 10 years' imprisonment?

Congressman MUNDT. That's correct. Under section 4, Fowler's conspiracy clause, we propose without even mentioning the Communist Party that anybody in America who is guilty of conspiring to establish within our boundaries a totalitarian regime controlled from abroad shall be subject to a 10-year penitentiary sentence or a $10,000 fine.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, not if your committee is convinced that the purpose of the Communist Party is to do this thing and if all those people were trying to do this thing, they're subject to a jail penalty or heavy fine. Doesn't your bill, as a matter of fact in any section outlaw the Communist Party as it is now set up?

Congressman MUNDT. Our bill outlaws certain practices in America. Whether those practices are performed by the Communist Party or the German American Bund, or by the Black Dragon's Society of Japan or by some other organization, if and when it can be proved in the court that Communists are engaged in that particular practice, they become guilty of violation of the law. We feel that some of the Communists can be still prosecuted and still convicted and other Communists cannot because some of them are entirely unaware of the ulterior objectives of the Communists.

Mr. ADAMS. Registration wouldn't phase them under the bill.

Congressman MUNDT Registration would not phase them but registration would provide that each time a man registers the Attorney General sends them a notice that he knows that he has been registered as a Communist.

Mr. CHILDS. It seems to me that you have said in effect Mr. MUNDT that the Communist Party would be outlawed and wouldn't we therefore get an underground party far more dangerous, or wouldn't we get a party under another name as Canada did which also was far more dangerous than the known Communist Party?

Congressman MUNDT. We wouldn't have the experience with Canada, Mr. Childs, because our bill does not specify the Communist Party by name. We specify 50 conspiratorial acts. Now if Communists are engaged in those conspiratorial acts then they do become guilty of violating the acts, and if they violate the acts and hide from the forces of Government, they become outlaws until they are apprehended, of course.

Mr. CHILDS. But every reference in the bill is to communism and Communist-front organizations, you make no reference to facism whatsoever except in section 4.

Congressman MUNDT. It defines the totalitarian debt which deals just as directly with fascism as it does with communism.

Mr. CHILDS. But you thought it wasn't necessary to mention Fascist organizations at all.

Congressman MUNDT. We feel as J. Edgar Hoover does, that fascism is just another flank of the Communist movement. Communism, fascism, and nazism are in fact identical and the same in substance but each pays its loyalty to a different country abroad.

Mrs. CRAIG. Congressman MUNDT, Henry Wallace said that this bill would probably hit his new party and other innocent groups. Do you think that's true?

Congressman MUNDT. No, it is not true and after he made the statement we made doubly sure we put an amendment in the House which definitely excluded a legitimate political party even when there is doubtful legitimacy as that of Henry Wallace.

Mrs. CRAIG. Do you think that any bill is going to be passed along this line?

Congressman MUNDT. Yes, sir; I certainly do; we spent practically all day yesterday with the Senate Judiciary Committee and parted and a meeting will again adjourn tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and they're moving ahead with tremendous speed of thought, and painstaking analysis.

Mr. CHILDS. You mean the Senate may actually vote on this on the floor, this session?

Congressman MUNDT. That's right; I think the Senate may actually vote on it this session; I think the Senate will certainly vote on that this session if they figured on extension of the congressional activities which has been suggested taking place between the two political parties and they may even do it next week because the demand in the country is growing like a snowball for some kind of corrective action to curb Communist activities in this country.

Mr. SPIVAK. Mr. MUNDT, on the war investigation. Is there any question in your mind that the party is guilty of treason and conspiracy?

Congressman MUNDT. No question in my mind whatsoever, Mr. Spivak, but that the party, the hard core of the party, the hard members of the party, at least insofar as the governing echelon is concerned is guilty of—in wartime it was called treason and in peacetime we might refer to it as a great, dangerous form of conspiracy.

Mr. SPIVAK. On the books, how to handle that conspiracy.

Congressman MUNDT. We asked Attorney General Clark that question when he was before our committee. He said that the present acts are inadequate and he said why don't you report the acts of these Communists to Time and he pointed out certain loopholes, certain flaws and in fact the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill in large part meets the very purposes of the various programs that Mr. Clark outlined before our committee.

Mr. SPIVAK. Isn't it true though, that if two men get together and conspire to commit an unlawful act they are guilty of conspiracy and there are Federal laws now that can handle them?

Congressman MUNDT. Not at the present time, except in time of war. As you say now, if you are basing your "now" on the theory that we are now technically at war, possibly by the same interpretation we might apply.

Mr. SPIVAK. I understand there are Federal laws that made it a crime for people to get together and conspire to do anything that's unlawful.

Congressman MUNDT. I repeat then, according to Attorney General Clark, now in wartime that's correct, we have the Vorhees Act and other acts in wartime which meet the problem and when we pointed out to Attorney General Clark that each big body of opinion in this country felt that he was very derelict in his duties because he was not enforcing the act, he pointed out that in peacetime he could not enforce this, that he needed something like the Mundt-Nixon bill to tighten the spots and loopholes and give him strength to do a job.

Mr. CHILDS. Congressman MUNDT, you spoke about printed actions, forthcoming printed actions. I notice that a number of Republican Senators have spoken of the need for rather drastic changes in the Mundt-Nixon bill. Now would you agree that the bill that passed the House needed more tight definitions and perhaps more drastic.

Congressman MUNDT. Certainly Mr. Childs, I would be the last to say that the Mundt-Nixon bill in the form that it passed the House was the epitome of perfection. I think it can be improved, in fact, Mr. Nixon and I, as I say worked with the Judiciary Committee of the Senate all day yesterday and some tightening up processes were engaged in. No material changes are made, if we can tighten it up and I think possibly we can, we would be in favor of doing that.

Mr. CHILDS. Senator BALL has said that it's too totalitarian.

Congressman MUNDT. I think Senator BALL is wrong. What do you suppose—I mean, he's a very disturbed man. I wonder what's your feeling about the possibility of an Attorney General and a President who want to take this country down a totalitarian road, using the Mundt-Nixon bill with its broad power. It could not be done because it provides for a judicial review, a review by the district court of appeals and the United States Supreme Court, so it would take more than an Attorney General and a President. It would take an Attorney General, a President, a judiciary assistant, and the United States Supreme Court to do that job.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, Congressman, some of the sources entirely friendly to your bill take two exceptions to it particularly. They think that insofar that it deprives subversive Americans of their citizenship, it goes too far on the ground that the jury would be reluctant to convict under such heavy penalties.

Congressman MUNDT. I think there is a considerable basis of merit in that objection. We discussed it at great length in committee and now on the floor of the House, having in mind that possibly a jury might not do this. Well, as a consequence, we provided that alternative penalty of 10 years in the penitentiary or a $10,000 fine, or, if the crime is bad enough, we can revoke the citizenship.

Mr. ADAMS. I see. The other provision I object to is that which abolishes the statute of limitations insofar as it passes under this bill are concerned.

Congressman MUNDT. That's a unique procedure, and I can well understand why people who are not familiar with the Communist movement might object to that. We put that in only because of the tremendous capacity of Communists to operate in secrecy. We have found, for example, frequently in this country Communists—transmittal bills, carriers of Communist idealism from Moscow who have been here illegally without a passport for as much as a dozen years before they were apprehended, and, so, as a consequence, we don't want to leave too many doors open for them to continue their nefarious practice.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, suppose, Congressman, that 10 years ago I was a young blood who wanted to be a Communist and thought I was, and then outgrew it and now I'm not any more, but under your bill couldn't you go back and prosecute me because 10 years ago I was a Communist?

Congressman MUNDT. No, indeed, Mr. Adams. Let's examine exactly what would happen to you because 10 years ago—and that's quite understandable—because most youngsters in college are pretty much progressive and misunderstand what liberalism means, and are inclined to go off on a radical line. Well, let's assume you were a Communist 10 years ago and had outgrown it, but, suddenly your name appears on this registration list. Now what happens to you? You get a note from the Attorney General saying, Mr. Adams, you have been listed as a Communist in the United States, and if you don't want to be so listed, you have the right to appeal to him, to have a hearing before him, to take it up in a judicial system through the courts and even through the Supreme Court, to find out if you had reformed and were now a very highly respected reporter for a splendid newspaper like the New York Sun.

Mrs. CRAIG. Congressman, what kind of changes does the Senate propose? On what points do they find your bill objectionable?

Congressman MUNDT. They raised this question, largely raised by Senator FERGUSON—whether or not instead of having the Attorney General make the finding in the first interest, it might better be done by what they call a Subversive Commission comprised of a representative selected from the Department of State, one from the Department of Commerce, and one from the Department of Labor. In other words, a body of three men, instead of one man making the initial finding. As far as Mr. NIXON and I are concerned, we are quite indifferent as to whether it's the Subversive Commission or the Attorney General because in the final analysis no finding is made until a public hearing is held and somebody has made a decision. The other place in which they find some criticism with the bill is the one mentioned by Mr. Childs. Perhaps we could tighten up the standards, the definition by which this determination is to be made whether an organization is a Communist-front organization or whether an individual is actually engaging in a Communist practice and we have made some improvement, I believe, in those definitions and I think that as a consequence of the very careful screening that has been given this bill over the—by the general public by the last 3 weeks, by the Judiciary Committee, by the Library of Congress, that when these new definitions are written up, as we think they will be by tomorrow afternoon or tomorrow evening, that they will be an improvement perhaps over those that we had in the House.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. MUNDT, may I ask won't public opinion in time deal with the Communist Party? Isn't that sufficient to handle whatever dangers there are in the Communist Party?

Congressman MUNDT. Mr. Warner, I live up in a rattlesnake country, that is, we have a few rattlesnakes out in the heart of South Dakota. We're trying to eliminate them. Public opinion is against them. If public opinion can't eliminate them, you give public opinion a weapon with which to deal, so we appointed a State rattlesnake exterminator and since then we have eradicated a great many of the snakes.

So, that's the way it is with the Communists. You've got to have some tools, some weapons, some device—public opinion itself. Without any device, you can't possibly do the job.

Mr. SPIVAK. Mr. MUNDT, the impression you gave in answering one of my questions a moment ago was that the Attorney General approved of the bill. Is that so?

Congressman MUNDT. I do not think that's correct. I don't want to quote him as saying so. The Attorney General appeared before our committee and we questioned him as to why he was not doing what Mr. Warren says could now be done. Why can't you enforce the present law? Why can't public opinion and existing legislation get the job done? He pointed out loopholes, why he couldn't do it, and our bill plugged up those loopholes.

Mr. SPIVAK. Well, does he think, though, that your bill plugs those loopholes up; because I understand the President is against the bill?

Congressman MUNDT. I think the President is against the bill for other reasons and the fact that we have plugged up the loopholes.

Mr. SPIVAK. For what reason do you think he's against the bill?

Congressman MUNDT. Political reasons, if you want to know in short words.

Mr. SPIVAK. I don't quite know what that means, Mr. MUNDT. Would you explain what you mean by political reasons?

Congressman MUNDT. Yes, if you insist, I will be happy to turn this into a political rally because I think the President is 100 percent wrong. The political reasons I mean are the CIO; the large block of population votes which he hopes to scramble for this election are against the bill. Since they're against the bill, Truman is against the bill because Truman wants those votes.

Mr. ADAMS. Congressman, has the FBI accepted this measure or do you know whether it is acceptable to them?

Congressman MUNDT. The FBI, as you know, Mr. Adams, operates in a rather anonymous position in this country. It is the creature of the Attorney General so that publicly and on the records the FBI prefers not to be quoted in connection with the bill.

Mrs. CRAIG. Now, Congressman, let's be political. Do you think, as a good Republican, that this is the worst Congress since Thaddeus Stevens?

Congressman MUNDT. I do not.

Mrs. CRAIG. And why?

Congressman MUNDT. I think it is one of the best Congresses that we have had in this country for a good, long while on the basis of its record.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, tell us something. What is the record that makes it the best?

Congressman MUNDT. Now, you're going to ask me something I can't answer in connection with your theory of keeping in a short reply.

Mrs. CRAIG. Can't you think of anything?

Congressman MUNDT. Yes, indeed. There are many things that would kill the rest of the program. Let me mention some of them. This Congress was elected on the first instance on the major issue in connection with the questions—"As Americans, have you had enough?" Enough of what? Enough of blundering and waste is one thing. This Congress has effected some economy. Not as much as we would like to but the world situation is worse than we had expected it to be, and, of course, even the President, when he isn't out on a political campaign, it's public expense and a 15-car special train, commends this Congress for having done a swell job in bipartisan support for foreign power. The next thing, had enough of what? Had enough of communism in government, and so we pass this bill 319 to 58 with virtually every Republican in the House voting for it to stop the Communists from holding a job in the Federal Government and the President says he's against that but, certainly, I think the public is going to deal with Congress on that one. We've said had enough, had enough taxes. We'll reduce the taxes because it can reduce the expenditures of Government, so we passed the tax bill which the President vetoed, which we passed over his veto and, as a consequence, I think that is a highly acceptable measure to the average member of the American public. I can go on as much * * * But I'll be glad to answer another question.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. MUNDT, we'll let you extend in the record.

Congressman MUNDT. That's quite all right. Thanks for the opportunity.

Mr. CHILDS. Well, on this political matter, I thought from the heat with which you spoke, Mr. MUNDT, about the present stand on the Mundt-Nixon bill that you thought he had a good chance for reelection. Do you think that's true?

Congressman MUNDT. You mean the President?

Mr. CHILDS. Yes.

Mr. MUNDT. I hope the Mundt-Nixon bill has a better chance of passage than he has of being reelected President or we might as well quit working on it before morning.

Mr. CHILDS. Well, there is one more serious question on this Mundt-Nixon bill. How many individual Americans will be affected by your bill? Half-million, ten million, how many?

Congressman MUNDT. Well, Mr. Childs, if you're referring now to the number of card-carrying Communists——

Mr. CHILDS. No, I am not. The Communist front organizations to everyone defined as a Communist or Communist front.

Congressman MUNDT. Of course, you see, the effect upon the members of the Communist-front organization is virtually nil because his name does not appear in the Federal registration. I don't think he is directly affected. We feel that there are about 2,500,000 Communists and Communist fellow travelers in front organization membership in the country but of those only the card-carrying Communists would be individually affected, as I see it, because the fellow traveler just doesn't have his name appear any place in print.

Mrs. CRAIG. Well, let's be political again. Some of your Republican colleagues have said that he is the worst President. Do you think so?

Congressman MUNDT. No, I don't think that's true either, but it would be harder for me to find the reason to prove that statement than it would be.

Mr. SPIVAK. Mr. MUNDT, under your bill, to come back to the bill itself, under your bill, anyone who helped the Communists International would be guilty of something wrong, wouldn't he?

Congressman MUNDT. Well, now, I think that if you interpret help as a man who meets with them, who finances them, who conspires with them, or who carries out their activities, that would be true. Or, if you interpreted help simply as a man who paid his dues to the party, I wouldn't think that was wrong.

Mr. SPIVAK. Or who commits acts.

Congressman MUNDT. That's correct.

Mr. SPIVAK. Senator TAFT today—and Senator TAFT, I understand, is one of the leaders in the Republican Party—said about Mr. Truman today that Mr. Truman's attack on Congress, and I quote, "gives aid and comfort to all those who want to destroy representatives of government as do the Communists, Fascists, and every believer in a totalitarian state." Now, if the bill were enforced, would anybody attempt to bring Mr. Truman up?

Congressman MUNDT. No, of course not. He doesn't give overt help and even Mr. Wallace doesn't give help and even Mr. Wallace, I suppose, would not be brought up, although he follows the party lines pretty closely. I don't think he gives overt help to the Communists at all in the sense designated and spelled out in section 4 where specifically we point out what kind of conspiracy we mean, actively aid in the establishment of the totalitarian regime here which is dominated by the Communists and abroad.

Mr. WARNER. A swift question, Mr. Adams.

Mr. ADAMS. Congressman, the President in his speech in Chicago the other night made one of his complaints against this bill which has hurt most frequently when he said, "You cannot stop the spread of an idea by passing a law against it." What is your answer to that?

Congressman MUNDT. I agree with him on that and we're not trying to stop the spread of an idea. We're trying to stop the spread of an aggressive system, a technique, a device, a totalitarian regime, a dictatorship, not the idea of Marxism at all, but the implementation of it, the way the Communists have, the cruel, ruthless, godless, aggressive dictatorship.

Mr. ADAMS. You're trying to stop an organization and not an idea.

Congressman MUNDT. That's correct exactly, Mr. Adams.

Mr. WARNER. I am sorry I must interrupt. Mr. MUNDT, our time is up.

Protest Against the Drift to Authoritarian Militarism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I recently received from one of my constituents, Timothy G. Dyas, of 265 Henry Street, a copy of a profoundly moving letter which he had written to the President. It had been my hope to read this letter on the floor while we were debating the Conscription Act; but the limitations of time in the closing hours of the session made that impossible, and so I am inserting this letter, together with another impressive document from the New York East Conference of the Methodist Church.

I am not presenting these communications because I agree with every word; but because I believe that they give voice to a genuine fear of a genuine danger that this country will slip imperceptibly into a military dictatorship, or at least a military dominance, which will spell the doom of democratic freedoms as we have known and revered them.

I offer first the letter from Mr. Dyas:

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 25, 1948.

President TRUMAN,

White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It is with deep regret that I find myself forced to return this medal. My conscience would not rest if I kept this medal from a government as obviously committed to war and world domination as ours is. The onus doesn't rest completely on your shoulders alone, for both of the major parties must share the guilt, and in the parties the small groups who run our country.

I volunteered for service in the Army 1 year before we entered the last war and served for 4 years and 8 months, 21 of which were spent in a German prison camp. I've never been a member of the Communist Party and feel our system is immeasurably superior, economically and politically. It is a sad commentary on our Government when I feel I must include the two above statements to avoid being branded, as many honest Americans have been for daring to disagree with your policy.

The action of the Government in the UN on the partition of Palestine has made me ashamed for my country. Here, again, I feel I must make a statement to show my mind has been made up on an objective basis—I'm not Jewish. I can't help but feel that the entire policy was dictated to our Government by the oil interests. Mr. President, has oil become more important than human blood? This is a question that will have to be answered before any blood flows.

If our services are so much under strength, why has the Army been turning down volunteers? I feel this wave of hysteria has been whipped up in order to stampede a draft bill through and give the military mind, as exemplified by Admiral Leahy and Secretary of "Aggression" Forrestal more power in dictating to our people. Mr. President, will they and the plutocracy they represent serve in the trenches of another war? Will other General Meyers and others as equally guilty but never caught remain behind while we little guys do their dirty work? That was a very clever idea, exempting veterans in order to stave off their objections, but will they be exempted when a war is on? Why were our armed services allowed to deteriorate at the rate they have if our military intelligence knew of a threat to our security? I'll try to answer this by pointing out that to build them up to the point where they would be effective will require the outlay of tremendous sums of money. This will pour more money into the coffers of a few, as was already evidenced by the fact that the stock market climbed right after your speech.

I further believe that you can't beat a philosophy by guns as the last war certainly proved. Perhaps we didn't feed Europe so the Communists would rush in and the whole affair would be brought to the point where neither of us could make a graceful concession?

If you want to look in your history books, Mr. President, you'll find a remarkable similarity between the recent actions of our Government and that of Austria under Metternich.

I still feel that the vast majority of Americans are decent, peace-loving people who are being led down the rocky path to war by way of our yellow press, and a combination of ineptitude and covetousness among the plutocracy. Why don't you meet with Stalin, as he suggested, and talk the situation over? You are the President of the United States of America, so will you please act as one should, ignore the advice of the militarists in the State Department and other branches, and act as I'm sure your innate sense of decency must impel you to. You'll be the goat for the actions of these people, so please, in the name of God, act now while there is still a chance. Perhaps your letters are not shown to you many times?

I want this Purple Heart held in trust for me until such a time as peace is assured the world and not through another war. I remember your speech, in which you said you were not buying. No, Mr. President, someone is not buying, but instead is selling; selling American decency.

Yours for a decent world,

TIMOTHY G. DYAS.

I next present the Methodist report, including the transmittal letter from the Reverend Arthur B. Dewberry. Note that, in different language and in a different context of experience, this church group courageously expresses the same dignified but penetrating protest against our drift into totalitarianism:

NEW YORK EAST ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST CHURCH,
New York, N. Y., June 21, 1948.

The Honorable ARTHUR G. KLEIN,
House of Representatives,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KLEIN: Please find enclosed a copy of the report of the Social Service Committee of the New York East Annual Conference of the Methodist Church. The conference was held in the Hanson Place-Central Methodist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., May 19–23, inclusive. The delegates to this conference represent approximately 500, of which half are laymen. The report was adopted unanimously, and I was instructed to send a copy to the Senators and Representatives of the States of New York and Connecticut, which I hereby do.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR B. DEWBERRY.

THE REPORT OF THE SOCIAL SERVICE COMMITTEE OF THE NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST CHURCH, HELD IN THE HANSON PLACE-CENTRAL METHODIST CHURCH, IN BROOKLYN, N. Y., MAY 19–23, 1948

PART I. STUDY UNIT

The committee is printing a study unit for use by local church boards of education, youth fellowships, women's societies, and other groups, dealing with the home as a social concern. This unit seeks to bring to the local church level, through a series of workshops, an awareness of the social forces at work to injure the Christian home, and the countermeasures that can be taken by the local church to help protect the home as the basic unit both of society and of Christian nurture. The outline of the study unit is as follows:

The home as a social concern.

Introduction—Crisis in the home.

Social problems affecting the home:

Temperance and the home; home-relief and social-work agencies; social psychiatry and the war's aftermath; public health and the home; adult social education.

Economic problems affecting the home:

Housing; condition of employment; poverty as it affects the home; standards of living and the church.

Moral problems affecting the home:

Youth and sex morals; influence of press, radio, and movies; delinquency and the home; divorce and broken homes; preparation for marriage.

Conclusions and bibliography.

PART II. FREEDOM OF THE PULPIT

Efforts at control of social ideas through intimidation are not new in American history. After every war we have had a period of social readjustment that brought into sharp conflict the liberal and antiliberal ideas within the Nation. We are now in such a postwar period of adjustment and conflict. While the struggle has centered largely in social, political, labor, and educational areas, there has been a growing tendency to impair the effectiveness of the liberal traditions of the Protestant pulpit.

Efforts have come from without and within the church. From without the church, the antiliberal press serves as the main instrument of intimidation. One has only to compare the official proceedings of the Methodist Federation for Social Action Conference at Kansas City with the newspaper reports of the conference under the name of a feature writer of the World-Telegram, to see how completely unfair such attacks have been. One has only to read the speech of our bishop, made at Morristown, N. J., on Washington's Birthday and compare it with the editorials and newspaper reports that were printed concerning it to see how far irresponsible groups are willing to go to try to injure the liberal leadership afforded by protestantism. One need only read the report of the committee of clergymen who investigated religious freedom in Yugoslavia, and compare it with the vicious attacks upon these clergymen in the press, to know to what extent the antiliberal press will go to keep the American people from geting factual information on a subject of religious and international importance. To go further, one need only to read the seasoned and objective findings of the committee that visited the Soviet Union under the leadership of the distinguished pastor of Christ Church, New York, and compare it with the steady stream of distortion that is filling large sections of the press, to know the purpose of such antiliberal attacks.

From within the church, well-meaning but poorly informed persons act upon misinformation as generally given through the press, to further impair the free exercise of the rights of unrestricted pulpit utterance. Most displeasing, is the appeal to unreasoned emotion through the use of name calling. Such an approach has been condemned by the President's Committee on Civil Rights as follows: "A state of near-hysteria now threatens to inhibit the freedom of genuine democrats. * * * If we fall back upon hysteria and repression as our weapon against totalitarians, we will defeat ourselves. Communists want nothing more than to be lumped with freedom-loving non-Communists. This simply makes it easier for them to conceal their true nature and to allege that the term "Communist" is "meaningless." Irresponsible opportunists who make it a practice to attacks every person or group with whom they disagree as Communists have thereby actually aided their supposed enemies. "We would caution those within our fellowship of the dangers of becoming mouthpieces for such irresponsible opportunists."

In a day when the streams of truth are muddied by the fears and confusions of war's aftermath, it is imperative that we keep open the channels for truth that the freedom of pulpit expression affords. When we cannot get the truth through the daily press, the radio, or the popular journals, is the time when it is of critical importance for us to fight for the rights of a free and fearless pulpit. We strongly reaffirm our belief in the freedom of the pulpit as protestantism's enduring contribution to democracy and human freedom. We urge our people to look to the journals of the Protestant churches, the utterances of our ecclesiastical leaders, and the voice of our traditionally free and unintimidated pulpit for guidance during these days. We would caution our people about the dangers of accepting on face value any reports, comments, or headlines dealing with controversial or religious matters as found in the secular press. We are in the midst of a struggle of ideas. A large segment of our press is in the hands of irresponsible opportunists who are making it their deliberate policy to misrepresent, distort, and openly falsify the actions and attitudes of protestanism.

So, we would stand firm on a sacred right and a noble tradition, reserving the right of the free pulpit to speak the truth as God gives us to see it, without regard to the pressures inspired by authoritarian forces, whether they be social, political, or ecclesiastical. We will fight to withstand any intimidation that would through fear of misrepresentation and false witness seek to keep our clergy from speaking with courage and Christian insight on any subject that affects the welfare of the human personalities entrusted to them for guidancé.

We ask our charge lay leaders to read this statement to the official board and also to the congregation of the church, to support the spirit and ideal of this utterance.

PART III. RESOLUTIONS

1. We recommend that the two speeches of Bishop Oxnam, now available in printed form, be given as wide and general circulation as possible throughout our churches; and we request the secretary of the annual conference to send copies of this report with a letter to those Representatives of Congress who shall be indicated by the chairman of the social service committee.

2. In a day when a critical housing shortage is causing real damage to Christian standards of home life, we deplore the willingness to spend 20 times as much for military use as we are willing to appropriate for the crying housing needs of our people. We recommend the passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill with its provisions for a 10-year program of aid to private and public housing on a large scale.

3. We recommend that pastors consider the presenting of brief courses of instruction to our youth dealing with the matters involved in marriage and the Christian home, with emphasis on such items as mixed marriages, broken homes, and ethical standards of behavior during courtship.

4. As this is a year of Presidential election, we would urge a wide distribution of the pamphlet prepared by the division of the local church of the board of education of the Methodist Church entitled "The Christian Churchman and Politics."

5. We would urge a careful study of the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights entitled "To Secure These Rights." We would go on record as supporting the legislation presented to implement this report.

6. We would commend the New York East Conference Chapter of the Methodist Federation for Social Action for the active program that it is carrying on within the conference. We would urge conference-wide support for this program of education and information.

EDGAR N. JACKSON,
Chairman.

NEW YORK POST EDITORIAL COMMENT

Perhaps the best summation of the situation is offered by the following editorial from the New York Post and Bronx Home News of June 6, 1948:

POWER AND ILLUSION

It is a curious thing that we have become simultaneously the most powerful and the most frightened Nation on earth.

It is even more curious and more disturbing that in our hysteria we are cowering constantly at shadows, while ignoring the substance of the real dangers which menace not only the liberties we have won, but threaten to extinguish the hope of expanding them, and with them human security and happiness.

In the process we are creating the very monsters we fear most.

The real and serious enemies of freedom, democracy, liberty, and justice are near at hand * * * all about us * * * and not inhabitants of some distant land to be reached only by superforts or supership.

The widespread appeal of Red-baiting arises from a desperate fear that somehow our liberties and freedoms are being undermined, and that something alien to the great dream enunciated by Thomas Paine is secretly capturing converts to Communist dogma from among our friends and neighbors.

But under cover of that illusion, in the name of combatting this shadowy threat, reaction bred of fascism and lust for power is working swiftly and too often successfully to lead us into economic and political slavery.

This is the purpose, not of all of the supporters, but of the framers of the Mundt-Nixon bill, for example. Those who yearn to stifle all protests and all criticism, who seek to throttle free speech and free assembly, hope, by constantly labelling it an anti-Communist bill, to make its antidemocratic provisions so palatable to us that we will surrender our principles in the belief that we are scourging evil instead of creating it.

Billions of tax dollars, which we would all cheerfully contribute to extend human security and the privileges of freedom, are being poured into armaments for war, while the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill gathers dust.

Hundreds of thousands of our citizens cry for homes—and we give them guns in the name of security, and speak of something out there somewhere, Red-hued and menacing, as the greatest threat to democracy—but the homeless still lack shelter.

If they are to protest, the Mundt-Nixon bill will provide one man with power to convict them of treason; and yet its supporters claim it as a weapon to preserve freedom.

The fable is that the only menace to our liberties is from the Soviet Union, and that it is the kind of threat which can be met only by bombs, bullets, and fighting men.

Yet in the very effort to provide the tremendous military power we are assured is necessary we persist in discriminating between Negro and white citizens, segregating their service units and limiting the Negro's service opportunities in everything except the hazard of losing his life.

Our hearts cry out over the terrible tragedy of human beings uprooted from their lands and homes—the homeless of the concentration camps formally called displaced persons—but the enemies of freedom and equality among us insist on so limiting our special immigration bill that Roman Catholics and Jews could scarcely be included in the quotas, while good Protestant Aryan Germans, many of them deeply imbued with nazism, would get preference.

This is a real, and present, menace to the spread of democracy.

But this plot was bred by little knots of Ku-Klux and Nazi-minded sympathizers with facism and the Hitlerian doctrine of racial and religious intolerance, and spawned on the floor of Congress. The color is not red, but black.

The truth is that democracy's progress here in its birthplace is being stopped dead-center, and a series of tremendous drives are under way to reverse its course—to give us less and less of it, under the guise of attempting to defend it.

Our Defense Secretary demands a Military Establishment big enough, expensive enough, to challenge Russia in war and to "defend democracy" from Red attack.

But who and what will defend us against the military mind; who will protect us against losing our democracy at home while we pretend to fight for it abroad?

Not the authors of these vicious bills.

Not the men committed to complete domination over civilian life by the military machine.

Not the public officials who rush aid to Turkey, Greece, and China, but deny it to Israel.

This is an election year. It is the year to challenge every Congressman and every Senator and every public official on the record.

We can save democracy only by voting for men who believe in it and practice it. And we must build it at home as well as support it abroad.

Taber's Accomplishments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER C. PLOESER
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, one of the outstanding accomplishments, and probably the most far-reaching accomplishment of the Eightieth Congress, has been the stabilization of the Federal Budget. When the Eightieth Congress convened the Honorable JOHN TABER, of New York, who became chairman of the Committee on Appropriations after having had longer prior service on the committee than any former chairman of the committee, announced that his ultimate desire was to put the Government on a sound business basis.

That he has achieved a high degree of success is borne out in the comparison of the deficiency appropriations which it was necessary to make to meet the operating requirements of the Government during the first session of the Eightieth Congress and those required in the second session. During the first session it was necessary to make appropriations totaling more than $3,500,000,000 to provide additional amounts required during the fiscal year 1947, for which the original budget had been passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress. The second session of the Eightieth Congress was required to appropriate $1,700,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948, and of this amount $1,200,000,000 was for tax refunds leaving only $500,000,000 as the actual requirement for operating deficits.

This record was possible only because the agencies of the Government knew JOHN TABER, functioning not only as chairman of the whole Committee on Appropriations, but also, as chairman of its Subcommittee on Deficiencies, well enough to know that when he said he expected to enforce the Antideficiency Act, he meant just exactly that. The executive agencies had grown into the habit of taking their original budgets and making such expenditures as they saw fit, and then running back to Congress and getting supplemental amounts as and when needed. The Congress had relinquished to the Executive its constitutionally mandated control of the public purse, and JOHN TABER, who as minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, with others, had fought the change in policy at every turn in the road, took his assignment as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as a direct mandate to restore constitutional government with respect to finances. He has had the fortitude to forge ahead when others, but for him, might have faltered. He has faced every kind of persuasion and pressure but has never been taken off his feet. He has been depicted to the American people as a hard-hitting legislator, and that certainly is true, but just as important is the fact that he can take a never-ending stream of punishment without losing heart to battle for the cause he knows to be right.

When the record of achievement of the Eightieth Congress is written, the record of the Committee on Appropriations, under the able and tenacious leadership of JOHN TABER will be outstanding, and I am proud to have been a part of it.

Long-Range Agricultural Program (H. R. 6248) and Federal Charter for Commodity Credit Corporation (S. 1322)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE D. AIKEN
OF VERMONT
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD that is to come out after the adjournment an analysis of the long-range farm bill and the Commodity Credit Corporation charter bill as they were reported by the conference committees.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I wish to make the following analysis of certain provisions of S. 1322, the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, for the purpose of clarifying the intention and meaning of certain provisions of the conference report on S. 1322.

The affairs of the Corporation within the meaning of section 10, which requires the executive staff to devote its full time to the affairs of the Corporation, would include functions performed for any agency of the Federal Government (including the Department of Agriculture) utilizing the personnel and facilities of the Corporation as authorized by section 11. Thus, the executive staff could devote itself to such programs as section 32 and school-lunch programs if the personnel and facilities of the Corporation were utilized by the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out such programs. Likewise, the affairs of the Corporation include participating in activities of the Department of Agriculture in which the Corporation has a direct interest, such as production goals, marketing quotas, marketing agreements and orders, acreage allotments, foreign and domestic allocation programs, etc.

Section 10, providing for an executive staff which would devote its full time to the affairs of the Corporation, was not intended to require any extensive change in the relationship between Commodity Credit Corporation and the Production and Marketing Administration.

The determination of the Board of Directors of Commodity Credit Corporation shall be final as to which officials of the Corporation constitute the executive staff.

The term "officer or employee" within the meaning of the authorization in section 10 to pay premiums on bonds includes any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture utilized by the Corporation.

The powers conferred by section 4 (m) include the power to, in any manner, acquire, hold, and dispose of personal property or any interest therein, as the Corporation deems necessary in the conduct of its business.

Although under section 9 two members of the board must be persons who are not "employees of the Corporation or any department or agency of the Federal Government, if also directors," this does not mean that such board members may not devote their full time to their duties as board members and receive compensation for such full time participation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, or may not be former employees of the Department of Agriculture. It is anticipated, however, that in the case of a former employee a reasonable time would elapse between the time of his resignation from the Department and his appointment as a board member.

Another change made by the conference committee was to make the proposed 4-year statute of limitations applicable not only to claims against the Corporation but also to claims by the Corporation. The committee felt that the statute of limitations should be applicable to claims by the Corporation as well as to claims against the Corporation. As provided by section 16, the proposed 4-year statute of limitations will not limit or extend any period of limitation otherwise applicable to claims against the Delaware Corporation. With respect to claims by the Corporation, the 4-year period of limitations will not begin to run on claims of the Delaware Corporation transferred to the Federal Corporation until June 30, 1948, the effective date of the new charter.

Section 9, which provides that the compensation paid any director shall not exceed in the aggregate $10,000 per annum and that employees of the Corporation or any department or agency of the Federal Government, if also directors, shall not receive additional compensation for their services on the board does not prevent a director who holds another position in the Federal Government from receiving a salary for such position in excess of $10,000. In such a case the director would serve on the board without compensation.

Section 9, in providing that a majority (three members) of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum of the board, will, if there are three members in office, permit the board to function, and vacancies in the board, whether arising by failure of the President to nominate or the Senate to confirm the original or subsequent members, will not impair the powers of the board to execute the functions of the Corporation so long as there are three members in office.

I also wish to make the following analysis of certain provisions of H. R. 6248, the Agricultural Act of 1948, for the purpose of clarifying the intention and meaning of certain provisions of the conference report on H. R. 6248. It was the intention of the House and Senate conferees that the authority contained in section 1 of title I of the Agricultural Act of 1948 to require compliance with marketing regulations as a condition of eligibility of producers for price support would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to condition price support for potatoes and other nonbasic commodities upon marketing orders issued pursuant to the Agricultural Adjustment Act as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, being in effect with respect to such commodity in such production areas as the Secretary may designate. This was also intended to be permitted by the provisions of section 302 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 as amended by section 202 of title II of the Agricultural Act of 1948 authorizing eligibility for price support to be conditioned upon compliance with marketing practices prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

My Voting Record on Farm Legislation in the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I have had prepared for the benefit of the farmers of the Fourth Congressional District, composed of the counties of Cabell, Jackson, Lincoln, Mason, Pleasants, Putnam, Roane, Tyler, Wayne, Wirt, and Wood, showing how I voted on all legislation passed by the House of Representatives relating in any way to agriculture.

This record speaks for itself and shows that bills designed to aid the farmer have consistently received my support.

It is not supposed that everyone will agree with my position. Honest and well-informed persons differ in opinion. All votes have been made after careful consideration of the problem and a thorough study of the evidence presented in committee hearings and in the debate on the floor of the House.

The record is as near complete as is possible to make at this time, and I am pleased to present it to you:

Public Law 2; approved February 1, 1947: Extending time during which Federal alcohol plants could manufacture sugar to relieve shortage and provide a market for surplus potatoes and soft and wet grain. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 30; approved March 31, 1947: To extend the powers of authorities to ration distribution of sugar and fix prices. ELLIS voted "No."

Public Law 40; approved April 28, 1947: An act to permit importation of Mexican farm labor. ELLIS voted "No."

Public Law 104; approved June 25, 1947: The Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, to protect the public, and especially farmers, against misbranded or adulterated economic poisons of great value to agriculture but which were unknown and not covered by the Insecticide Act of 1910. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 131; approved June 30, 1947: An act to extend until July 1, 1949, the period during which income from agricultural labor and nursing services may be disregarded by the States in making old-age assistance payments without prejudicing their rights to grants-in-aid under the Social Security Act. This law is to encourage recipients of such assistance to engage in these occupations, in which there is a labor shortage, and to do so without loss of assistance. the State governments being given the option to disregard such income in the granting of eligibility. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 145; approved June 30, 1947: Extending the Second War Powers Act for 15 days. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 188; approved July 15, 1947: To extend until February 29, 1948, certain powers of the President under the Second War Powers Act and Export Control Act, retaining certain war controls upon American farm products. ELLIS voted "No."

Public Law 249; approved July 26, 1947: To extend provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to the Virgin Islands. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 266; approved July 30, 1947: An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the 1948 fiscal year. On final passage ELLIS voted "Yes."

NOTE.—Total vote was: Yes 315, no 38; indicating general agreement between majority and minority.

On motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment which made an appropriation of $20,000,000 for farm-tenant loans, July 18, 1947. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 290; approved July 31, 1947: To amend the Plant Quarantine Act to protect American nursery stock against disease-infested stock and plant pests from abroad. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 297; approved July 31, 1947: An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 298; approved July 31, 1947: To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of farm labor supply centers, camps, facilities, and equipment used in connection with the farm labor supply program at such prices, and under such terms and conditions and in such manner as to insure, as far as possible, their continued use in the housing of migratory labor engaged in agricultural work. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 205; approved August 1, 1947: To amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act relating to marketing agreements and orders, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain such minimum standards of quality and such grading and inspection requirements for agricultural commodities, other than milk and its products, in interstate commerce, as will effectuate orderly marketing of such commodities in the public interest. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 360; approved August 5, 1947: To assist the Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose of surplus wool, protecting the price and the American market. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 388; approved August 8, 1947: An act to protect consumers of sugar and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry, to promote trade, and for other purposes. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 389; approved December 17, 1947: European Interim Aid Act, providing, among other things, that the President be authorized to purchase for gift to Europe, foodstuffs from other countries at a higher price than paid for the same products in the United States. ELLIS voted "No."

Public Law 395; approved December 30, 1947: Authorizing Government and industry to enter into certain voluntary arrangements for price stabilization. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 427; approved February 28, 1948: Second Decontrol Act of 1947. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 472; approved April 3, 1948: Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, to provide former allies, neutrals, and enemies with $17,000,000,000 worth of gifts, including farm machinery, fertilizer, automobiles, and trucks, and other materials, such as steel, oil, foodstuffs, etc., in short supply at home. Sponsors of bill admitted it would increase cost of living and lower standard of living at home but was a necessary supplement to $20,000,000,000 in gifts to foreigners since VJ-day and to buy friends. ELLIS voted "No" on passage of bill.

Public Law 495; approved April 21, 1948: To amend the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, extending benefits of its provisions to farmers. ELLIS voted "Yes."

The following bill was vetoed:

S. 814: Vetoed by President June 26, 1947. A bill to support wool prices and protect American producers against unfair foreign competition. This bill was supported by all farm organizations and wool growers. Bill passed House May 23, 1947. ELLIS voted "Yes."

The following bill failed of passage in House:

House Joint Resolution 273 (S. J. Res. 167). Failed to pass House December 15, 1947: To stabilize by voluntary agreements entered into under sponsorship of Government, the prices of livestock, poultry, etc., to aid in stabilization of the national economy, to regulate speculative trading on commodity exchanges which would injure farm prices, and to allocate transportation equipment for movement of grain. ELLIS voted "Yes."

The following bills passed the House but had not yet become public laws as of June 18, 1948. There was little doubt but that they would become law. Most of them were on the President's desk, awaiting his signature when Congress adopted a motion to adjourn June 19.

H. R. 3370. Passed House July 21, 1947: A bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to support the price of milk at not less than 90 percent of parity. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 4856. Passed House February 3, 1948: To require liquidation of mineral interests reserved to the United States to be delayed until such time as Congress may establish a policy on the subject. Bill seeks to halt sale of such rights as surplus property, to highest bidder. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 5883. Passed House March 18, 1948: Department of Agriculture Appropriation for 1949 fiscal year. Bill provided $400,000,000 for REA which was $100,000,000 more than President requested. It provided also $1,048,000 for soil conservation research and $44,000,000 for the Soil Conservation Service. This was $6,000,000 above the Administration budget request of $38,000,000. The PMA or AAA program was given $225,000,000. Funds for certain work of the Extension Service were increased $2,000,000 above administration requests. Sixty-five million dollars were provided for the school-lunch program, adequate funds for crop insurance, research, etc. Total appropriation for the year was $1,010,000,000. ELLIS voted "Yes."

The conference report provided for $262,500,000 for AAA payments, which was $37,500,000 more than was provided in the House bill. On passage of the conference report June 14, 1948, ELLIS voted "Yes."

NOTE.—Bill as finally approved in conference report, June 14, 1948, contained the record-breaking total appropriation of $1,123,000,000 for the 1949 fiscal year. Among other things the conference report increased Extension Service funds $3,000,000 above the President's request; increased the Soil Conservation Service funds to a total of $45,048,000, which was over $7,000,000 above the President's request; increased REA funds to a total of $400,540,000, which is over $100,500,000 above the President's request; and included $75,000,000 for school lunches and $262,500,000 for AAA subsidy payments.

Again, as on passage of original House bill on March 18, 1948, the conference report (compromise bill agreed on by Senate) with increases specified, passed unanimously, with the minority so well satisfied that they did not even contest it by asking for a roll call record vote.

H. R. 6114. Passed House May 18, 1948: A bill to encourage extension of loans to qualified veterans, tenants, share croppers, and farm laborers, for the purpose of acquiring, enlarging, and improving family size farm units. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 6556. Passed House May 26, 1948: Extension of Reciprocal Trade Act, reserving to Congress its constitutional authority over tariffs which had previously been surrendered to State Department bureaucrats, and requiring President to seek advice of the Tariff Commission on whether or not tariff cuts will injure American industry and agriculture. ELLIS voted "Yes."

S. 1249. Passed House June 8, 1948: A bill authorizing additional research and investigation into problems and methods relating to the eradication of cattle grubs, and for other purposes. ELLIS voted "Yes."

House Resolution 452. Passed House June 8, 1948: A resolution to request the Secretary of Agriculture to take action to prevent damage to valuable crops as a result of the use of the weed killer known as 2,4-D. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 5263. Passed House June 8, 1948: A bill to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to execute and deliver to present owners of certain real property quitclaim deeds to the minerals in or under such property ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 5154. Passed House June 8, 1948: A bill to extend the period within which the Secretary of Agriculture may carry out the purposes of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by making payments to agricultural producers. ELLIS voted "Yes."

S. 2137. Passed House June 8, 1948: An act to provide for the protection of potato and tomato production from the golden nematode, and for other purposes. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 6248. Passed House, June 12, 1948: The farm-price support bill to place supports of at least 90 percent of parity on hogs, poultry, eggs, wheat, corn, cotton, peanuts, rice and tobacco, and supporting nonbasic commodities on a sliding scale ranging down to 60 percent of parity for the next 2 years. In reporting this bill, the committee said the idea of approving a long-range farm program at this time was abandoned because an abnormal world demand for farm products exists now, and any program worked out under such conditions could not be expected to operate in normal times and at the present, too. The committee is continuing its hearings and studies and states it will report such a program at the proper time. In the meantime, this bill gives farmers assurance of continued price support so they can, with confidence, plan for the future, ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 2028. Passed House June 16, 1948: A bill to facilitate and simplify the work of the Forest Service, and for other purposes. ELLIS voted "Yes."

S. 1087. Passed House June 16, 1948: An act to amend section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 6935. Passed House June 16, 1948: A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes. This bill provides $33,300,000 for the Department of Agriculture, including appropriations for the agriculture remount service, forest roads and trails, and eradication of contagious diseases of animals. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 6263. Passed House June 18, 1948: A bill to provide a Federal charter for the Commodity Credit Corporation for the purpose of stabilizing, supporting and protecting farm income and prices; for assisting in the maintenance of balanced and adequate supplies of agricultural commodities, products thereof, foods, feeds, and fibers; and of facilitating the orderly distribution of agricultural commodities. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Mr. Speaker, it is agreed by all interested parties that the Eightieth Congress has done a good job in behalf of the farmers and has taken full cognizance of the fact that the farmer is the backbone of our economy and must remain secure if our country is to prosper.

We must not be misled in the consideration of farm problems by the high farm prices brought about by two wars. We must consider the long, lean years in between when the farmers' income was pitifully low.

It is my contention that the farmer should receive his prices in the market place on the basis of his investment, depreciation and labor, the same as any other businessman or worker, and this right should be safeguarded.

Great Britain Is a Cobelligerent in Holy Land War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I take it that every Member of this great House is fully aware that I am an advocate of the establishment of a stable, independent Jewish state in Palestine; that I have been grateful for the complete recognition of Israel by our Government; and that, from time to time, I have strongly criticized both our own and the British governments for their actions or lack of actions in this regard. I think I can further say that there is no Member of this House who believes that my sympathy with Israel deprecates in the slightest way my absolute loyalty and devotion to the United States.

This is preparatory to discussing two communications which, by coincidence, arrived in my daily mail at the same time.

OPPOSING VIEWS

One was a communication from one of my constituents somewhat warmly challenging the accuracy of my remarks berating Great Britain; the other was a slightly tardy issue, dated June 4, of the Palcor Middle East Bulletin confirming everything I had previously said.

My constituent, Mr. Elizur Yale Smith, who is registrar of the New York Society of the Order of the Founders and Patriots of America, refers to Great Britain as "our greatest friend and ally."

Apparently the irony of such a eulogy of Great Britain, the nation which our own Revolutionary Government had to fight twice merely to survive as a nation, is lost on Mr. Smith. I have noticed a tendency on the part of many people who live in the past to forget that the United States came into being by violence and armed revolution; that our forefathers died, and were cold and hungry, and were wounded and sick, to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. To them, the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights become only sacred relics and not living documents of human freedom and aspiration to a more abundant life for all.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I am glad that Mr. Smith wrote to me manfully and straightforwardly. While I disagree with him as to most of his assumptions, and as to his interpretations of the facts, I agree with him fully on one issue: Freedom of speech and of belief is an essential of the democratic processes. I want to preserve and protect and enlarge Mr. Smith's right to those freedoms as well as my own. He fears that I will consider him anti-Semitic because he disagrees with me; he fears in vain. Honest disagreement and criticism do not constitute anti-Semitism; they are part of the unending splendor of the democratic way of life.

CHALLENGE TO FAIRNESS

Let there be no misunderstanding. Palcor News Agency strives to be accurate, but not impartial. Palcor News Agency is registered with the Department of Justice as an agent of the Palestine Correspondence Bureau of Jerusalem. I want that made clear. But I also want it made clear that the statements published in the June 4 issue are true and accurate, to the best belief of the publishers and writers and of myself.

Mr. Smith challenges me to insert his letter, opposing my views in the RECORD. Under consent, I accept that challenge, and following his letter I insert also the text of the June 4 Bulletin. I can conceive of no better way to accentuate the differences of opinion which can arise, properly and democratically, where the press is free and we can all hold and express our views; and this I share with Mr. Smith: an enthusiastic desire to keep those freedoms here and extend them everywhere.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 14, 1948.

Hon. ARTHUR G. KLEIN,

Member of Congress, Seventeenth Congressional District, New York, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN KLEIN: As you are the Member of Congress from the district in which I live and work, I consider it my privilege under our republican form of government to criticize your public political actions. That is one of the rights our Constitution gives us.

I am a careful reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I note that every opportunity you get you clutter up the pages of it with editorials from newspapers attacking Great Britain, especially editorials from the New York Post. Alexander Hamilton would blush with shame could he see the newspaper he founded in 1801. It seems very bad taste to me for a Member of our national legislative body to keep continually handing out hate about our greatest friend and ally, Great Britain.

It is perfectly proper for a citizen, or even a legislator, to disagree with the policies of another nation and the Bill of Rights says Congress cannot interfere with free speech, but sometimes free speech is indiscreet.

Personally, I think the British made a blunder (always worse than a mistake) in the Balfour Declaration of November 2, 1917, which promised the Jews a homeland in Palestine. I am not in accord with our Government backing the Jews to establish a home there. It looks to me as though politics and votes are mixed up in it. I am very familiar with Biblical history and the history of Palestine back to the earliest known times. History seems to tell me that the Arabs have a considerable claim on the land of Canaan, as well as the Jews. Did not General Allenby capture Palestine from the Ottoman Empire on December 9, 1917, and did that not give Great Britain a mandate over it? The Balfour Declaration says that in favoring the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine "nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine," etc. Have the Jews lived up to that part of the declaration? I would say not.

Let us admit that the Jews occupied the land of Canaan about 1000 B. C., and that their single monarchy was split up into Judah and Israel, but before long the land of Canaan was invaded and conquered by other nations, the Jews losing control of it. Then, in A. D. 634–36, the Arabs came along and conquered it from the Byzantine Empire. That certainly gives the Arabs some claim to the former land of Canaan. The Indians originally owned Manhattan Island, but the Dutch came along and hoodwinked the Indians into selling it for a few beads and baubles valued at 60 Dutch guilders. The United States Government has also taken lands away from the Indians and have scattered the tribes hither and yon. What would you say if Soviet Russia now said to us, "Give Manhattan Island back to the Indians, as well as the other lands you took from them"? Wouldn't Soviet Russia be just as much within her rights in giving this advice as the United States Government has in telling Great Britain what to do with Palestine?

Naturally, the Jews would like the homeland they once occupied as the land of Canaan, and then lost by being conquered by another power; so would the descendants of Manhattan Island like their native land back. There is plenty of land on the continent of Africa where the Jews could establish a country of their own, if they can get it.

The Arabs, as I understand, accept all of the Bible, only believing their prophet had an additional and later revelation. Why is not Palestine their land? I am not for our soldiers being sent over to Palestine to fight a holy war. Many others feel the same way as I do about it.

The United States and Great Britain need each other's support more than they need the support of either the Arabs or Jews. If that fact is given its full weight in American and British policies for Palestine, a solution of the conflict there can be achieved. This is a time when American-British cooperation needs reaffirmation. Great Britain saved our life by holding the line in the early days of the Second World War. We are the two only great English-speaking nations. I am bringing out this sentiment in an article to be published in the magazine section of the Christian Science Monitor on July 3, in connection with the Declaration of Independence. I write for various newspapers and will probably speak of it in other articles.

I suppose you will accuse me of being anti-Semitic, but such is not the case, as you will see if you will read my article in the New Bedford Standard Times of April 18, 1948, titled "Early Jewish Settlers Noted in Nation's Early History." You will find that newspaper in the Congressional Library.

One day last week you published a letter in the RECORD from one of your constituents on the other side of the fence, so why don't you be fair and publish this letter in the RECORD inasmuch as you have had so much anti-British propaganda there?

Maybe you will say I am intolerant because I stick to my convictions. I have fought alongside the British in a war and so perhaps I know their viewpoint better than you do. If there be such a thing as intolerance, I think you are the intolerant one in your attitude toward the British.

You know what Voltaire said, "I do not agree with a word you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Those are the words at the top of the letters page in the New York Herald Tribune Sunday edition.

Yours sincerely,

ELIZUR YALE SMITH.

[From the Palcor Middle East Bulletin, New York, N. Y., of June 4, 1948]

BRITAIN, A BELLIGERENT IN THE HOLY LAND WAR

British guns, operated by British-trained and British-paid soldiers, under the command of British officers, are raining death on the Holy City of Jerusalem. British-led Arab Legionnaires have stormed the ancient synagogues and other historic shrines in the Jewish quarter of the old city, ignoring an appeal by the archbishop of Canterbury to spare Jerusalem.

On May 17—a scant 5 days after the departure of the British garrison from the city—Arab Legion troops, commanded by Brig. John Bagot Glubb, surrounded Jerusalem and the next day occupied part of the old city after laying down a heavy artillery barrage on the Jewish quarter and shelling Jewish districts in the new city, a communique announced officially in Amman. Brigadier Glubb toured the front and inspected his troops on May 18, an Associated Press correspondent in Jerusalem reported.

LEGION BRITISH-CONTROLLED

The Transjordan Arab Legion is a British-controlled force; it could not launch an assault without the approval of London. Furthermore, this arrangement between Transjordan and Great Britain is to continue in the future. A Foreign Office spokesman in London declared (May 18) that British officers serving with the Arab Legion would not be recalled nor would regular shipments of arms and supplies and the annual British subsidy of $8,000,000 which supports this force be discontinued unless the United Nations decides that the Arabs are acting illegally. And in the United Nations the British delegates are working every angle short of the veto to block any such resolution.

Before laying down the Mandate in Palestine the British Army turned over to the Arab Legion sufficient military stores to meet the Legion's normal demands for at least 8 months, ONA correspondent Jon Kimche reported from Tel Aviv on May 18. Two days later Kimche cabled that two British ships had unloaded heavy military equipment, including antiaircraft guns, at the Transjordanian port of Aqaba.

AID TO EGYPT AND IRAQ

But British complicity in the present Arab League war against Israel is not limited to outfitting, training and leading Abdullah's Arab Legion. Britain is also indirectly collaborating in the invasion efforts of Egypt, Iraq, and Syria. In accordance with long-standing treaties, the British arm, supply and train the armies of Egypt and Iraq. This aid is continuing despite Egyptian and Iraqi aggression in Palestine. London is also selling arms and supplies to Syria and a British military mission is operating in Saudi Arabia.

Overseas News Agency reported from Tel Aviv on May 18 that a careful scrutiny of captured Arab material and Arab war prisoners revealed that Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia are mounting their Holy Land invasion with British arms and equipment. Fully 90 percent of the Arab material captured by the Israeli forces is of British manufacture.

MADE IN BRITAIN

The Egyptian fighters and bombers raiding Israeli cities are British-made, and the bombs which killed 51 Jewish civilians and maimed 53 more in Tel Aviv's bus terminal in an Egyptian raid May 18 were British. The pilots who operate these planes were trained by Britain. Without assurance of continued British arms shipments, the armies of Egypt and Iraq could not have been launched on their Palestine adventure.

However, not content with abetting Arab aggression in Palestine directly, the British Foreign Office is also performing yeoman service for the Arab Cause at Lake Success. On May 19 Sir Alexander Cadogan told the Security Council that any attempt to determine who were the aggressors in Palestine would lead to interminable and unprofitable wrangles.

"ISRAEL DOES NOT EXIST"

So far as the state of Israel is concerned, "Britain officially does not know that it exists." New York Times Correspondent Herbert L. Matthews reported from London May 18. "One official said," Matthews continued, "that the British Government had not even considered whether to recognize Israel, since there can be no state where there are no clearly defined boundaries, no recognized government writ (charter), and no adequately functioning administration."

On May 19 in the Security Council, Sir Alexander Cadogan asserted that the partition of Palestine and the establishment of the state of Israel on the strength of the General Assembly resolution of November 29 is juridically extremely doubtful, according to a Palcor News Agency report from Lake Success. He further observed, says Palcor, that Israel was not born in strict conformity with all the provisions of the General Assembly resolution, particularly with respect to the role assigned to the Palestine Commission. Cadogan then went on to assert that if the Jews set up a state to include the Jewish areas defined in the United Nations resolution, and if the Arabs claim to have established a state covering the whole of Palestine there would be nothing legally to choose between those claims.

MANDATORY POWER OBSTRUCTS

Sir Alexander Cadogan and other British spokesmen neglected to add that the November 29 resolution was not properly implemented principally because of British obstruction and noncooperation. In its report to the United Nations General Assembly the Palestine Commission declared:

"The general policy of the mandatory power has been not to take any measure which might be construed as involving it in the implementation of the Assembly's resolution. It did not accept the provision of the resolution calling for a progressive transfer of authority to the commission, insisted on retaining undivided control of Palestine until the termination of the mandate, and informed the commission that it would not regard favorably the arrival of the commission in Palestine earlier than a fortnight before the date of termination of the mandate." (New York Times, April 14.)

REFUSE TO OPEN PORT

The British refused to honor the November 29 decision regarding the opening of the Jewish port and hinterland area for Jewish immigration by February 1, 1948, and opposed the establishment of provisional governments in the Arab and Jewish areas by April 1. They also refused to permit the formation of a Jewish militia as provided in the General Assembly's partition resolution and requested January 29 by the Palestine Commission, and prevented the commission from coming to Palestine to properly define the frontiers of the Arab and Jewish states.

However, despite deliberate British obstruction, the Jews of Palestine have implemented partition and have set up a state, which, according to neutral observers, is functioning more efficiently than the British administration in the last period of the mandate.

THWART HOLY LAND SOLUTION

Britain's attitude during the special session of the General Assembly, called to reconsider the Palestine question, has been wholly negative. Her representatives at Lake Success appeared determined to thwart any Holy Land solution unacceptable to the Arabs, and there is ample evidence that the British, who rejected American pleas to postpone evacuation of their forces from Palestine, are not at all anxious to see French or American troops—not to mention Red Army units—on Near Eastern soil. As Brigadier Glubb puts it, "Great Britain doesn't want to dominate the Arabs, but seeks to prevent any other power from doing so." (Nomad, by Robin Maugham.)

In January our Arab correspondent in the Middle East reported that, according to influential Arab circles, the British have elaborated a carefully considered plan for the solution of Arab problems, particularly with regard to Palestine. This scheme allegedly provided for the invasion of Palestine by pan-Arab forces with the Transjordan Arab Legion acting as nucleus and spearhead. "The objective of this invasion is said to be the occupation of the Arab part of Palestine plus major portions of the proposed Jewish state and the herding of the Jews into the Tel Aviv and Haifa areas." (This bulletin of January 23.)

BEVIN-CLAYTON PLAN

On April 2 this Bulletin carried a summary of a plan reportedly devised by Foreign Secretary Bevin, Brigadier P. A. Clayton, Minister of the British Embassy in Cairo, and leading Anglophile Arab politicians. This secret Bevin-Clayton scheme, reported by the Haganah Radio in a broadcast on March 12 and described by Ladislas Farago in an article appearing in the May 1948 edition of the "United Nations World," is said to envisage the following:

(a) The formation of a Jewish State is to be abandoned once and for all.

(b) No independent Arab state will be established within Palestine.

(c) Palestine will be divided among Syria, Lebanon, Transjordan, and Egypt, with Arabs and Jews in the respective territories acquiring citizenship of the countries to which they are to be annexed.

(d) King Abdullah of Transjordan relinquishes his plan for a greater Syria.

(e) The Arab League will undertake to promote the project as one best calculated to satisfy all interested Arab parties and to guarantee the elimination of Zionism as a continued threat to the unity of the Middle East.

(f) Arab armies will enter Palestine at points to be determined later so as to preclude opportunity for intervention by any international organization.

(g) Arab countries agree to sign either jointly or individually binding military treaties and alliances with Britain granting British troops the right to enter Arab countries in an emergency.

BRITISH WANT PALESTINE BASES

Information from other sources indicate that British desire for permanent bases in Palestine is responsible for the support given to Abdullah and his legion. C. L. Sulzberger, in a dispatch to the New York Times from Paris on May 19 declared:

"There are certain indications that Britain would definitely desire to retain within her zone of influence * * * bases nearer to Mediterranean shores than Kenya. One is the Negeb area of Palestine between the inland sea and the Gulf of Aqaba—an area known to contain petroleum. * * * The British would certainly prefer to have Abdullah's Arab Legion take the Negeb. Abdullah has always been well paid by and friendly to Britain." Then Sulzberger adds:

MAY SEEK COMPROMISE

"The British may well seek to encourage a compromise settlement when the battlefronts have hardened. * * * British good offices through Amman would certainly be effective. Should King Abdullah obtain the Negeb in a final settlement, it is certain the British would be accorded base facilities there if they desired them." Thus, if Israel cannot be destroyed, Bevin at least hopes to whittle down her territory.

Although ultimate British intentions in Palestine remain obscure, their present policy of backing the Arab League adventure in the Holy Land with arms and leadership, while paying lip service to the United Nations by way of mild protest notes to Cairo and other Arab capitals, may backfire. Britain today can ill afford to outrage world opinion. Furthermore, the British Foreign Office may find that it has picked a loser in Palestine, since Bevin and his Arab friends have always grossly underestimated the stamina and determination of Israel to survive. The elimination of the Jews as a factor in Palestine will require more force than Arab States can muster.

ARAB AND BRITISH AIMS CLASH

Just what chestnuts the British hope to pluck out of the Holy Land fire by strengthening the Arabs is not clear. Arab objectives do not necessarily coincide with Britain's and in most cases conflict. These Middle Eastern states accept loans and military aid from Britain, but their leaders do not aspire to remain Bevin's pawns. Arab spokesmen have indicated on various occasions that they aim at setting up an independent regional block of Near East states which would avoid foreign commitments and involvement in big power disputes.

Nationalist opinion in the Arab countries is rabidly anti-British, particularly in Egypt and Iraq, where recently a violent popular outburst forced the Iraq Government to cancel a treaty of alliance it had signed with Britain. Egypt's oft-repeated demands for British evacuation of the Sudan and the Suez bases are still being pressed and it is naive to assume that Cairo will be appeased by a strip of Palestine desert.

HAIFA REFINERY SHUTS DOWN

The economic effects of British policy in Palestine is proving disastrous to the Mediterranean countries and may ultimately hinder the European recovery program. The Haifa oil refinery, which produced about 4,000,000 tons of petroleum annually, has been forced to cease operation. An article appearing May 1 in the Economist of London reveals that "more than half of it (Haifa refinery output) was consumed on the Mediterranean shore of the Middle East, principally in Palestine and Egypt."

"In 1947 Palestine alone," asserts the Economist, "absorbed 690,000 tons, Egypt consumed over 800,000 tons, and the balance of the 1,400,000 tons consumed in the Levant was absorbed by Syria, Turkey, and Cyprus. Europe (mainly Greece, drawing—on American account) took 900,000 tons, of which 200,000 tons went to the United Kingdom. North Africa absorbed 225,000 tons, and 500,000 tons were supplied locally in shipping.

NO ALTERNATIVE AVAILABLE

"Except for small refineries at Tripoli (Lebanon) and in Egypt, neither of which meets home consumption, there is no alternative eastern Mediterranean refinery available," says the Economist. "At a moment, therefore, when the world is particularly short of refinery plants," the article continues, "a large and valuable unit is put out of commission and a large additional group of consumers must be fed from elsewhere. The situation is all the worse for Britain in that the Haifa output is largely a sterling area source of supply."

In addition to halting oil production at the Haifa refinery, British authorities drained the plant's storage tanks. ONA correspondent Jon Kimche reported from Tel Aviv on May 18 that "following instructions received from London, two ships, the tankers Red Bank and Norsia, have removed 20,000 tons of fuel oil from Haifa and have left that port's 40 oil tanks—with a storage capacity of 480,000 tons—drained to their bottoms." Kimche adds: "When the Red Bank left Haifa last week, orders were received from London to discontinue flowing further oil from the pipe line from Iraq to Haifa." Apparently, the British Government has no qualms about risking a grave oil shortage in the Mediterranean area so long as it can impose oil sanctions on Israel.

(The government of Israel has offered to guarantee the flow of oil products to the Arab states if the Arab states provide oil for the Haifa refinery, an AP dispatch from Haifa May 28 said.)

FOREIGN OFFICE CODDLES ARABS

At present the British Foreign Office is working overtime to convince the United States that the only way to deal with the Arabs is to coddle them, like spoiled children. In London, United States support for zionism is held responsible for the lack of a "fair solution" of the Palestine problem.

From London, New York Times Correspondent Herbert Matthews writes (May 20): "It is believed here—and Mr. Bevin has said as much on several occasions—that but for United States interference on the side of the Zionists * * * there would have been a fair solution of the Palestinian problem long ago." On May 22, Clifton Daniel, in a dispatch to the New York Times following the Bevin-Douglas conversation in London discloses: "He (Bevin) reportedly expressed the belief that at one time the Arabs inclined toward a truce, but shied away upon the announcement of United States recognition of the State of Israel."

CEASE-FIRE HOPES DIMMED

On May 25 Daniel reported that "the news of President Truman's projected loan to the State of Israel dropped like a bomb into Foreign Secretary Bevin's office today. * * * The foreign secretary, it is understood had previously told Ambassador Douglas of the United States that King Abdullah of Transjordan was prepared to accept a cease fire in Palestine," but now "it is believed at the foreign office that hopes for a cease fire have been dimmed although not extinguished."

Although the Arabs for years have violently opposed any compromise with the Jews in Palestine, Mr. Bevin is inclined to find them on the verge of accepting a fair solution which has not been forthcoming, he claims, because of fanatical Jewish intransigence backed by the United States. One is forced to conclude that the existence of Israel is not compatible with Mr. Bevin's idea of a fair solution and that any move in support of the Jews hinders such a solution in the Holy Land.

DENY INFLUENCE OVER ABDULLAH

Matthews, of the New York Times, reports from London on May 20 that the Foreign Office is trying to impress Washington that "Britain's alliances in the Middle East do not give this country (Britain) the right to control the foreign or military policies of the Arab countries. That type of British imperialism has gone into history, it is asserted, and Britain today feels it is in no position to order King Abdullah to do anything." Apparently the new British imperialism trains, arms, and supplies Arab armies for motives of lofty altruism and disinterested charity.

However, midnight has not yet struck. It is still not too late for Britain to restore order and stability out of the chaos and anarchy her policy has produced in Palestine. If, instead of promoting Arab aggression in the Holy Land, Bevin were to use his influence in the Middle East to uphold the United Nations decision, the cause of world peace—so vital to Britain—would be rendered a real service.

ARABS RAZE JEWISH SHRINES

The wailing wall, only remnant of the second temple and holiest Jewish shrine in the world, has been held by the Arabs since November 30, 1947. "Never since the time of the Romans," said Dr. Isaac Herzog, chief rabbi of Palestine, "have Jews been so completely cut off from the wailing wall" (New York Times, March 26, 1948).

On May 20, Arab Legion troops captured the Tiferet Israel Synagog, after having reduced it to shambles with artillery and mortars. The ancient Beit Yaacov Synagog, known as the hurva (ruin), was also blasted by legion artillery and stormed on May 27.

HOLY PLACES DESECRATED

The Jewish Agency listed the following desecration, casualties, and damage to churches and religious foundations in Jerusalem as a result of Arab attacks from May 14 to 22:

May 14: Catholic Monastery of St. Claire, belonging to the Soeurs Clarine, occupied by Arab troops and fire directed from it at Jewish positions.

May 16: Iraqis occupied the Armenian Orthodox Cathedral of St. James, and plundered the church and surrounding buildings. Arab mortar shells hit the Abyssinian Cathedral several times, damaging the building.

May 17: Arab mortar positions established in the Syrian Orthodox Church (Deir Surian) in the Armenian quarter. Mortar positions set up in the Church of St. George in the Armenian quarter.

May 18: The Anglican Cathedral of St. George shelled by Arabs from the Sheikh Jarrah quarter. The British Consul filed a strong protest.

May 19: The Monastery of Ratisbon shelled by Arab mortars. The fathers protested to the Red Cross. The Arab Legion occupied the Greek Orthodox Monastery of Mar Lias on the Bethlehem Road and used it as a base for attacks on Ramat Rahel.

May 21: The abbe of Notre Dame de France, Peres de Sion, killed by an Arab mortar bomb.

May 23: The Terra Sancta Convent damaged by direct shell hit. It was under the supervision of the International Red Cross as a refugee center.

Some Facts About REA

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PARKE M. BANTA
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BANTA. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to know that gradually, but in ever-increasing numbers, the farm homes in America are being provided with electric power and light. It is being accomplished by the locally owned and locally managed electric co-ops, now operating throughout the Nation. There are eight such co-ops serving farmers and small businesses in my congressional district. According to the information furnished to me by the Washington office of REA, these co-ops now serve approximately 22,000 consumers, and funds provided by the Eightieth Congress for the construction and extension of REA lines, will enable them to serve many thousands more.

The record of the Eightieth Congress in providing funds for REA is an impressive one. I am going to review that record briefly, Mr. Speaker, because at different times during the sessions of the Eightieth Congress, there was circulated propaganda, to the effect that persons wanting electricity, and who had signed up for it, were unable to have it because Congress had not provided the necesary money. An impartial review of the record completely refutes every such statement.

WHAT THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS PROVIDED FOR REA

Last year—fiscal year 1948—Congress provided the REA with loan funds in the sum of $400,000,000. This was done by an initial appropriation of $225,000,000, which, added to $325,000,000 left over and unexpended from the year before, meant that REA began the fiscal year—July 1, 1947—with $550,000,000 of loan funds available for use during the succeeding 12 months. Later in the year as material became more abundant, an additional $175,000,000 was provided, making available for use in the fiscal year 1948, a grand total of $725,000,000. Incidentally, this was the total amount requested by the REA.

In addition, there was appropriated for administration the sum of $5,225,000 for the fiscal year 1948, and $5,450,000 for the fiscal year 1949. Although the Washington REA office claimed this was not enough, Mr. Speaker, we all know that most of the cooperatives are well on their way administratively, and they no longer need nor desire intensive supervision from Washington.

This year—fiscal year 1949—the House appropriated REA loan funds in the sum of $400,000,000. The Washington REA office requested of the Bureau of the Budget $325,000,000. The Bureau reduced the request to $300,000,000, which was the amount recommended in the official budget, submitted to the Congress by the President. To this, the Congress added $100,000,000. Some may ask, and it is proper for them to do it, why this huge sum, with the already unprecedented backlog of unused funds. I joined with many of my colleagues in the House in urging the members of the Appropriations Committee to adopt this policy. It is justified upon the theory that unless the co-op has a loan contract with the Washington office of REA definitely earmarking a particular sum to a particular project it cannot place orders for material with firms producing such material. Recognizing the importance of rural electrification to our farmers, their need for labor-saving devices for themselves and their families, and their right to some of the comforts of living, too, I was one of the Members of Congress to express the hope that no one will be without electricity if and when the necessary materials are available for more rapid construction. By this appropriation the Congress has expressed its belief that the materials situation will improve from now on. Moreover, these REA appropriations are not down the drain. The funds are loaned to the locally owned and locally managed co-ops, and repayment, with interest, is made to the United States Treasury. The repayment record is good. Reviewing the record on repayments, I was pleased to find that no co-op in Missouri is shown to be in default or delinquent in payments of either principal or interest.

While we have doubtless provided it with more money than REA will be able to spend or perhaps allocate in full, to the local cooperatives, it is my feeling that unless the money is available for allocation, orders cannot even be placed for future delivery of materials now in short supply.

The action we have taken will not provide electricity for every farmer as soon as he wants it. It will not provide it for all who have long been subscribers. I wish it could. The job is too big for that. Much will depend upon where the farmers are, who are not yet served. Much will depend upon the decisions of the management of the respective co-ops, and upon their ability and diligence in finding materials and labor for the execution of their plans. Moreover, all plans must be approved by the Washington REA office, and much will depend upon the plans each local co-op submits, as to whether they will receive approval, and in this proper timing of the application for the loan as well as the skill employed in its preparation, may count for something.

The Congress can only provide the money for the loans. The rest is up to REA. Where the lines are built and when, is not the business of Congress, but of these locally owned and managed business enterprises, subject, of course, to planning which will meet the approval of the Administrator of REA.

MATERIALS IN SHORT SUPPLY AND WHY

The Washington office of REA as well as the managers of the local electric co-ops have repeatedly stated that materials are in short supply. This we know to be the fact. As of March 8, 1948, REA had on hand almost $400,000,000 allocated (that is earmarked) for certain projects, but not used, and in addition it had approximately $62,000,000 which had not been loaned or allocated. It was shortage of material that contributed chiefly to this backlog of allocated but unused money. This short supply of material may continue so long as the executive branch of our Government insists upon exporting it to foreign countries.

Reports of the Department of Commerce, which licenses all exporters, indicate that wire, generators, magnetos, batteries, boxes, insulation, metal conduits, transformers, sockets, fuses, lighting fixtures, and parts of all kinds have been and are being exported to all parts of the world, and some of it to Communist Russia. There are some of us in the Congress who protest against the exportation of the things which our own constituents and our own people need here at home, and some of us will continue to protest until such time as our own people are provided for.

In the meantime, it is sufficient to point to the record of the Congress to find that the people's elected representatives, at least a substantial portion of them, are staunch supporters of REA. And the Eightieth Congress has the best record of all in this regard. In 2 years the Eightieth Congress voted $800,000,000 of loan funds for REA, 42 percent of the total amount voted in 15 years of REA's history. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have had a part in providing this loan fund for the extension of the REA program. It is my hope that every farmer in my district, and every farmer in the Nation for that matter, may have the advantage of adequate electric power at the earliest possible moment, and I shall at all times support legislation which appears to be helpful to accomplish this.

Because it may be interesting to compare the record of the Eightieth Congress with the record of previous Congresses in providing REA loan funds, the following is a record of funds voted each year since the beginning of the program:

REA funds voted by Congress

Fiscal year:
1935–36	$13,928,288
1937	46,500,000
1938	30,000,000
1939	140,000,000
1940	40,000,000
1941	100,000,000
1942	100,000,000
1943	10,000,000
1944	20,000,000
1945	25,000,000
1946	300,000,000
1947	250,000,000
1948	400,000,000
1949	400,000,000
Total	1,875,428,288

The Future of the Republic of Israel

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave, I insert as an extension of my remarks the following address delivered by Mr. Leon Gellman, president of the Mizrachi Organization of America, at the twenty-eighth annual national Mizrachi convention in New York:

The Jewish people of the Republic of Israel do not relish fighting a war which has been forced upon them. But even more grievous do they find the so-called cease-fire arrangement which, it is becoming increasingly apparent, is being implemented not for the purpose of putting a cessation to hostilities, but rather for strengthening the enemies of Israel and bolstering their positions.

Bevin's England has emerged from Palestine drenched with shame. Wherever the British lion has thrust his foot there he has remained. But only from the land of Israel has the lion been thoroughly routed. That is why Bevin rages with fury and wrath. The British designs against Israel guised by seemingly noble proposals of "cease-fire" and "truce" have deceived no one. They cannot uproot the state of Israel nor the Government of Israel, for these are firmly established realities; therefore, they now finagle with the most perfidious diplomatic devices to reduce the area of the Jewish State, to tear away the entire Negev, which they will present to their vassals, the Arabs, or perhaps retain for their own military purposes.

The greatest danger confronting the Jewish people is not a fighting war, but rather the latest "truce device" which the British Foreign Office has concocted and in which these masters of deceit are so intensely interested. Jealous of the "vastness" of the Jewish State which has now been shrunken to one-eighth of the Holy Land area, they strive relentlessly to carve up Israel still further.

For the Jewish people the next few weeks will be the most critical and decisive. Jews will have to fortify themselves with tact, logic, patience, and stubbornness in order to prevent their being snared in a political trap which is being set by Bevin's Foreign Office and our naive friends in the State Department. The Jewish people cannot afford to compromise on another handful of land in the state of Israel. It is generally conceded that had there been less compromises in the recent past, had there been a more firm political approach on the part of Zionist leadership, much of the present tragedy could have been averted.

The future of Jerusalem is more confused than ever before. Jews the world over have found a bitter pill to swallow in the decision of the United Nations which has taken Jerusalem out of the jurisdiction of Israel and transformed her into an international island. Under no circumstances, however, will the Jewish people permit Abdullah to reign over the Holy City. Any attempt to foist his rule upon Jerusalem will be fought to the bitter end.

It is erroneous to believe that with the establishment of the Republic of Israel the Zionist movements in America have ended their function or must develop a new orientation. Now, as before, American Zionists must continue their endeavors to help relieve the heavy financial burdens which the young Republic of Israel will incur in providing immigration facilities for the hundreds of thousands of Jewish refugees and tens of thousands of orphaned Jewish children still cursed with homelessness in a hostile world. Despite the gain of taxes and loans, Israel will be faced with tremendous budgetary problems and American Zionists will have to become the hinterland, furnishing financial aid, investing in new industries, and launching building projects for the homeless.

The new Jewish State will give much to the Jews in the diaspora; it will give them pride, dignity, spiritual wealth, and cultural treasures. Therefore, there can be no question of curtailing Zionist efforts; on the contrary, Zionist endeavors must perforce be broadened, strengthened, and developed.

For the World Mizrachi movement the tasks have actually just begun. With the Jewish state a fact, Mizrachi must now strive with every means to influence the development of the state along truly Jewish, truly religious-prophetic lines. It is a heartening encouragement for religious Zionists to learn that through their influence the Israeli government in Tel Aviv has just proclaimed the Jewish Sabbath and all Jewish holy days and festivals to be national holidays. But our maximum program is far from fulfillment, and until the spirit of Torah and prophetic Judaism suffuses the entire framework of life in Israel we must continue to labor for realization of religious Zionist goals. Therefore, we need not develop a new orientation, but rather continue working for the old Mizrachi principles for which we have always struggled.

Similarly must we continue our program for strengthening Judaism in America and in other diaspora countries. Our greatest pride, yet our greatest challenge in America, is the Mizrachi National Education Committee which has so magnificently begun training a new generation of religious Jewish children in the Nation-wide Mizrachi all-day school system. Through this excellent channel we must continue developing a flourishing, dynamic Jewish civilization in America. And in Europe, we must not for one moment overlook the much-needed relief work among our sorely tried brethren, which we are conducting through the Mizrachi relief bureau in Paris, and through the Central Orthodox Committee of the Joint Distribution Committee, which we have helped organize and develop.

We must help our brothers and sisters meet the major challenge of the hour; emerging victorious on the military fronts. We must continue our support of the Haganah. We must not rest until Israel is made secure, and until the hundreds of thousands of Jewish men and women in Europe's DP camps find their home, their peace, their future in the land of Israel. We must earnestly consider inaugurating a full-scale housing project for these unfortunate human beings who soon will begin streaming into the land of their fathers. We, the hinterland, must begin now providing roofs and hearths for their harassed bodies and tormented spirits.

As the first major project of the American Mizrachi movement, supporting the embattled men, women, and children of Israel, it is my happy privilege to announce that on Sunday, June 27, the religious Zionists of the Greater New York area with the cooperation of the Keren Hayesod (Palestine Foundation Fund) and with the sincere support of thousands of New Yorkers, will send the first Mizrachi shipload of basic food necessities to Israel. This is a significant indication to the enemies of Israel that the peoples of the world, the fair-minded man and woman of the street who are tired of diplomatic schemes and the corruption of justice in high places, will find their own means of supporting those who fight for freedom and the democratic rights of man. This Mizrachi food shipment is but the first of a fleet which the American Mizrachi movement hopes to send to the Republic of Israel.

This annual national convention, at which is assembled the foremost leaders of the religious Jewish community of America, conveys its heartiest greetings, blessings for victory and peace to the President, the Cabinet, and the Parliament of the heroic Republic of Israel. May the prophecy be fulfilled that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation and learn war no more"—and that "out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord out of Jerusalem * * *"

A Letter From Prague

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LEMKE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, many innocent victims who think they prefer the Russian form of government to ours. They have been fed on false propaganda. Stalin, the liquidator, has been deified. They have been given glowing pictures of Russia—a land where all are supposedly equal, socially and economically.

Yet, in reality, Russia is not a communistic state. It is governed by dictators and liquidators—murderers. Under the Russian system, you can kick the person that is lower in the gutter than you are, but you dare not criticize anyone above you. There is no social or economic equality. There is no freedom of speech, thought, or action.

The best way to educate these innocent victims that they are on the wrong road—on the road to the place where it never gets cold rather than on the road to Paradise—is to have them go to Russia or its satellite states and have them stay there for a few months. They will undoubtedly then see the light.

To show you what the situation is in Czechoslovakia, I am inserting in my remarks a letter received by a friend of mine who has a nephew in Prague. You will note that he has carefully deleted all possible identification. That, alone, speaks louder than words. Here is a translation of the letter:

MAY 6, 1948.

ESTEEMED GRACIOUS LADY: Your nephew, ——— ———, of Prague, ———, who is my legal representative, has entrusted to me (the task) to write to you from this country and to describe somewhat our situation in Czechoslovakia. I will attempt to picture how things are with us, with a prayerful request to you to destroy this letter after you have read it so that it might not become public and cause me unpleasantness.

Communist dictatorship rules our country, the entire nation fears to speak freely, as free (adverse) speech is reported to the police. It is even worse than during the German regime. There is nothing one can purchase, adults can get no milk or butter, everything has to be obtained by devious (illegal) means; textiles also are not to be obtained. As I was leaving for ——— there was no meat at all, and housewives are in utter despair.

——— does not wish to write to you about the over-all situation, since all letters from Czechoslovakia and into Czechoslovakia are censored.

Our President is ill and is compelled to sign whatever is submitted for his signature; he is not in Prague, but in Segimov Usti, his out-of-town residence. All power is in the hands of the Communist Party, and that dictates unceasingly. This month we have the elections, and I am glad I am here in ——— and not there.

Before I left I talked with ———, who was greatly distressed over his position—he was forced to step down to make way for a certain Communist; his villa, ———, near Prague, also is to be confiscated for socialistic purposes.

I (———) can tell you sincerely that all business transactions today are at a standstill (scarcity of raw materials, etc.).

The Communist Party has nationalized everything—trade, industry—and so we work from bad to worse, and all of us will become veritable beggars.

I hope I have at least partially described everything; but if you wish to know something more in detail, please write me at the address given below. In conclusion, I pass on to you the greetings of your esteemed family in Prague.

With respectful regards (literally kiss the hand).

Best of Luck, Governor Dewey

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH A. GAMBLE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent of the House, I insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the attached editorial from the Daily Times, published at Mamaroneck, N. Y., June 14, 1948, entitled "Best of Luck, Governor Dewey":

BEST OF LUCK, GOVERNOR DEWEY

If it be true, as they say in politics, that the home folks know a man the best, then the delegates from the other States to the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia next week should be informed as often and as emphatically as possible that Thomas E. Dewey stands high with the voters of the Empire State.

Governor Dewey has reduced taxes; he has increased State fiscal aid to municipalities; he has liberalized welfare and relief administration while weeding out waste and extravagance; he has as executive worked for 6 years now harmoniously with the legislative branch of State government and few, if any, of the laws he has advocated have been held unconstitutional by the judicial branch.

It is difficult to pick out any one particular field in which the Governor has been more adept than in others. But if we were asked to select his outstanding achievement in State government, we would answer that it has been his proven ability to surround himself with capable, efficient, entirely honest assistants. Much of the success of his two administrations, naturally, is due to these members of his cabinet, but credit for their selection goes wholly to himself. Therefore, what they achieve redounds directly to his personal credit.

Further, we think it is noteworthy, and we hope delegates from other States are so informed, that Governor Dewey holds fundamental views with regard to government. A public official, he believes, is the servant and not the master; he does not look down upon those who elected him, but rather up to them as his employers. Such views, in sharp contradiction to those which characterized the New Deal administration, are surely worthy of stress.

To be practical about the coming campaign, let delegates to the Philadelphia convention from other States bear in mind that the election of a President hinges heavily upon the candidate's ability to carry the largest State of the Union.

After more than a generation of Democratic governors at Albany, Mr. Dewey won in 1942 over the combined opposition of the Democratic and Labor Party forces, and then repeated in 1946 by the greatest majority ever accorded a governor of this State, and, we imagine, of any other State. That is what the voters of New York think of Governor Dewey and that is the best illustration of his realistic value to his party as its nominee this year.

So, Governor Dewey, as you leave for Philadelphia, we wish you well. As a vigorous campaigner against crime, as an experienced administrator of government upon a large scale, you have earned recognition not only from your party but from your country at large.

We in Westchester, with the rest of the State, stand behind you as our proven representative of good government, now qualified to advance from the second most important public job in the United States to the most important, the Presidency.

Hon. Albert W. Hawkes, of New Jersey

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement in tribute to our colleague the Honorable ALBERT W. HAWKES, of New Jersey.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR HAWKES

Mr President, on June 19, 1948, a very dear friend and colleague, ALBERT W. HAWKES, made his valedictory address before the Senate of the United States.

His remarks, as always, were rich with the wisdom gleaned from experience.

Senator HAWKES was born on November 20, 1878. He worked his way up in business until he became president of the Congoleum-Nairn Co., Inc., and director in many business concerns. His outstanding ability was recognized by his being elected to the presidency of the United States Chamber of Commerce. In 1942, he was elected to the Senate of the United States from New Jersey.

I remember well the first time I saw Senator HAWKES. He had just entered his office in the Senate Office Building when I called on him, introduced myself, and told him how glad I was to see him representing the great State of New Jersey. I remember his genuine cordiality and the friendly greeting I received.

I remember, too, with gratitude the many kindnesses that he later showed to me. He was always kind and generous toward me when he visited his old business friends back in the State of Wisconsin.

Mrs. Wiley and I always remember Mrs. Hawkes and their daughter. They, too, have always been genuine.

ALBERT HAWKES has not simply been a businessman. He has had a grasp of fundamentals in government. He has constantly stressed the need for the Government to get rid of waste, bureaucrats, and leftist thinkers. He has seen the imperative need of making sure that American enterprise is not hamstrung by regulations and excessive taxation. He has known the importance of maintaining and sustaining American ingenuity and enterprise. He has felt that too much Government interference would lead only to disintegration.

While he has been a man of large experience in business, he has never forgotten the common man and the common touch. He has recognized that difficulties in management and labor could not be eradicated by legislative enactment, but only by understanding and fair and honest treatment by each party of the other.

He has had some very strong convictions on the subject of communism and state socialism. He has felt that they had no place in the American economy.

He saw the importance of maintaining balance in Government—the balance envisioned by the founding fathers. He has constantly preached the need for cooperation and the getting rid of bigotry and the like, and has acted upon his own beliefs.

In his voting here in the Senate, Senator HAWKES has always shown a great independence and a courage of his convictions. He has not thought in terms of political expediency or in terms of satisfying pressure groups but rather he has thought of the general welfare and has acted in accordance with his conscience.

ALBERT HAWKES came up the hard way. He began as an office boy and clerk, handled sales, got acquainted with people, overcame obstacles and solved problems. He has stressed that the American system was not simply a profit system, but a profit-and-loss system; that the philosophy which taught men to lean on Government was a debilitating philosophy.

ALBERT HAWKES has liked to quote Lincoln. In physique he is tall and slender like Lincoln. He has a sense of humor like Lincoln and he has a deep strain of religion like Lincoln.

The experience that Senator HAWKES has had in the Senate will only add another page to a life that is rich with many accomplishments and experiences. This acquaintanceship with government will only make him more fit to carry on. While he is nearly 70 years of age, he does not really appear to have arrived at three score years and ten. He is physically strong, mentally alert, and ready for the next venture.

We are sure that he will have many more years of active life and fine accomplishments in front of him. We say to our friend, "Happy voyage. We will always be glad to see you."

Protect America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. HARRY McGREGOR
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I firmly protest the action of the President and those in executive authority in their attempt to lower the tariffs on certain articles being shipped into this country. This program means that the American farmer, American labor, and American industry will be forced to compete with the low-wage labor rate and low production costs existing in foreign countries. As an example, the glass and pottery industries of this country would be forced to close their doors if foreign glass and pottery are allowed to be imported without an adequate protective tariff.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the lowering of tariff rates would force American agriculture, industry, and labor to compete with other nations that have not recognized individual rights, and that do not have a living wage rate established, and where living conditions are not on a par with this country. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I will oppose any procedure that will attempt to put the American people on a lower standard of living, such as seems to prevail in some other countries. As I have stated on the floor of this Congress many, many times, we must take definite action to protect our American people against the inroads of products imported from foreign nations which have by comparison a substandard for living- and production-wage rates. Let us recognize and protect the rights and living conditions of our own people.

The Free and Independent Republic of Israel

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave I am extending my remarks to include the address of Aubrey S. Eban, Israeli delegate to the United Nations, delivered at the anual banquet of the Mizrachi Organization of America and broadcast over radio station WMCA in New York:

We are gathered together at a high moment in the history of our people and in the annals of international statesmanship. The spirit and civilization of Israel which have contributed so much to the thought and spirit of mankind, are to be embodied in free political and social institutions on a level of equality with all other nations in the human family. And the manner in which this came to pass befits the dignity of the event itself. For let us recall in what circumstances the Jews of Palestine on the 14th of May set their hand to the declaration of their independence. They were besieged and invaded. They stood almost entirely alone. They had few elements of organized military strength. They had no reason to expect international recognition for their act. Indeed, they were menaced by the prospect of international repression. Meanwhile, five armies, sustained by the equipment and alliance of a great military power, stood poised on their frontiers ready to swoop violently upon them and sweep them away.

It was in these conditions that the representatives of the Jewish people, affirming their faith in divine providence and in their national destiny, established themselves on the soil from which their Nation had sprung, as a free and independent republic. This was not an ordinary rational act arising from any cold calculation of balance between advantage and danger. For evidently, we are not a rational people. Rational men have their place in the world, I suppose. But their place is not amongst the liberators of nations. The liberation of a people, after centuries of suffering and ceaseless quest, is an act of faith rising up in defiance of cautious logic. No wonder that the spectacle of this tiny republic defending itself against overwhelming aggression has captured the sentiment and imagination of the liberal world.

Yet, although this renewal of Israel's independence is primarily an act of faith, it has its deep foundations in the hard soil of contemporary political facts, for Israel's statehood is no more than the due title of what Palestine Jewry had already come to be—a mature society, complete and fully articulated in all the functions and responsibilities of a state; a community whose towns and villages, industry and agriculture, schools and academies, science and art, language and tradition, associations and loyalties—were all distinctive to itself, were all the product of its native personality. It had long been incongruous for a people such as this to live under a regime alien to its spirit and aspirations, and the ordinary laws of political nature cried out for its immediate emancipation.

Moreover, Israel's independence was necessary for the normal relation of the Jewish society to its Arab environment. In a quarter of a century all the Arab peoples had advanced from tutelage to sovereign independence. One community alone in the Middle East was not independent or free. The question which presented itself to the conscience of the world was whether the Jews of Palestine were so inferior socially, culturally, and politically to the nomad Bedouin of Transjordan, to the tribesmen of Jebel Druze, to the serfs of medieval Yemen, to the illiterate peasant of Egypt, that they alone of all the near eastern peoples must not be allowed to take their destiny into their own hands and carve out their future in the image of their special culture and tradition.

When we establish a Jewish state, we, therefore, create the objective conditions of Arab-Jewish cooperation, for such cooperation does not begin to be a prospect until the two peoples face each other on the level of political equality. The Jews of Israel are willing to be the equal partners and allies of the Arab world. They will never be its subject. History will not tolerate for Israel a status which even the more primitive societies around them have long outgrown.

Yet a more compelling motive for Jewish statehood came from Europe, where the fugitives of terror and holocaust wait patiently across the months for a chance to become citizens of a Jewish society in which their capacities and ideals would be fully at home. The impact of their plight upon the human conscience—their tragic, but glorious quest for national freedom stretching across the sea of years between the Struma and the Exodus, have created in the minds of the international community a sense of inseparable connection between the Palestine problem and the most profound humanitarian issue of our time.

Out of the great complex of motives and circumstances the state of Israel has arisen and now exists. It will survive. This new republic is no mean heritage. It is not a heritage to be lightly abandoned. It will not be surrendered at the mere smell of danger. The independent state of Israel is a permanent and immutable part of international life for this and all future generations. And when we declare Jewish statehood to be permanent and immutable we define the starting point of our political attitude today. Arab leaders still profess to speak of the Jewish state as a plan, a program which can either be realized or set aside. They hope to undo the accomplished fact. They would like the chicken to return to its egg. Mr. President, what a grotesque and sinister illusion. Can anybody believe that a state established by this great union of historic compulsions can somehow still be overthrown? Does anybody in his senses seriously believe that the Jewish people has striven for this precious prize for two millenia in order that, once nobly gained, it will be relinquished, in obedience to a sordid, illegal, incompetent, and entirely unsuccessful campaign of aggression? What sort of people do they think we are? Do they imagine that they can gain at the conference table the fruits of a victory which they failed to achieve in the battlefield—a battlefield of their own making, from which most of them have fallen back in disorder and disgrace?

As we enter upon a period of vital political negotiations, it is my duty to express as clearly as I can the principles which guide the Government of Israel at this time. If, as we hope, the invading Arab states want peace with Israel, they can have it. If they want war, they can have that, too. But whether they have peace or war, they will have it with the state of Israel. The Government of Israel will gladly discuss with the United Nations mediator the prospect of a peaceful relationship between independent Israel and its neighbors. But it will not discuss with anybody any proposal which undermines its independence or integrity. It will, therefore, not consider any proposals for confederation or any manner of cooperation resting upon any compulsions or upon anything except free relations of "sovereign equality." Israel hopes that its neighbors will choose the essential truth and honor of a lasting peace. But if, unhappily, they choose aggression, Israel will resist it, and the resistance will be no less determined or successful than in the recent inspiring weeks when the beleaguered little republic swept the invader from its frontiers and took the war into the very territory from which the aggression was launched. Israel asks nothing of the Arab states. It demands none of their territory. It seeks no limitation of their sovereign rights. Making no such claims upon them, Israel admits of no such claims which they can lawfully make upon it. If the Arabs, as the Charter requires, recognize and accept the full and exact judgment of the General Assembly, Israel stands ready to cooperate on that basis. If, however, the Arabs and their allies prefer to base a settlement on the arbitrament and equilibrium of war, then they must accept the consequences of that war. And those consequences find Israel in complete control of all its territory, of western Galilee, Jaffa, the road to Jerusalem, in complete freedom and unsought separation from the bulk of its own Arab citizens. If the Arabs put their faith in the de facto results of invasion, then we, too, shall take our stand upon the positions and liberties which we have wrested from the aggressor.

We are now in a position where for us to return to the provisions of the November resolution after having been attacked by aggression would represent the greatest possible act of political and territorial concession which we can make. The November plan can be the basis of agreement but only as soon as the Arabs accept that resolution and recognize the sovereignty of Israel, as Israel recognizes their sovereignty without reserve. We certainly do not feel bound to reward aggression with any face-saving devices, reducing our patrimony below the level which the General Assembly has laid down. The Charter of the United Nations, with its insistence on the independence and integrity of all states is the only basis upon which Israel's relations with its neighbors can be laid. The Charter forbids member States to make the overthrow of a neighboring State the condition of a peaceful settlement. When we turn to a map of the Near East and see that vast unbroken succession of Arab sovereignties, the idea that an independent Israel is a threat to the Arab world becomes visibly absurd. When we contemplate the social and economic ills of that stricken region, we have complete certainty that Israel, by its exertion and example, can contribute abundantly with enrichment and development.

It is surely the duty of the international community to summon the Arabic-speaking world, the freedom of which is amply secured, to ways of cooperation with an independent Israel. When Israel enters the United Nations as a full member, a fitting milestone will have been reached, both in its own career and in that of the international organization itself. For Israel is both a national and a universal ideal; and it is in the prophetic tradition of Israel—looking to the day when "Nation shall not lift up the sword against nation and there shall not again be war"—that the concept of international cooperation has its original roots.

Communist Subversive Activities in the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. SMATHERS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I would like to insert into the Appendix of the RECORD three articles from the Miami Daily News. In these articles a young American girl tells how she became a member of the Young Communist League back in 1941—and how she was reconverted to democracy. Hers is the story of insidious methods by which communism seeks to undermine our way of life and defeat our democratic ideals. It is a story which should be brought to the attention of everyone who thinks that the subversive activities of the Communists in this country are neither extensive nor dangerous.

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the first of a series of three articles in which Claire Brandler, formerly of Miami Beach, tells how she became a member of the Young Communist League here in 1941. She describes the activities of the league up until the time, in 1943, she "rejected the commissar for all time.")

(By Claire Brandler)

In September 1941 I had just passed my seventeenth birthday, and I was faced with an unusual and delicate problem. I was about to begin functioning as editor-in-chief of the Miami Beach High School newspaper, the Beach Breeze, and I was also about to begin functioning, secretly, as a member of the Young Communist League. This was the youth section of the Communist Party.

My delicate problem was to take advantage of my newspaper position to advance the Communist Party line, without going far enough to be discovered and ousted from the editorship.

The events leading up to this situation began some 8 months earlier, when I first became involved with the Communists through their web of "front" organizations. From the fertile fields of these front groups, whose alleged programs are usually hard for any liberal to oppose, the seasoned party members select the most promising raw material for specialized cultivation.

Those responding to the cultivation are further involved in the maze of the Communist fronts, until, hardly realizing where they are being led, they find themselves at the doors of the Communist Party itself.

My own introduction to the Communist Party closely followed this procedure. I was curious about an organization called the American Youth Congress. I made inquiries, located its Miami members, and attended one of their meetings. At this meeting a report was given on recent national activities of the Youth Congress, with details of the Washington mass meeting which occurred a few weeks before.

Hundreds of young delegates had stood in the rain outside the White House and booed President Roosevelt for his speech against Nazi aggression. I was particularly impressed by the professional conduct of the young man who made the report. There was a complete lack of confusion and the young people there seemed to have a well-defined and readily expressed opinion on every possible subject. They were the most self-assured group of boys and girls I had ever seen.

At the conclusion of this meeting, after speaking to several of the people there, I was invited to attend a meeting of the American Peace Mobilization.

At the Peace Mobilization gathering I found most of the same people whom I had seen at the earlier youth meeting. The few exceptions consisted mainly of several adults. At this meeting I heard discussion and plans relating to a tremendous peace offensive to be spearheaded by this so-called Peace Mobilization.

The plans consisted mainly of efforts to raise funds for the purpose of sending delegates to a national meeting in New York. At this New York meeting Nation-wide activities would be organized to keep America from joining in the war against Hitler.

I later discovered that the Stalin-Hitler pact was responsible for these intensive anti-war activities. This pact had established a close working friendship between Germany and the Soviet Union, while at the same time Germany was at war with England and France. It is therefore easy to see why the Communists and their front organizations were so loud and expressive in their demands for peace.

Russia's foreign policy required that America remain neutral, and the American Communists were doing their best to see that neutrality was kept.

The Miami Beach Peace Mobilization prepared parties and other money-raising stunts to get funds for the delegates. Inasmuch as peace seemed a worthy cause, I joined in enthusiastically, and after several weeks of activity I was delighted to find myself mentioned as a delegate to the New York meeting.

I was 16 years old at the time and my parents were very unenthusiastic about permitting me to make an automobile trip to New York in the company of people they knew nothing about.

I explained my problem to members of the group and they suggested that the director of the local APM visit my parents and try to persuade them to let me go.

Charles Doraine, whom I later knew as Charles Smolikoff, was introduced to me as the director of the Miami chapter of the American Peace Mobilization, and it was he who came to my home and spoke to my mother, convincing her to let me make the trip.

In the months that followed, I learned that this man, Charles Doraine (Smolikoff) was a key behind-the-scenes leader of all activities in the Miami area inspired or sponsored by the Communist Party.

The trip to New York was made in the company of two other girls and two men. Although I had no idea at the time, these people were Communist members whom I saw often after I joined. In Jacksonville we stopped for the night and met a large group of people who arranged food and sleeping accommodations for us.

In the evening we all attended a meeting of the Jacksonville APM. I later found out that most of these Jacksonville people were also Communists.

The New York meeting was held April 5 and 6 at the Mecca Auditorium. Leading speakers were VITO MARCANTONIO, American Labor Party Congressman from Manhattan's east Harlem district, and John P. Davis, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress (a well-known Communist-front organization).

Paul Robeson, famous Negro singer, also appeared on the program. MARCANTONIO made an impassioned isolationist speech, and after bragging of his lone vote in Congress against the national defense program, he concluded with the statement that "One man with courage is a majority."

This concept puzzled me, since it seemed at variance with my basic ideas of democracy, but it was only later that I learned this attitude of hero worship is deeply ingrained in the Communist psychology.

In addition to the publicized speakers there were many small conferences and numerous parties, all aimed at cultivating innocents like myself. Much money was obviously spent in the conduct of the meeting, and everything was carried out very lavishly, but the total effect was rather unimpressive.

It was too machine made, too standardized and impersonal. I sensed this even though I had never before attended any Communist-front mass meetings.

Upon my return to Miami I was deluged with literature of all descriptions, and once more involved in a steady round of meetings and parties. The general emphasis was wholly on peace efforts.

Imagine my surprise when, on June 23, the day after Hitler attacked the Soviet Union, I was told that the Peace Mobilization had disbanded.

I failed to understand why a German attack on Russia affected peace sentiment in the United States, but it was quite obvious that the now former members of the APM thought it did.

They considered an attack on the Soviet Union as an attack on themselves, and they wanted to plunge into the war against Germany as soon as possible.

I also found it incredible that an organization could disband without discussion with its membership, and without even informing them of the intention. This was especially amazing in an organization which had held a meeting of several thousand interested delegates only a few months earlier.

But apparently peace in America was no longer a vital concern now that the Soviet Union was in the war.

For several months I occupied myself with other affairs and had very little contact with any of the people in the defunct APM. But late in the summer I was swept up in a furor of attentions from Young Communist League members. One girl devoted almost an entire month attempting to convince me that the actions of the Communist Party were both logical and just.

Her persistent efforts and her hammering away at the weaker points in my objections finally broke down my resistance. I became more involved than ever before, and before I realized what was happening, I found all my thoughts and interests centering around the Communist Party.

The girl's family ran a boarding house on Euclid Avenue, Miami Beach, and it was here that I began to make my second home. At this house I had the opportunity of renewing my acquaintance with Charles Doraine, although he always kept very much in the background.

I still had misgivings about the Communist approach, but they seemed to be the only people in Miami who were doing anything about many injustices which I felt were important, so I finally joined the Young Communist League in September 1941.

I learned very quickly that the Communists' main interest in me was based on the fact that I was going to function as editor of the high-school paper.

I was told that my major responsibility in the Young Communist League would be to make the most of my position to advance party propaganda in the newspaper and among my contacts without permitting anyone to develop any reasonable suspicions about me. I was in for a touchy job.

REDS' HOLD ON CONVERTS IS EXPLAINED

(By Claire Brandler)

During my first days as editor of the high-school newspaper I readily discovered it would be far easier than I thought to advance the Communist Party line. This was because of the common lack of interest among most students in international political issues. Since it was precisely in this field that the Communists wished to promote their viewpoint, it was not very hard to maneuver a relatively free hand on the editorial page.

The Communist Party at this time (September 1941) was extremely interventionist. The Soviet Union had been attacked by Germany 3 months before, and the sole aim of American Communists was to push the United States into war to help Russia.

Prowar sentiment was prevalent at this time among many Americans outside of the Communist Party, and I was thus able to be as prowar as I wished without anyone questioning my motives.

However, even when my views were not in accord with popular opinion I was still able to say pretty much what I chose because of the general preoccupation with problems closer to home.

A very clear example of the result of this apathy can be seen in the fate of a high-school discussion program held by radio station WIOD each Sunday at this time. As editor of the school paper I was invited to join the group, and I quickly found they were having a hard time interesting boys and girls in coming down to a broadcast on Sunday mornings.

I was easily able to supply the program with a group of outspoken and opinionated young people who had no objections whatsoever to the inconvenient hour. In no time at all almost the entire high-school branch of the Young Communist League was airing its opinions each Sunday.

I saw this happen time after time, and it became quite obvious that the Communists or any other unrepresentative minority could wield influence far out of proportion to their numbers because of the lack of participation by sincere democratic Americans in political and community affairs.

The Communists are loud in their lip service to democracy, and they are among the first to protest any infringement of their rights in a democratic society, yet it is quickly apparent to a new recruit that they do not practice what they preach.

Their organizational plan is based on a doctrine worked out by Lenin in 1903. This plan was called democratic centralism. In theory it meant combining democratic control by the membership with complete unity in action. This sounded fine, but in practice it was all centralism and very little democracy.

The lowest unit in the Communist set-up is the branch (sometimes referred to as cell), which is composed of a small group whose daily work is closely allied. I belonged to the high-school branch; there was also a university branch and a working branch.

My branch was the largest and most active, since we had the least outside responsibilities. Each branch elects a leader who represents it at a city committee composed of all branch leaders. But this is as far as the democratic elective process goes.

The next rank in the hierarchy is the section organizer, appointed by the national office in New York. The south Florida section organizer of the Communist Party at that time was Charles Doraine (Smolikoff).

He was responsible to Al Trainor, the State director for Florida, who in turn was responsible to a regional director, and so on, up to the top leadership of the national committee of the Communist Party.

One of the major objectives of the Communists is to quickly indoctrinate new members in the fundamentals of the party's theology. Surprisingly enough, very little time was devoted to Marxist theory. Foremost on the list is discipline. It is hard for an outsider to realize the extent of the discipline which the Communists work under.

For example, it was quite a shock for me to realize that the boys and girls I had considered my good friends on an individual and personal basis were in reality a tightly knit group of people whose every gesture of friendship was carefully planned with a particular end in mind. And they never slipped up in their roles.

Although discipline is one of the major sources of strength for the Communists, it is by no means their chief reservoir. They have developed the art of organization to a point where it is no longer a party which they belong to, but rather a family.

Intense social life and strong emotional ties are developed. This is done as part of a plan, the result of which is to so involve people that their entire life is dependent upon the party.

They have their friends in the party, they usually marry in the party, the party employs many of them (through its front groups, union, etc.) and when they die it is the party, and the Daily Worker, who mourn for them. A party member of long standing is no longer a political convert but rather a member of a large and emotionally integrated family. To think of leaving the party to many would be worse than death.

In fact, the party considers that anyone who does leave it, is, to all intents and purposes, dead. Old friends suddenly do not know you in the street; husbands or wives discover the party means more to them than their marriage, and divorce sometimes follows; usually loss of a party-derived job with no references leads to lengthy unemployment, and always there is the inevitable slander, insults, and name-calling as only the Communists know how.

Young converts to the party are quickly involved in this trap, and this comes far before any political education.

In return for the intense devotion which the party demands, members enjoy a sense of deep satisfaction and nobility. Some even develop martyr complexes and go out of their way to make great personal sacrifices for the party.

Altogether it is a type of attachment almost impossible to break with, and certainly not based on calm political conclusions. Realizing this helps explain some of what being a Communist means.

The Communist Party is a great believer in the power of the press. It places great emphasis on its literature program, and each branch usually has one person designated as "lit agent." When I became active in the Young Communist League they were pushing a 5-cent edition of the Soviet Power, by Hewlett Johnson, the dean of Canterbury.

The dean's name clothed the book in respectability, although he actually, I later learned, is a relatively minor official in the English church. It is the Archbishop of Canterbury who is the important figure, and the Communists took advantage of the similarity in names.

This book was emphasized as part of a campaign to make public sentiment increasingly sympathetic to Russia. Several times each week a group of YCL members would canvass different sections of Miami, selling these books from door to door. Many hundreds were sold here this way.

The Soviet Power was not the only piece of literature which they pushed, however. The newsletter, In Fact, edited by George Seldes was one of their favorite pieces of material for contacts, and from what I hear, it still is.

In Fact devotes itself to inside information, exposés of antilabor activities and racial and religious discriminations, and other similarly liberal causes. Its value to the Communists lay in its consistent follow-up of the party line.

"Friday" was the name of a party-line picture magazine they were also promoting at that time. It has since gone out of business.

Another entirely different type of material printed by the Communist Party were leaflets for free mass distribution. These were left in doorways, automobiles, and in any convenient public place where they might be picked up and read. Their subject matter was usually simple and concerned with a single issue the party was making an immediate campaign about.

Thousands of "Free Earl Browder" leaflets of this type were distributed in many ingenious ways. They were pinned on backyard clothes lines, left in public rest rooms, slipped between the pages of library books, and so on.

But important as the literature work was, the most important activity of all was considered to be work in front organizations, since it was through this medium that the party got most of its new members. Each YCL member was expected to be active in several front organizations and to have several "contacts" under cultivation at all times.

At this time the Communists had very little to do with the labor movement here. When they finally did establish an opening into union work here they naturally changed their emphasis from front organizations to union activities. This was done so they could work more closely with the "proletariat."

But in 1941 and the spring of 1942 they concentrated on their front groups. These were created and abandoned as the party line changed, and changed again. During the "peace" period they established "the Yanks are not coming" and the "American peace mobilization."

After Russia was attacked these organizations were abandoned and prowar groups were formed. The American Youth Congress was also disbanded during this period. I was able to closely observe the formation of the local Russian war relief chapter.

The Young Communist League was informed that a Russian war relief chapter was going to be started in Miami and our job was to start a youth division. We decided that I would be a good person to "elect" as chairman, and we made our plans.

All our contacts were invited to a meeting, and I was duly elected chairman. The other officers were also YCL members. Once established we held parties and tried to involve other young people in the group. Plans were made to bring the Russian war relief into every fraternal, church, and community group.

And so in this pattern I did as I was told, worked hard, studied party literature, and became a devoted Communist. But there was a long and difficult road ahead, with disillusionment every step of the way.

SMOLIKOFF INVITED YOUNG COMMUNISTS TO UNION MEETING

(By Claire Brandler)

Japan attacked Pearl Harbor in December 1941, and on that same day the Miami section of the Young Communist League happened to be holding a membership meeting. This was the only time I saw all the members of the various branches together at the same time. Charles Doraine (Smolikoff) was present to direct and advise the young Communist group. He also addressed the meeting on the subject of more effective future action by the YCL, and he criticized the university branch for inactivity and failure to build a strong group there.

When we returned home after the meeting we heard the news that Pearl Harbor had been attacked. This fitted in perfectly with Communist plans, since it meant that America would enter the war, exactly what the Communists had been plugging for.

Immediately the line went from "intervention" to "open a second front now." It is particularly interesting to note that the constant demand was for a second front in western Europe, not a more logical second front through the Balkans. Even as far back as this, and while under attack by Hitler's armies, Russia was concerned with keeping us out of the Balkans and had her eye on future control of eastern Europe.

In the YCL we were all encouraged to participate in some way in the war effort. Following this policy, two other young Communists and myself went to the National Youth Administration camp in Ocala, Fla., to learn to be machinists. While there the three of us carried on as a unit, trying to politically cultivate some of the other boys and girls there and possibly bring them into the YCL.

Several months after my return from the NYA camp I left Miami to go to college in the Midwest.

It took some time for my YCL transfer to go through, and during this time I was able to lead a fairly normal student life. I had a chance to become close to my roommate, the first non-Communist friendship I had in over a year and a half.

As the weeks passed and I began receiving my copies of the Daily Worker, I realized that the Communists were becoming superconservatives under the pressure of Moscow's immediate needs. One by one they began dropping all their progressive issues. They led the pack in calling for antistrike legislation and even went so far as to use unions which they dominate to break strikes in other unions. Usually outspoken on the issue of racial equality, they even dropped this. They began to advocate incentive-wage programs, a long-condemned labor practice. The motivation for all these policies was clear. Russia's needs were the primary concern. I realized then that their entire social program was mere window dressing to attract the innocent.

I lost heart when I began to realize the Communists had no principles, no ethics, and no minimum program. This, on top of my earlier misgivings, made me decide that I needed to do some serious rethinking of the entire Communist approach.

The first problem which came to my attention was that of ends and means, and here I saw that I differed with the Communists sharply. They feel that any means are justifiable for use in order to achieve their end. This literally places the party stamp of approval on every moral and legal crime in existence, so long as it is performed to help the Communist Party. The more I considered this position, the greater difficulty I had in understanding how people could accept and practice this approach and still claim to be fighting for the betterment of mankind. Could people who would commit any crime if it suited their purpose be fit or able to build a better society?

I decided to investigate more objectively the society which they created in Russia. I wanted to see if the sacrifice of decent ideals could possibly have produced a better life there. I was familiar with most of the current material printed by the Communists about the Soviet Union. I had read The Soviet Power, by Hewlett Johnson, dean of Canterbury, and I had studied the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. I also had studied the Soviet constitution and various other books and pamphlets.

Now, I decided to learn the other side of the story. In locating material for this study I was especially concerned with avoiding reactionary authors. I wanted to read about Russia in the books of authors who were seeking to better society in a democratic fashion. I wanted criticism of the Soviet Union by liberals and progressives, and from these sources I discovered some amazing facts.

I read books such as Max Eastman's Stalin's Russia, Manya Gordon's Workers Before and After Lenin, and Norman Thomas' Russia, Democracy or Dictatorship? Here are some of the incredible things I learned:

In Russia it is illegal to organize independent unions and the crime is punishable by death. The only recognized labor unions are sponsored by the state, which is also the employer. (In America we call such unions company unions.) Strikes are punishable by death. No person can change jobs without permission from the Communist bureaucracy. The discrepancy between the wages of the workers and the bureaucrats in Russia is amazingly large—much larger than similar differences in capitalist countries. Wages for the average worker in Russia are so low that he is actually worse off now than he was under the Czar.

Despite a tremendous amount of publicity about early efforts at progressive education and free schools in Russia, there is no longer free education above the grade-school level, and coeducation has been discarded. High school tuition fees are far above the limits of average working-class parents.

Advanced treatment of criminals was another undertaking of the Soviet Government. This, too, is now discarded. In Russia the death sentence is applicable to children 12 years old; a person is responsible for the crimes of his relatives; and one out of approximately every six people in Russia are inhabitants of slave-labor camps where they are placed for "political" crimes.

In the People's Army of the Soviet Union second lieutenants get 1,000 rubles for every 1 paid to enlisted men, so great is their difference in pay. Any Red Army officer, in peace or war, has complete authority in noncombat conditions to execute any enlisted man in his command without recourse to trial.

These are only some of the facts which I found verified beyond all doubt, and which led me to the conclusion that instead of building a better society they have devised a new exploitative system which enslaves the worker more than ever before. Instead of a worker's paradise they have created a totalitarian police state.

All this led me to the conclusion that there is no road to social progress without the recognition of the basic dignity of the human being, and his individual liberty. This can only be achieved by insistence on democratic processes.

It took me well over a year to reach and accept these conclusions, and meanwhile I had become involved in Communist activities at the university. So strong were the ties which already bound me that I lacked courage to make a definite break until after my return to Miami.

In the summer of 1943 after my first year at college I therefore returned home still a member of the Young Communist League. During this summer I learned that Charles Doraine, our former Communist section organizer, had achieved leadership in certain CIO unions here under the name of Smolikoff. At an invitation from him to YCL members, I went with a group to sit in on a union meeting held at the present CIO headquarters.

They tried to reinvolve me in Communist activities here, now centered on trade union work, but in my mind I knew there was no turning back.

When I returned to college in the fall my break was final and I knew that henceforth my belief in social progress would have to be based on fundamental democratic principles; I decided that the dictators of the left were no better than the dictators of the right, and I rejected the commissar for all time.

Keeping the Record Straight

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, to keep the record straight, let me insert an answer to Drew Pearson's charges as made in the Washington Post of June 9, 1948. Mr. Pearson wrote:

Thirty million dollars' worth of tubes (vacuum) were purchased by the Army in 1942, enough to last for 10 years. Yet the following week another order was placed for $60,000,000 worth of tubes because the Army had to stock different types.

The Department of the Army reports that—

There were never purchased at any time during the war enough tubes to last for 10 years. However, there were purchased during the 1942 period the sum of $132,000,000 worth of tubes of the varying types needed to meet the equipment requirements of the expanded armed forces. In this purchase there was no unnecessary duplication nor waste of Government funds or property involved. The quantity of tubes actually purchased was based on the estimated requirements and was only enough to meet these requirements. However, as the situation developed, it was found that an additional quantity had to be purchased to last out the war period.

Of course, the Army bought different tubes. No one interested in national defense would fail to do that.

Pearson further says:

As a result, Army warehouses overflowed with tubes that varied only slightly from each other, maybe no more than a prong spaced differently.

Warehouses did not overflow. No more tubes were purchased than were necessary. Naturally, the tubes were not all of the same pattern.

Pearson then wrote:

Yet, even this overflow was multiplied a hundredfold by duplication of stock numbers.

The Department of the Army states:

The paper work was increased to a very limited extent because of the inexperience on the part of the personnel involved—this inexperience being due to the fact that many new employees were required by the Department because of the expansion of the war program. There was also a lack of definite information from the manufacturers which would have enabled the Signal Corps to have identified the same part by one number. Just as soon as this was discovered immediate action was taken to eliminate this condition by having a single identifying number for duplicate parts. Of necessity, there was some increase in the paper work involved, but the actual amount is unknown.

Unfortunately, neither the Signal Corps nor the Army, the Navy nor the Air Force possesses the wisdom or the foresight of some of those who are so free with their criticism, who either know nothing of the facts or do not choose to give them, who have no responsibility to anyone, and who think that God has anointed them to tell not only the Congress but all agencies of the Government what they should do.

Pearson writes:

The Army Signal Corps discovered this duplication and assigned 400 technical personnel to straighten out the records. After a 3-month analysis, they were able to eliminate 63,000 duplicate items out of 220,000—a reduction of almost 30 percent.

The answer of the Department is:

There were actually some four-hundred-odd personnel assigned to duties of this nature and in this connection, they performed this task along with other important supply and inventorying duties.

The Army reports that the personnel was able to eliminate 63,000 duplicate and defective items—not articles—a reduction of 30 percent. May I add that that in itself was no small achievement for the personnel employed.

Even more serious, many installations were forced to shut down temporarily for lack of spare parts, although the parts were discovered later under different numbers—

Pearson writes.

The Department of the Army replies to this, as follows:

In general, this statement is not correct. However, in a few instances it was true, but it was a situation which was unavoidable due to lack of sufficiently experienced personnel both in the supply system and in the operating set-up of the equipment itself. (An unavoidable situation in a war in which the greatest expansion of the armed forces in history occurred.)

Quoting further from Pearson's article:

This happened to one of the powerful radar sets in Panama during the spring of 1942 when the Canal was in constant danger of Jap attack. To the horror of the Army, it discovered the replacement part was not in stock. A hurried telephone call was put through to Washington and the missing part was ordered flown to Panama at once.

Sure, the Canal Zone at Panama was in constant danger of Jap attack. We are always in danger of an attack from someone—that is, according to the columnists and those who must sell their wares, sensational and many times false, to a section of the public which reads or listens one day, forgets it all before the sun goes down. Without a daily crisis or emergency, some commentators would be out of business.

So far as I have been able to learn from the armed services, no one in the services seems to have any definite information as to the incident to which Pearson made reference. If this commentator knew so much about it, why did he not tell the Army?

Pearson's statement that the stock officer discovered eight bins full of the article for which he was searching might or might not be true because sometimes the seemingly impossible turns out to be a fact. But what of it? If Pearson knew that they had eight bins filled with this particular kind of tube, certainly no longer than 2 feet nor greater in diameter than 1 foot, he would, at that time, be declaiming about the waste. Even the dumbest of us knows that hindsight sometimes is more accurate than predictions.

The Army, further advising what is now being done with respect to cataloging by single nomenclature the component parts and equipment of electronics and communications for the Army, Navy, and Air Force, states:

The first major step in providing uniform item identification for the armed services was taken in the field of electronics and communications equipment. Under the auspices of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Army, Air Force, and Navy, in 1945, collaborated in the publication of a manual outlining specific standards for naming and describing items in this field. As a result, tens of thousands of such items are now uniformly described and named by these services and identical stock numbers assigned for use by the Air Force, Navy, and Army. Coincident with the passage of the National Security Act of 1947, a similar but expanded program was established under the Munitions Board, encompassing all items of supply in the National Military Establishment. This project is now actively under way and is being conducted as rapidly as practicable with personnel which can be made available.

The Army reports that all that needs to be done to prove the lack of consideration by Pearson of authentic information on this project and its accomplishments is to refer to the testimony of Mr. Hargrave, Chairman of the Munitions Board—pages 98 to 103—and Mr. McNeil, special assistant to the Secretary of Defense—pages 41 to 44—of the hearings on the military functions, National Military Establishment appropriation bill for 1949, part 1, before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, on March 17, 1948.

Appropriations of the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WESLEY A. D'EWART
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of misinformation regarding appropriations by the Republican Congress has been going out of Washington. Undoubtedly this is put out deliberately for partisan political purposes. The appropriations for development of the West and for rural electrification have gone to the President for his signature, and we know exactly what amount will be available for the coming year.

The fact is that this Congress has appropriated more money for river development, reclamation, power development, and rural electrification than any other Congress in the history of this country.

Project	1948 appropriation	Unobligated	1949 appropriation	Total
Civil functions (Army engineers):
Fort Peck	$150,000	$10,000	$3,710,000	$2,720,000
Forsyth	171,000		74,200	74,200
Reclamation Bureau:
Sun River		26,365	45,000	71,365
Hungry Horse	2,500,000		14,611,650	14,611,650
Fort Peck	1,500,000	2,202,563	990,000	3,192,563
Missouri Basin	23,400,000	1,310,442	54,786,650	56,097,092
Phase A (construction):
Canyon Ferry	600,000		2,950,000
Lower Marias			450,000
Missouri-Souris			287,500
Powder River	900,000		850,000
Yellowstone pumping	200,000		565,000
Montana pumping			160,000
Phase B (preconstruction):
Hardin			500,000
Jefferson River			82,500
Lower Marias			300,000
Missouri Souris			700,000
Montana Pumping			50,000
Sun River			40,000
Phase C (planning):
Clarks Fork			4,200
Helena Valley			21,000
Judith River			10,500
Nilan			5,600
Three Forks			299,600
Upper Marias			35,000
Other Department of the Interior agencies:
Bureau of Land Management			390,000
Bureau of Mines			150,000
Fish and Wildlife Service			425,000
Geological Survey			3,305,000
National Park Service			185,000
Office of Indian Affairs			165,000
Subtotal, other agencies			4,620,000
Grand total, Missouri Basin program			54,786,650

The Rural Electrification Administration received in 1948 the sum of $225,000,000. It has an unobligated balance of $400,000,000, and the 1949 appropriation is $575,000,000, making a total available to be spent this year $975,000,000.

The Interior Department which includes the Bureau of Reclamation, Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Mines, Fish and Wildlife Service, Geological Survey, National Park Service, and Office of Indian Affairs received an appropriation for the next fiscal year that is $112,876,523 larger than last year. The Missouri Basin got $30,000,000 more than last year's appropriation, which was the largest in history. In view of the above, the propaganda that has gone out in the West that REA and Reclamation have insufficient funds is a deliberate attempt to deceive.

United States Defense Plans Mean Higher Prices, Fewer Cars, Homes, Hospitals for People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEWEY SHORT
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article appearing in the Trainman News of May 29, 1948, which concerns the bill before this body on peacetime military conscription. The Trainman News is the official publication of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The article follows:

UNITED STATES DEFENSE PLANS MEAN HIGHER PRICES, FEWER CARS, HOMES, HOSPITALS FOR PEOPLE

Observers on Capitol Hill have long since learned to expect a certain amount of confusion whenever major changes of national policy take place in Washington. There is plenty of confusion in our national-defense picture today.

Most of us are aware that the United States is embarking on a very large military program—but just how large is it, and what effects may it have on our day-to-day living?

In a democratic society we are entitled to a clearer view of our expanding national defense program than the average intelligent citizen can make out from ordinary newspaper reading these days.

In an election year when we are choosing our leadership for the next critical period, it is particularly important to know the answers to these questions.

As the following résumé will show, the present planned program of defense expenditures is large and growing rapidly. Whether the amounts to be spent are absolutely essential or inadequate is not the point of this article—we do not pretend to be military experts. Rather we are attempting to point out that the present program carries far-flung economic implications for our domestic policy, implications that it might be disastrous to ignore much longer.

But first, just what are the dimensions of our current and contemplated defense program? A simple straightforward answer to this question is not available. Anyone reading accounts of testimony before the various congressional committees is aware that literally scores of different estimates are floating around. We are tempted to say that not even the highly placed military planners have a definitive answer. It should be clear, therefore, that the figures which follow are tentative, but are the best public estimates we have seen.

When the President's budget for the next fiscal year (1949) was presented to Congress early this January, we apparently expected to spend about $11,000,000,000 for the military services. This sum is a ground-floor estimate—the real question is how much additional will be appropriated or authorized above and beyond $11,000,000,000.

70-GROUP AIR FORCE IS EXPANSION GOAL

For more than a month now you have been reading about House and Senate hearings on a supplementary defense bill, which has just passed Congress and been sent to the President. Technically this bill, which is designed to start our 70-group Air Force program into high gear, is charged to the current fiscal year which ends June 30. Realistically we can regard it as the first appropriation additional to the regular $11,000,000,000 budget for next year. The bill authorizes $3,200,000,000 in cash or contract authorizations. Of course, this amount alone is not sufficient to bring the Air Force up to its planned 70-group strength with completely modernized planes. The expansion has to start gradually, increasing year by year until it reaches a peak about 1952, when the Air Force budget will be stabilized at a cost of about $7,500,000,000 annually.

So we can summarize the new plan's effect on the budget as follows: In fiscal 1949 we will spend about $14,200,000,000 (11.0 plus 3.2), and in 1952, about $18,500,000,000 (11.0 plus 7.5).

It is likely that some sort of universal-service law, either compulsory military training or the draft, will pass the present Congress. This program will, of course, cost additional money. Again it is difficult to find out exactly how much. According to the testimony given before the House Military Affairs Committee the cost will include two major items. To set up the training equipment and other initial machinery under the draft involves spending about $2,100,000,000. Secondly, the Army Ground Force testified as to the importance of modernizing the equipment of the 25-division strategic reserve of the Army as augmented under the draft bill. The cost of this modernization in fiscal 1949 was estimated to be $3,900,000,000. So altogether with the increased size of the armed forces authorized under H. R. 6401 (the House version of the draft law) we have an additional $6,000,000,000 which is to be added to the $14,200,000,000 above.

Thus, it now appears that our present plans contemplate an expenditure of about $20,000,000,000 in 1949 when the draft and the increased Army and Air Force requirements are added to the President's budget of $11,000,000,000.

ALL SIGNS INDICATE $20,000,000,000 FIGURE

It is always possible, of course, that less than the full amount will be appropriated. But all indications point to our soon reaching the $20,000,000,000 figure. Secretary Forrestal has repeatedly emphasized that the present military requests represent a minimum program. On May 12 such a staunch advocate of Government economy as Senator BYRD was reported by the New York Times as conceding that within 2 years the cost of the armed forces would amount to at least $20,000,000,000 and carry the full national budget to some $50,000,000,000.

Another reason for believing that the estimate of $20,000,000,000 may be on the low side is the possibility of lend-lease military aid to the Marshall-plan countries, as the Secretary of State admitted was being considered. (New York Times, April 28.) No quantitative estimates of the billions in additional costs involved have yet been made public.

Unless a drastic reversal in our military planning takes place the above analysis indicates that for the foreseeable future we can expect a military budget of perhaps twenty to twenty-five billion dollars annually. What will this mean in terms of our domestic economy and specifically in terms of our standard of living?

Corresponding to expenditures for military purposes is a real cost in goods and services which must be diverted from peacetime production.

As the minority report on the House Selective Service Act of 1948 (H. R. 6401) put it: "We are at a stage when there is no slack in the use of our resources, including both men and materials, and the imposition of a permanent military program can only be effected by switching our resources from the production of necessary civilian goods.

GASOLINE RATIONING MAY BE NECESSARY

"There will be less lumber for housing and fewer automobiles because of the reduced supplies of steel. * * * Even the rationing of gasoline may well be necessary. Because of shortages of materials such as copper, lumber, and nails, much needed construction will again have to be deferred. We will have fewer new school buildings, fewer new hospitals, less of the necessities."

This is the unpleasant side of the rearmament picture which is too often brushed over when military appropriations are voted by the Congress. There is very little testimony on this subject in the congressional hearings. Occasionally such an exception is voiced by the responsible armed service representatives as when Mr. Forrestal, Secretary of Defense, candidly remarked: "You cannot get a big military program unless you stop the making of motor cars, washing machines, and refrigerators" (New York Times, April 26). The truth unfortunately is that the industries which produce the large-scale weapons of war must simultaneously curtail sharply their output of many of the most important durable consumer goods.

Furthermore many other plants not actually being used to supply the armed forces may have to reduce their output because the materials will be no longer available for civilian production. The steel, aluminum, and copper that goes into aircraft and tanks just cannot be used (at the same time) for passenger cars and civilian housing. It also cannot be used for the expansion of our basic industrial capacity which is necessary for our long-hoped-for economy of abundance.

How seriously will this peacetime military program affect the production of civilian goods? No clear-cut answer to this question can be provided in the abstract. The answer depends a great deal on how we manage the defense program. And this management or planning is the crux of the whole problem. Congress has refused to meet the issue squarely—for economic controls are perhaps the most unpopular issues in our political life. But the facts remain—we will not have enough scarce basic materials to serve all of our needs—the materials must be allocated in some fashion to meet our essential requirements.

INFLATION WILL RATION UNLESS CONTROLS ADDED

One way is to sit tight and do nothing. Then the price system will do the allocating—higher and higher prices will ration the steel, aluminum, lumber, and many other items. If only enough steel will be available to build (say) 3,000,000 cars annually, instead of the present 5,000,000, the price of steel will go up, either openly or on the black market, until only 3,000,000 cars can be marketed.

If a racetrack is willing to pay more for construction materials than a contractor building houses, the available scarce materials go to the track. And similarly for every other product. To be realistically blunt—continued inflation will do the rationing. Our experience since July of 1946 when OPA expired is recent enough so that we can all remember the consequences of inflation rationing. The burden falls most heavily on the low-income groups least able to increase their money incomes. The working population has to tighten its belt and do without, while the high-income groups are denied nothing—they can pay the higher prices.

The alternative is not without unpleasant memories either. No one likes controls. Materials allocation and price control do involve red tape and increased governmental intervention—but we must face up to the situation confronting us. We must not continue to plan large military expenditures without providing for the necessary counterpart—a system of controls sufficient to spread the burden fairly and to distribute the remaining raw materials according to needs of our economy.

High Cost of Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PARKE M. BANTA

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BANTA. Mr. Speaker, one of my chief interests as a Member of the Eightieth Congress has been to make every contribution I could toward reducing the expenses of the Federal Government. I voted to reduce individual income taxes, and finally, over the vigorous protests and vetoes of the President, we were able to provide some saving in the take-home pay for workers, strike from the tax rolls many thousands of low-income persons, and reduce, though slightly, the income-tax payments for hundreds of thousands of others. The reduction was not enough, Mr. Speaker, but it was a step in the right direction.

We made some progress, too, in the reduction of Federal Government expenses, but again, it was not nearly enough. The Federal Government has no money to spend except that which it takes, or proposes to take from the people in the form of taxes. The policy of the executive branch of our Government has, for years, been to tax and tax the people, and at the same time promise to them all manner of Federal aid, hoping, and apparently believing, that they will not think for themselves, but will succumb to the blandishments of something for nothing from Washington. Unfortunately, too many of our citizens have fallen for this sort of thing, until we find pressure put upon the Congress by the President, and by the department heads and bureau chiefs, and by many pressure groups, for funds from the taxpayers for almost every conceivable Government spending project. Sometimes I fear that the people, who must eventually pay the bill, have been taught not to think. It is a sad commentary on our thinking that so many of us seem to believe that what we get from Washington costs us nothing.

I have repeatedly said, Mr. Speaker, that Government spending is like individual spending; that the amount thereof should be determined by what we can afford. And the people themselves should know what we are doing, for it is their money, withheld from their pay checks, and collected in all manner of hidden taxes, which we here appropriate for the executive branch of the Government to spend.

Testimony given before the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I am a member, was to the effect that our national debt, though reduced somewhat these last 2 years, still amounts to approximately $1,725 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. In addition to this debt obligation it will require approximately $285 for every man, woman, and child to pay the expenses of the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1949. These are sums which no human mind can contemplate. To pay the annual cost of our Federal Government more is being taken from the taxpayers than they spend for food.

The total assessed valuation in the Eighth Congressional District is $174,112,752, and our per capita share of the national debt is approximately $477,712,550, more than two and one-half times the total assessed valuation. Moreover, our district's per capita share of the cost of the Federal Government for 1 year at the present rate is $78,935,390, almost half the assessed valuation. Included in this sum is a total of $12,618,020 for European aid—Marshall plan. I know, Mr. Speaker, that a majority of my colleagues supported the appropriation for ERP, but none of them could ever justify to me why we should provide Europeans with tobacco, coffee, radios, farm tractors, and many other things which are either of infinitely more use here than in Europe or things definitely in the luxury class.

Mr. Speaker, in order that the people in the Eighth Congressional District may know in some detail about the present per capita national debt and the annual per capita cost of the Federal Government as well as the cost of foreign aid under the Marshall plan for 1 year I insert the following table. For purposes of comparison I have included in the first column the assessed valuation of each of the 18 counties.

Assessed valuation of each of the 18 counties of the Eighth Congressional District of Missouri and, on a per capita basis, the district's approximate share of (1) the national debt, (2) Federal expenditures, 1949, and (3) ERP (Marshall Plan, 1949)

County	Assessed valuation	Share of national debt	Share of Federal expenditures, 1949	Share of cost of ERP, 1949

Washington	7,037,852	30,173,600	4,985,220	785,140
Wayne	5,773,150	22,069,650	3,646,290	575,730

Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to spend money at this annual rate and escape national bankruptcy. As each successive spending program is submitted to the Congress, it becomes our duty to scrutinize it carefully, and to finally decide whether it is one which the Nation can afford. At any rate, the American people should know the facts, and they might well be able to tell us, if we ourselves do not know, how much the Nation can afford for the annual expenses of the Federal Government.

Statements From Memorial Day Address Given on May 30, 1948, by Hon. J. Harry McGregor, of Ohio, at Keene, Ohio

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. HARRY McGREGOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, by leave granted me, I wish to cite a portion of my remarks from the Memorial Day address delivered at Keene, Ohio, on May 30, 1948:

America, as I have said, has been called to the highest of all callings—a position of leadership in the atomic age, a leadership that is economic, political, and social.

But while we make our supreme effort to arrive at true international friendship, and while we dedicate our will and purpose for a just and lasting peace, we recognize still that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. In this day and age, when time and space have been rendered meaningless by man's inventions, vigilance is necessary on every front.

So, then, on this Sabbath Day, as we are gathered here to pay tribute to our heroic dead, we must remember that the peace of the world and the safety of our liberty lie in eternal vigilance. We must remember that in the state of the world today America must maintain a national defense sufficiently strong and efficient that no nation bent on aggression will be invited to direct an attack upon us. Above all, my fellow citizens, we must give our common devotion to our common country just as those who today sleep beneath the grassy mounds gave their common devotion. They died in their devotion to liberty. We must live our devotion to liberty if they are not to have died in vain.

Hon. Edward H. Moore, of Oklahoma

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement in tribute to our colleague the Honorable EDWARD H. MOORE, of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRIBUTE TO HON. EDWARD H. MOORE

Mr. President, I should like to say a few words about one of our distinguished colleagues who is leaving the United States Senate but whom we hope we will continue to see in the years up ahead on many occasions. This colleague served on the Senate Judiciary Committee and I have come to know and appreciate his fine abilities and talents and his warm friendship.

I am referring to Senator ED MOORE, of Oklahoma, a man who made a success in law, in business, and in agriculture. Senator MOORE has come to be known for his deep devotion to the American way of life and for his stern opposition to Government regimentation and bureaucratic controls. He has met issues head-on and he has not yielded to any considerations other than the welfare of his country as he sees it.

ED MOORE, who was born on a farm in Missouri, who was educated in the common schools of the Show-Me State, who moved to Oklahoma in 1901, practiced law for 18 years, entered business and made a resounding success as an independent oil producer and in other fields, represents the American process at work—the process by which men can rise by their own bootstraps—by their own abilities.

ED MOORE represents, too, a business leader of civic conscience who recognized that his country called for more than his business services but could use him in political life as well. He has served his State and his Nation well.

I say this even though I have personally had some differences of opinion with him, both in committee and on the floor. I have always respected the independence of his judgment and the sincerity of his views.

No one here in the Senate need to be told of Senator MOORE'S contributions to charitable organizations and of all the other evidences of his fine public spirit.

As with many other of our colleagues whose terms expire this year, we will miss his presence. We look to Senator MOORE, however, knowing that he will continue to render service in whatever advantures he may choose in the days up ahead.

What the Eightieth Congress Has Done for the Farmer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, in the field of agriculture and agricultural legislation, the Eightieth Congress has a record of accomplishment that is surpassed by no Congress in recent history. Convening at a time when farmers were still operating on an emergency all-out production basis, when shortages of agricultural commodities rather than surpluses were providing the greatest concern, when the rising level of all prices was carrying up with it the cost to the consumer of farm products, and when an unprecedented and unmeasured foreign demand was crying to be filled—this Congress faced immediate problems in the agricultural field that were different from those which have ever faced any other Congress.

In spite of these unusual conditions, the Eightieth Congress began to carry out immediately its announced intention of getting to work on a long-range policy and program for agriculture. The groundwork of such a program has been laid in extensive hearings in both the Senate and House. A long-range price support program has been enacted and the long-term policies developed in the hearings have been applied to other legislation as it has come up for consideration.

The crop-insurance program, for example, has been completely revised and set up on a sound long-time basis. Basic improvements have been made in the administration and operation of marketing agreements and in the laws relating to farm labor, the national forests, the tenant-purchase program, the handling and distribution of insecticides and other agricultural chemicals. The Commodity Credit Corporation was given a permanent charter.

Diseases of plants and animals, that are a threat to both farmers and consumers, have been promptly attacked by this Congress. Authority and ample appropriations were provided for fighting foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico in order to prevent its spread into this country, for the eradication of cattle grubs, for a fight against the new threat of the golden nematode disease in potatoes and tomatoes, for added safeguards against the importation of pests and diseases of shrubs and small plants, and for concerted action against destructive pests and diseases in our forests.

The welfare of farm families and the improvement of farm living conditions have bulked large in the actions of the Eightieth Congress. Unprecedented appropriations have been made for the extension of rural electrification and for the development of rural roads.

Following is a brief statement of the action taken by the Eightieth Congress in each of several fields that are of concern to the farmers of the Nation and to the consumers who depend upon them for their food and fiber.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

No Congress in history has provided so generously for rural electrification as the Eightieth Congress. During this Congress, $800,000,000 in loan authorizations has been provided for the extension of REA electric lines to farm homes. This is almost twice as much as has been provided by any previous Congress and is only $275,000,000 less than the total amount provided for REA work in the whole period prior to the Eightieth Congress.

As the result of these generous appropriations for REA loans, REA electricity was extended during the past fiscal year to 400,000 farm homes—more than twice as many as in any prewar year—and an even larger number of farm homes are scheduled to receive electricity during the 1949 fiscal year.

In addition to providing unprecedented funds for REA extension, the Eightieth Congress enacted a law which permitted REA to refinance additional rural lines in the TVA area and refused to take action on several bills which would have weakened or limited the REA program.

The following table shows the appropriations and authorizations, by fiscal years, for REA loans:

1937	46,500,000
1938	30,000,000
1939	140,000,000
1940	40,000,000
1941	100,000,000
1942	100,000,000
1943	10,000,000
1944	20,000,000
1945	25,000,000
1946	300,000,000
1947	250,000,000
1948	400,000,000
1949	400,000,000

SOIL CONSERVATION

More than half a billion dollars was appropriated by the Eightieth Congress for soil conservation activities on American farms. By far the largest part of this was in appropriations for payments through the agricultural conservation program, the former AAA activities. During the 2 years of the Eightieth Congress $415,000,000 was appropriated for this purpose. At the same time $86,821,000 was appropriated for expenditure by the Soil Conservation Service, most of which will be spent in technical assistance in cooperation with local soil-conservation districts. In addition, the session just closed authorized the expenditure of $262,500,000 for soil conservation payments for 1949.

In spite of these tremendous appropriations the most significant action on soil conservation was in the deliberations of congressional committees.

No Congress in history has been so thoroughly aware of the necessity for real soil conservation in the United States as was the Eightieth Congress. This was largely due to the fact that early in the first session hearings on a long-range agricultural policy were started by both the House and Senate, and one of the first conclusions reached by those committees was that soil conservation must be the keystone and the No. 1 objective of any sound, long-range agricultural policy.

On that premise hearings on soil conservation were held by both the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture. In the House committee more than 3 weeks of hearings were devoted to bills seeking to establish an effective long-range program for the conservation of the Nation's agricultural resources.

In both Houses of Congress there was the feeling that the appalling rate at which our soil resources are being dissipated makes it imperative that the soil program for the future shall not be a piecemeal operation, but must be one in which all activities and programs are coordinated to the one dominant policy of restoration and conservation of the Nation's agricultural resources.

Pending the enactment of such a program an act extending the authority for AAA soil conservation payments through 1951 was passed by the Eightieth Congress.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

One of the outstanding long-term contributions to agricultural stability was adoption by the Eightieth Congress of a permanent charter for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

This chapter establishes the Commodity Credit Corporation as a $5,000,000,000 corporation charged with the responsibility of carrying out operations to stabilize prices of agricultural commodities. The Corporation will be under the direction of a five-man Board of Directors—three, including the Secretary, from the Department of Agriculture—the other two from outside the Department.

The Corporation is authorized to stabilize farm prices through purchases, loans, direct payments, and other methods. It is directed to use the normal commercial channels of trade to the greatest extent possible in carrying on its operations.

Because of its permanent status, the Corporation will provide a continuity of action in support of the farm economy that has not been possible under programs operating merely on a year-to-year basis.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

In December 1946, one of the most dreaded of all animal diseases—foot-and-mouth disease—was reported to be raging in Mexico. This was the first time since 1929 that this disease had been reported on the North American Continent. Its spread to the United States would not only cause billions of dollars of loss to farmers and the livestock industry, it would have a most serious effect on consumers. Interstate shipments of livestock would be stopped immediately. Packing plants would have to suspend operations. Cities which depend on interstate shipment of meat would be virtually without meat. Worst of all, an outbreak in the United States would probably deplete breeding stock so seriously that there would be a shortage of meat, with accompanying high prices, for many years to come.

Acutely aware of the menace this presented to farmers, consumers, and the whole economy of this country, the Eightieth Congress took prompt and energetic action to combat the disease in Mexico. One of the first laws passed by this Congress—Public Law No. 8—was an act authorizing the Department of Agriculture to go into Mexico and work with the Mexican Government in an all-out effort to stop the disease and prevent it from reaching the United States.

More than $60,000,000 was appropriated or allocated to carry on the battle in Mexico. Funds were appropriated with which to strengthen the patrol on the Mexico-United States border. Additional research was authorized.

When it became apparent that the disease could not be quickly suppressed and eradicated in Mexico—that it was going to be a stubborn, long-term fight—Congress again acted promptly to provide the best possible long-time defense. Funds were appropriated for the establishment of a quarantine line across Mexico, including many miles of fence, and manned with American veterinarians and technicians.

On the advice of the Bureau of Animal Industry, an act authorizing research on foot-and-mouth disease in the United States and the establishment of a complete laboratory for that purpose was passed by the second session of the Eightieth Congress. In order to give as great assurance as possible that the disease will not be spread accidentally from the laboratory, the law requires that the laboratory be built on an island separated by deep water from the mainland of the United States.

LONG-RANGE PRICE-SUPPORT PROGRAM

Of vital concern to both farmers and consumers was the enactment by the Eightieth Congress of farm price-support legislation geared not only to the present emergency demand for food exports but to the long-range welfare of both consumers and producers.

The price-support bill passed by Congress combines the temporary incentives necessary to secure all-out farm production through the 1949 crop year with a long-range price-support program for future years designed to provide an abundance of agricultural products for American consumers and to protect both producers and consumers against unstabilized agricultural prices.

Recognizing that the needs of other countries for American food, and the commitments of our foreign policy, create an emergency situation calling for all-out farm production similar to the war years, and recognizing also the need for a long-range farm-price support program protecting both producers and consumers, the Congress embodied both these principles in its price-support bill.

First. The basic commodities—corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, cotton, and peanuts—will be supported at 90 percent of parity through June 30, 1950.

Second. The major nonbasic commodities will be supported at 60 to 90 percent of parity through December 31, 1949—except that milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs are to be supported at 90 percent of parity for that period.

Third. The present support level of 90 percent of parity will be continued on Irish potatoes for the 1948 crop year.

Fourth. Beginning January 1, 1950, the provisions of the long-range price support program will go into effect. These include a general revision of the parity formula to take into consideration the shifting costs of agricultural production, changes in the pattern of consumption, and other factors.

The basic commodities will be supported at 60 to 90 percent of parity, depending on the level of supply. All other agricultural commodities may be supported at 0 to 90 percent of parity depending upon the importance of each commodity to the national economy, its degree of perishability, the level of supply, and other factors.

The bill also authorizes the President to restrict the importation of foreign agricultural commodities or products if such importation would materially interfere with the price-support program.

RURAL ROADS

The greatest rural road-building program ever undertaken cooperatively by the Federal and State Governments is scheduled for the next 3 years under legislation enacted by the Eightieth Congress.

Realizing the necessity of good farm-to-market roads for modern motorized farming, the Eightieth Congress appropriated almost twice as much money for Federal participation in secondary road construction in two fiscal years as was spent by the Federal Government for that purpose in the 10 years previous to 1948.

Federal expenditures for secondary roads in the 10 fiscal years, 1938–47, amounted to approximately $112,000,000. In the Eightieth Congress, $74,000,000 was appropriated for that purpose for the fiscal year 1948 and $128,000,000 for the fiscal year 1949. This will make possible a Federal-State secondary road program more than five times as great as in any single previous year.

In addition to appropriating funds for the immediate future, however, the Eightieth Congress enacted legislation projecting an even larger road-building program for the fiscal years 1950 and 1951.

This act authorizes an appropriation of $450,000,000 a year for Federal participation in road building in those years. Funds appropriated, according to terms of the act, are to be utilized 45 percent for primary roads, 25 percent for city thoroughfares, and 30 percent for secondary rural roads. This will amount to approximately $135,000,000 each year for rural roads.

CROP INSURANCE

One of the major contributions of the Eightieth Congress to the stability of agriculture was the writing of an entirely new Crop Insurance Act.

Crop insurance was started in the midst of the depression-drought years and was compounded almost equally of efforts to provide real insurance and farm relief. It was never entirely successful for either purpose. As relief, it failed to reach millions of farmers who were most in need of it. As insurance, it did not satisfactorily meet the needs of most farmers and accumulated an operating deficit of more than $100,000,000 in 7 years.

So unsatisfactory was the crop-insurance program that Congress had in one year refused to appropriate the money for it, and when the Eightieth Congress convened there was grave doubt that any further appropriations would be made for this purpose.

After extensive study, an entirely new Crop Insurance Act was passed by the Eightieth Congress. It was based on the premise that crop insurance should be a sound business proposition, and that it must offer farmers a type of insurance they want at rates they can afford to pay. Following are its major provisions:

First. Authorization for extending crop insurance at once to several additional commodities, but placing the whole program on an experimental basis until sound actuarial tables and procedures can be worked out.

Second. As the methods and procedures are demonstrated by experience to be sound, crop insurance will be extended to additional commodities and to new areas.

Third. Provision is made for participation in the crop insurance program by private insurance companies and by local associations of farmers.

The Crop Insurance Act has now been operating approximately 1 year under the new law and the experience thus far indicates that, for the first time, the Crop Insurance Corporation is definitely on the road to providing farmers in all parts of the country with a sound and businesslike program of insurance for a great many agricultural commodities.

SUGAR ACT

The purpose of this act, passed by the first session of the Eightieth Congress, is to assure consumers of an adequate supply of sugar at reasonable prices—from both domestic and offshore sources—and to assure American farmers producing sugar that they will have an equitable share of the American market.

The act places on the Secretary of Agriculture the responsibility of determining the quantity of sugar desired by American consumers, of allocating that quantity between domestic and foreign producers in accordance with terms of the act, and of protecting the welfare of consumers and those engaged in the domestic sugar industry by assuring a supply of this essential food product at prices which will not be excessive to consumers and which will equitably maintain and protect the sugar industry of the United States.

The act is self-financing. An excise tax on sugar produced in the United States is designed to provide revenue equal to the amount of payments to producers. The law remains in effect until December 31, 1952.

GOLDEN NEMATODE

The Eightieth Congress has taken emergency action in a number of cases to control and destroy pests and diseases such as have, in the past, taken heavy toll of American plant life after they reached our shores from other countries. One of the latest of such invaders is the golden nematode, which for a number of years has made costly attacks on the crops of potato and tomato growers in England, Ireland, and Scotland.

A small infestation of this pest has been discoverd in the area around Hicksville, Long Island, and legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress is expected to limit it to that area and finally eradicate it altogether. Because the infestation lasts over a period of years, the battle against it will be a long-term effort—even though it may be on a scale small in comparison to governmental combat against other threats of pests and diseases.

The nematode attacks only potatoes and tomatoes, but the soil in which it is present may carry the infestation to other areas if moved, even in small quantities when other root crops are grown and not thoroughly cleaned before moving. The legislation provides authority to the Department of Agriculture for rigid control of use of this soil and the disposal of the crops grown thereon until the infestation is destroyed. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other agencies in this effort, to control and coordinate this activity, and to conduct research.

CATTLE GRUBS

For many years cattle grubs have been doing damage to cattle in the United States estimated to cost consumers and producers more than $100,000,000 a year. These grubs are one stage of the life cycle of the heel fly. Their presence in cattle greatly reduces the value of the hide and seriously retards the production of meat and milk.

Before the war it was established that the grub can be killed by treating infected cattle with preparations containing rotenone. By destroying the grubs in a sizeable area for a period of about 3 years the heel fly is virtually eliminated from that area and this pest to livestock removed.

The Eightieth Congress authorized the Bureau of Animal Industry to undertake for the first time eradication of cattle grubs on such an area basis. The program will be carried out with the voluntary cooperation of the farmers in the area, with the Federal Government providing the materials and some of the machinery and the farmers providing the labor.

INSECTICIDES

Farmers and all other users of modern chemical preparations for the killing of weeds, insects, and pests will be able to use such preparations in the future with greater safety and confidence because of action taken by the Eightieth Congress in revising and greatly improving the Insecticide Act of 1910. That act was written at a time when paris green, arsenic, and a few other relatively simple preparations were virtually the only insecticides used. Since that time there has been a tremendous development not only in the field of insecticides but in the allied fields of chemical preparations to destroy rodents and other pests and to kill or retard the growth of weeds.

The new Insecticide Act adopted by the Eightieth Congress provides the safeguards that are necessary to protect and assist the users of these new agricultural chemicals. Important improvements and changes made by the Eightieth Congress include, first, the application of the law to herbicides, rodenticides, and fungicides, as well as to insecticides; second, the requirement that all such preparations must be registered before they are sold or transported in interstate commerce; third, the requirement that poison warnings must be prominently displayed on all poisonous preparations and that white powders must be colored or discolored to prevent their being mistaken for flour, sugar, or similar foods; fourth, requirement that full instructions for use and for the safe handling of the preparation must be provided with each package.

In addition, the Eightieth Congress gave special attention to the important new herbicide, 2,4–D, and adopted two resolutions calling upon the Department of Agriculture to conduct immediate research into the use of this material and to provide the farmers and others with complete information on its handling, so that the fullest benefits from its weed-killing properties could be obtained and at the same time the utmost protection could be afforded to crops which are susceptible to this powerful herbicide.

MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Marketing agreements, under which farm commodities are graded and sold in an orderly manner, are important to many segments of agriculture.

The Eightieth Congress materially improved the working of such agreements. It provided that grading and inspection to maintain minimum standards of quality and maturity could be carried on continuously under marketing agreements, whether the price of the commodity is above or below parity. Previously such grading and inspection could be carried out only if the commodity was selling below parity.

Similarly, the Eightieth Congress provided that the administrative staffs and offices administering marketing agreements could operate continuously, in order to maintain records and carry on other business, whether the price of the commodity is above or below parity.

RESEARCH

Scientific research is as important to agriculture as it is to industry. During the Eightieth Congress agricultural production research has been continued and expanded and substantial funds were appropriated, for the first time, for extensive research in the marketing of agricultural products.

The growing importance of finding new and better methods of marketing farm products, of discovering new uses for agriculture commodities, and of developing new markets, was recognized in the Hope-Flannagan Act, which was passed late in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The Eightieth Congress carried forward the purpose of this act by appropriating $9,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948 and $13,850,000 for the fiscal year 1949 for the research authorized by the act.

The appropriation for 1949 will make possible the carrying out of 180 to 200 separate research projects. Emphasis will be on research into new methods of utilizing farm products. Approximately two-thirds of the projects will be breaking new ground—research on subjects which have never been scientifically studied before.

In addition to appropriations for the Hope-Flannagan Act, the Eightieth Congress appropriated $46,537,000 for research in the regional laboratories, experiment stations and otherwise through the Agricultural Research Administration, $9,282,000 for Forest Service research, and $2,596,000 for research by the Soil Conservation Service.

FARM TENANT ACT

Veterans, tenants, sharecroppers, and farm laborers who want to own their own family-size farm were given a helping hand by the Eightieth Congress. Improvements were made in that part of the Farm Tenant Act providing for Government reinsurance of private mortgage loans made to such persons for the purpose of buying, enlarging, or improving family-size farms. The new act removes some of the obstacles that have retarded the making of such loans.

FOREST SERVICE

The Eightieth Congress has been very conscious of the value of the Nation's forests and the need for safeguarding them in order to assure continued production for home building and other construction, to prevent the rapid water run-off and aid in conservation, to provide recreational areas for the healthful enjoyment of the people, and for other purposes. Much legislation attests to the consideration given forest matters by the Eightieth Congress.

New laws on the statute books as the result of these legislative efforts cover many phases of conservation, promotion, and control, while sympathetic study of Forest Service problems has resulted in the promulgation of planning which includes both long- and short-range aims for the preservation and use of our forest resources for the public benefit.

Among the items of legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress which will assure better use and conservation are laws to provide for:

A more efficient forest pest control, which would coordinate public and private agencies and provide for immediate action in halting the incursions of pests and the progress of diseases before they have gained a major foothold; preventing forest fires by closing forests to public use and providing penalties for violation, when such forests provide seasonal fire hazards; providing for the broader use of certain forest lands by authorizing controlled use of such lands by private citizens; consolidating the lands of the Superior National Forest through exchange for State lands and purchase of small private holdings, to give the Nation one last wilderness area for the recreational use of the people; transfer to the Forest Service of small areas adjoining national forests more suitable for forest purposes than for other use, and the disposal of small tracts which had been held as forest land or as a part of the public domain but which were serving no really useful purpose to that end.

Of particular interest was direction and authority given the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the constructive use-maintenance of the Tongass National Forest in Alaska. Action in this matter was taken to alleviate the Nation's newsprint shortage and aid in other useful timber production, and to encourage the commercial, agricultural, and recreational development of Alaska.

WOOL

On April 15, 1947, action taken by the Secretary of Agriculture terminated the price-support program for wool which had been in effect since 1943. Termination of the program at that time, if it had been permitted to continue, would have been disastrous to wool growers since market prices for comparable grades of imported wool were 8 to 12 percent below the purchase prices of domestic wools under the support program. In addition large stocks of both foreign and domestic wool, built up during the war, were on hand.

The Eightieth Congress, in order to provide proper protection to domestic wool growers, enacted S. 814, which directed a continuation of the wool price support program until December 31, 1948. It also amended section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to authorize the President to control imports of foreign wool in such a manner as to prevent such imports from interfering materially with the marketing of domestic wool under the price-support program. This provision was included because of the great increase in the importation of foreign wool—importations of raw-apparel wool in 1946 were approximately six times greater than the average annual importations during the period 1936 to 1940 and represented about 90 percent of the United States domestic consumption of wool. This bill was vetoed by the President. A new bill which eliminated the provisions authorizing the President to control wool imports was passed and became law, extending the price-support program until December 31, 1948.

The duty on wool was thereafter reduced by 25 percent by action of the President under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Under the general price support measure (H. R. 6248) passed during the second session of the Eightieth Congress the present price-support program for wool is continued until June 30, 1950. Thereafter, wool will receive price support at levels ranging from 60 to 90 percent of parity with the Secretary of Agriculture authorized to support wool at 90 per cent until a production of 360,000,000 pounds of shorn wool a year is achieved. In addition, the bill empowers the President to control imports so that the importation of foreign wool will not disrupt the production and marketing of domestic wool.

FARM LABOR PROGRAM

In an effort to meet the acute wartime shortage of farm labor and to obtain maximum food production, emergency programs were instituted during the war providing for the recruitment, transportation, and housing of foreign agricultural workers.

During the first session of the Eightieth Congress it appeared that it would be possible to meet the foreseeable farm-labor requirements after the end of 1947 from domestic labor sources, and Congress directed the discontinuation of the emergency farm-labor program on December 31, 1947.

Shortly before the close of the second session of the Eightieth Congress, however, it appeared that the supply of farm labor—particularly hand labor—was growing more and more acute. Farmers were having difficulty in recruiting, assembling, and transporting seriously needed foreign labor.

To meet this situation and to assure the availability of an adequate supply of foreign labor, the Eightieth Congress enacted a measure authorizing the Administrator of the Federal Security Administration to assist farmers by recruiting foreign laborers for temporary agricultural employment in the United States and to direct, supervise, coordinate, and provide for the transportation of, such workers. The cost of transportation and subsistence of foreign agricultural laborers is to be borne by the employers who use the labor.

FARM LABOR CAMPS

During and prior to the war the Government acquired labor camps and other facilities for the housing of migratory farm laborers. These camps were of two general types—permanent and temporary. The permanent camps, 52 in number, had a capacity for housing 48,600 workers. The temporary camps, 70 in number, had a capacity for housing 20,500 workers.

The law then in effect required that when Government use of these camps had ended they be sold or transferred to other agencies of the Government for disposal as surplus. This would have meant that these housing facilities would have been lost for agricultural purposes. Farmers, farm groups, and organizations, and State and local agencies urged that these facilities be disposed of in such a manner so that they would continue to be available for housing migratory farm labor.

The Eightieth Congress enacted Public Law No. 298, which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of these camps and facilities to public or semipublic agencies, or nonprofit associations of farmers, who would agree to operate and maintain the facilities for housing migratory farm laborers. Any facilities remaining unsold after June 30, 1949, are to be disposed of as surplus.

By the enactment of this law the Eightieth Congress has made it possible for farmers to obtain these labor camps and facilities and to have them available for migratory farm laborers.

ALCOHOL PLANTS

Prompt action by the Eightieth Confiress has saved for research purposes and for possible use in disposing of agricultural surpluses three industrial alcohol plants that otherwise would have been disposed of as surplus war property.

The three plants are located at Kansas City, Omaha, and Muscatine, Iowa. Built during the war to provide alcohol for war purposes, bids had already been received for disposal of two of the plants when the sale was halted by congressional action.

Later, a bill transferring all three plants to the ownership of the Department of Agriculture was enacted. The Department will lease the plants to commercial operators and will utilize them for carrying on research in the manufacture of motor fuels, oils, and other products from agricultural commodities.

At the same time, the plants will be available for emergency operation in case of another war, or for the disposal of surplus agricultural products if that becomes necessary.

TAX REDUCTION

The Eightieth Congress gave more than the usual study to the field of taxation. The Income Tax Reduction Act of 1948, passed by the Congress over the President's veto, made substantial reductions up and down the line.

Some of the provisions of this act were particularly beneficial to the farmer and his family. Among the reductions which provided relief for the farm family were, first, the increase of personal exemptions from $500 to $600; second, additional exemptions of $600 for persons over 65; third, the income-splitting provision, which benefits the farm family particularly, because the farm wife generally has no other income than that of the farm; and, fourth, the reduction of tax rates which eliminated 7,500,000 people from paying any tax, many of them small farmers.

H. R. 6712, which was passed by the House, but was not reached in the Senate, included a provision which would allow deductions from income taxes of expenditures made for soil and water conservation work. It also extended the date for the filing of farmers' income-tax declarations from January 15 to January 31, thus giving farmers more time in which to gather complete data on the previous year's transactions. While final action was not taken on the measure this session, it will be up for early consideration next year if a Republican Congress is elected.

FARM MACHINERY

High on the list of shortages plaguing farmers in the postwar period was the acute scarcity of farm machinery, which persisted long after the Nation's industries had returned to their peacetime pursuits.

An investigation of this situation that brought some measure of relief to farmers was conducted by the House Committee on Agriculture. This investigation served the purpose of focusing sharply the attention of farm machinery manufacturers, Government officials, and the general public on the serious situation facing American farmers.

The investigation showed, among other things, that the schedules for shipping farm machinery to Europe under the relief program were not based on practical surveys of the quantity of machinery which was actually needed. As a result of this finding there was a reduction of about 25 percent in the quantity of farm machinery slated for export under that program.

Through the active efforts of this committee, increased emphasis has been placed upon the need of American farmers and on better distribution of available machinery.

FERTILIZER

No single problem has been more distressing to farmers since the war than that of fertilizer. In the face of a world shortage of nitrogen and other fertilizer materials, and in view of the tremendously increased demand of American farmers for fertilizers, it was inevitable that there would be shortages.

These shortages would have been much more acute for American farmers, however, had it not been for action taken by the Eightieth Congress. Early in the first session a special House committee began an investigation of the fertilizer situation and has worked continuously on it since that time. It has met at almost weekly intervals with representatives of farmers, fertilizer manufacturers, transportation officials, and Government agencies for the purpose of securing more fertilizer production and obtaining the fairest possible distribution of available supplies.

Two special reports on fertilizer were issued—one for 1947 and one for 1948. These were instrumental in helping the situation.

Legislative action included authorization and appropriations for the Army to operate its nitrate plants to relieve civilian fertilizer manufacturers of the drain of sending fertilizer to the occupied areas. All the nitrates that have gone to such areas have come from these Army plants. In addition, in the 1949 fiscal year, because of action by the Eightieth Congress, half of the nitrates shipped to other countries under the foreign-relief program will come out of the Army plants.

SUGAR SUPPLIES

In spite of its consideration of a great many subjects relating directly to the farmers, the Eightieth Congress has not been too preoccupied with farm legislation to take action on behalf of American consumers where such action was required in connection with agricultural productions.

When the Eightieth Congress convened, sugar was still rationed in the United States. One of the first acts of the House Committee on Agriculture was to appoint a special subcommittee to survey the sugar situation. That committee found that there was an adequate supply of sugar to meet domestic needs. It recommended the immediate liberalization of both household and industrialist rations and their removal if supplies, in fact, turned out to be as adequate as they appeared from the committee's survey of the situation.

The committee also recommended that the Secretary of Agriculture take every step possible to secure more abundant sugar production in the United States and its Territories during 1947 and 1948. Specifically, it suggested that acreage quotas should continue to be suspended and that no restriction whatever should be placed upon domestic production during those years.

Following the recommendations of the Committee, sugar rationing to household users was discontinued, and allocations to industrial users were dropped a few months later.

FOOD SHORTAGES

Since January 3, 1947, another subject of vital importance to consumers—food shortages—has been under constant surveillance by a special subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture. When the Eightieth Congress convened the full extent of the demand which would be made on American agriculture to help feed the hungry world was not yet realized. It was the general assumption, shared by farmers and food experts alike, that the demand would decrease quickly and that, with American agriculture producing at top speed, as it was, production might soon overrun consumption.

After surveying the situation, the subcommittee reported that foreign demands for American farm products were likely to continue at a very high level for at least two more crop years, that the price which American consumers would be forced to pay for food would depend to a large extend on the proportion of our production which was shipped abroad, and that therefore, in order to assure an ample supply for both foreign and domestic demands, farm production should be kept at a high level.

Since that time, the committee's analysis of this situation has been borne out by events. The committee has held numerous hearings and has conferred frequently with producers, processors, and distributors of food, and its constant vigilance and activity has assisted materially in maintaining an adequate supply of food commodities for American consumers.

LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

During the Eightieth Congress, farmers themselves in every part of the country have had an opportunity to tell Congress their ideas on the kind of a long-range program which should be adopted for American agriculture.

Hearings on a long-range program have been held by the Agriculture Committees of both the Senate and the House. Together, they are the most comprehensive and complete hearings that have ever been held on an agricultural subject.

Not content with hearing merely the representatives of organizations which maintain spokesmen in Washington, or those which are able to send their witnesses to Washington, both the Senate and House committees went out into the States to give working farmers themselves an opportunity to appear as witnesses in hearings close to their homes.

The hearings held by the House committee were unprecedented in their scope and thoroughness. Never before has a whole committee of Congress left Washington and gone direct to the people for a series of hearings such as that conducted by the House Agriculture Committee on the long-range farm program.

On its series of hearings throughout the country, the committee traveled more than 9,500 miles. More than 3,000 miles of this travel was by special bus, so that the committee could stop along the road to look at farms and crops and to talk to farmers in their fields and at rural community gatherings. On its travels the committee was in 34 different States.

It held 11 formal hearings at which it heard testimony from 727 witnesses—most of them working farmers—who came from every State in the Union but two. In addition, the committee heard the views of hundreds of other farmers as they talked in their fields, at informal meetings, and wherever they met along the road.

These extensive hearings have formed the solid background of information that is providing the basis for the working out of a long-range farm policy. No Congress in history has been better informed of the farmer's needs and desires, and of what the farmer wants in a long-range program. This information has guided the thinking of Congress as phases of the farm program have come up for discussion and action, and it will continue to provide a guide for such purposes as the various parts of our future farm program and policy are worked out.

Choosing the Wasteful

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial appeared in the Daily Oklahoman, Oklahoma City, a Democratic newspaper with the largest circulation of any daily newspaper in the State. The article deals primarily with the waste of Federal aid, especially as applied to the proposed $300,000,000 Federal aid to education proposal.

CHOOSING THE WASTEFUL

In discussing the general subject of Federal grants-in-aid, Senator BYRD declares that on an average 15 percent of every Federal appropriation for State aid is spent by the Federal Government in allocating and distributing the funds provided and in maintaining a department or bureau to direct the expenditure of the money. In other words, 15 percent of the money voted to aid the States is wasted without ever reaching the States for which it is intended.

Instead of supplying their own needs the 48 States induce Congress to vote, say $100,000,000, to help the States supply their needs. This money is voted, and then the Federal Government holds out $15,000,000 to meet the costs of distribution and supervision. Thus the States receive only $85,000,000, while paying a total bill of $100,000,000. If they had voted the money themselves, the States would have saved $15,000,000.

Just now Congress has in contemplation the approval of a $300,000,000 appropriation to help the schools of the 48 States. If the pattern revealed by Senator BYRD is followed, the States would receive only $255,000,000 of the money voted, although they would pay the entire $300,000,000 in taxes. Thus the States would save a clear $45,000,000 by providing this money themselves. They will be deliberately wasting $45,000,000 in calling upon the general government to provide the money instead of providing it themselves.

It is now the thoroughly established custom for the States to call upon the National Government whenever large sums of money are needed, and the granting of Federal aid is almost certain to increase from year to year. But, however popular the process may be, it probably is the most costly that has yet been devised. If the States were asked to pay 15-percent interest on the money that is handed back to them from Washington, the country would speedily seethe with near rebellion; but, as it is, the States are paying the equivalent of a 15-percent-interest charge while blandly imagining that they are getting everything free. As a matter of fact they are paying every penny in a transaction in which they have been short-changed.

Record of Committee on Veterans' Affairs During Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs made an impressive record during the Eightieth Congress in the consideration of veterans' legislation. During this period 498 bills and resolutions were referred to the committee for consideration. The full committee held 106 meetings and the subcommittees 56 hearings. A total of 56 bills, 1 House joint resolution, 1 House concurrent resolution, and 2 Senate bills were reported favorably to the House. Of this number, 36 are now public laws and an additional 6 passed the House and are now pending in the Senate and one was vetoed.

In addition to its legislative activities and in accordance with House Resolution 120, the chairman of the full committee and the chairman and members of the subcommittees made group and individual inspections and surveys of Veterans' Administration hospitals.

A survey was also made of the operations of the insurance division of the Veterans' Administration and appropriate recommendations were made which, it is believed, if followed will result in more efficient handling of United States Government and national service life insurance policies.

Hearings were held on personnel reductions in the Veterans' Administration. These hearings resulted in an additional appropriation, public law No. 519, Eightieth Congress, of $3,000,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year, 1948, to enable the retention of approximately 3,000 positions directly concerned with service to veterans.

An additional $1,500,000 was appropriated to provide automobiles for amputee veterans—public law 785, Eightieth Congress.

I have listed below various bills and resolutions which were reported favorably by the committee:

PUBLIC LAWS

House Concurrent Resolution 54: To use Schick General Hospital, Clinton, Iowa, for the care of veterans, particularly convalescent or domiciliary cases. Reported June 26, 1947; Report No. 714. Passed House July 23, 1947. (Provisions of section 2 of S. 1035 (H. R. 2971), which also provided for acquisition of hospital at Camp White, Medford, Oreg. This measure passed Senate May 24, 1948. Reported in House June 1, 1948, Report No. 2100; passed House June 1, 1948. Approved June 3, 1948. Public Law No. 577.)

House Joint Resolution 196. Authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to continue for 1 year offices in the territory of the Republic of the Philippines. Reported May 19, 1947; Report No. 392. (Senate Joint Resolution 115 passed House in lieu June 2, 1947, with amendment.) Senate concurred with House amendment June 9, 1947. Approved June 14, 1947. Public Law No. 91.

H. R. 246: Raises the ceilings on wages and subsistence allowance payable to veterans undergoing on-the-job training as follows: $250 monthly for veterans without dependent (formerly $175), $325 for veteran with one dependent (formerly $200), $350 for veteran with two or more dependents (formerly $200). Adds 2 years to the customary training period. Reported February 26, 1947; Report No. 77. (S. 1393 passed by Senate July 25, 1947. House passed S. 1393 February 3, 1948, with language of H. R. 246. Conference agreed on $210 for veteran without a dependent, $270 for veteran with one dependent, and $290 for veteran with two or more dependents; also granted increase to part-time institutional and institutional on-the-farm trainees; excludes overtime in determining ceiling; retains 2-year limitation on training. House agrees to conference report (H. Rept. 1520) March 8, 1948. Senate rejects conference report and agrees to House amendment with an amendment (in effect the language as agreed upon by the conferees) April 15, 1948. House concurs in Senate amendment April 21, 1948. Approved May 4, 1948. Public Law No. 512.)

H. R. 1327: Extends for an additional 5-year period the privilege of renewing 5-year level-premium term United States Government life insurance for World War I veterans. Reported February 5, 1947; Report No. 18; passed House March 13, 1947; passed Senate April 7, 1947. Approved April 15, 1947. Public Law No. 34.

H. R. 1335: Increases compensation rates for disability incurred in peacetime service to 80 percent of rates payable for similar disability incurred during wartime service. Reported July 24, 1947; Report No. 1069. (S. 595 identical bill passed Senate June 10, 1948; passed House June 19, 1948.) Approved July 2, 1948. Public Law No. 876.

H. R. 1353: Repeals time limit (now extended administratively to January 1, 1948) for reinstatement of national service life insurance (level-premium term) on comparative health basis, to provide for automatic conversion to ordinary-life plan for total disability at end of term, and to provide for original application on any permanent plan. Reported January 29, 1947; Report No. 13; passed House January 29, 1947; passed Senate February 17, 1947. Approved February 21, 1947. Public Law No. 5.

H. R. 1844: Permits Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control. Reported March 27, 1947; Report No. 187; passed House April 10, 1947; passed Senate May 22, 1947. Approved May 31, 1947. Public Law No. 83.

H. R. 2181: Includes by statute institutional on-farm training among types of full-time training afforded World War II veterans under title II of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act and to set up certain standards relative thereto. Reported April 30, 1947; Report No. 327; passed House May 12, 1947; passed Senate, amended, July 25, 1947; House agrees to Senate amendments July 26, 1947. Approved August 6, 1947. Public Law No. 377.

H. R. 2368: Authorizes an increase in appropriation for revolving fund from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000 for purpose of making advancements by the Veterans' Administration not to exceed $100 in any case to disabled veterans of World War II taking vocational training. Challenge to the Candidate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH A. GAMBLE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent of the House, I insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the attached editorial from the Daily Times, published in Mamaroneck, N. Y., June 17, 1948, entitled "Challenge to the Candidate":

CHALLENGE TO THE CANDIDATE

President Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley bill, and it became a law only when Congress, in its own wisdom, passed it over his veto.

The President has used the law a half-dozen times, in crucial issues, including stoppages of strikes in the coal mines, upon the railroads, and now in the maritime field, strikes which would have paralyzed this Nation.

Yet, Mr. Truman bitterly condemns the same law which has saved his administration from chaos. Where is the logic?

To be consistent, the President must demand of the Democratic National Convention next month that the party's platform contain a repudiation of this law and a pledge of its repeal.

Does he dare?

Oologah Reservoir

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the Oologah Reservoir has been the subject of a great deal of controversy in my congressional district for the past 12 or 13 years. House Document 308 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, contained a review of the reports of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, including the construction of a dam on the Verdigris River, near the town of Oologah. The construction of this dam was subsequently authorized in the Flood Control Act of 1938. Notwithstanding the fact that 10 years have elapsed since the Authorization Act was passed by Congress, no funds have been appropriated by Congress for the construction of this dam. I have been a Member of Congress only 3½ years and I have not sought any appropriations for the construction of this dam. Neither did my predecessor, who represented our district for 14 years, obtain any appropriations for the construction of this project. Neither did any of the Senators who have represented the State of Oklahoma during that period obtain appropriations for this purpose.

As is generally the case, those below the dam site are favorable to its construction, for the buliding of the dam would be calculated to prevent the flooding of their properties. On the other hand, those above the dam, within the area to comprise the reservoir or basin, have always bitterly opposed the construction of this dam. They have argued that if this project were built as planned, it would put out of production some of the finest river bottom and valley land in the State of Oklahoma. The losses to agricultural production alone would weaken the economy of the northern end of Rogers County and virtually bankrupt the southern half of Nowata County along the Verdigris River. It has been estimated that it would result in the loss of approximately $60,000,000 worth of oil that can and will be recovered, according to present-known methods of recovery, lying within the area of the basin.

Subsequent to the authorization of this project by Congress, 10 years ago, the Congress has authorized the construction of several other dams upstream on the Verdigris River and its tributaries, in Oklahoma and in southern Kansas. Still other dams along the Verdigris and its tributaries above the Oologah Dam site, are now the subject of study by the Army engineers, and I predict several of them will be found economically feasible. This has radically changed the picture. The people along the lower reaches of the Verdigris River are entitled to flood protection, and that is what they want. Likewise, the people on the upper portions of the same stream and its tributaries are entitled to flood protection, and they want it.

Hence, all sections seem to have gotten together recently and, in the light of present conditions, and in view of the upper dams now in process of construction and others in contemplation, it has been thought highly proper to request the Congress to direct the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to make a restudy of the problem, with the view of a possible relocation or reduction in size of the Oologah Reservoir and Dam to the fullest extent possible, consistent with the needs of flood control and navigation, and to avoid so far as possible the inundation of stripper-well oil properties now operating in the upper reaches of the presently authorized Oologah Reservoir, and to conserve as far as possible present and potential highly productive agricultural lands in such authorized reservoir. Resolutions of the interested parties, those who favored and those who opposed the construction of the Oologah Dam, have agreed that such a restudy should be made. All those affected now request a restudy of the Oologah project.

Hence, in response to the united wishes of the people of my district, I appeared before the House Committee on Public Works and presented and requested the adoption of the following resolution, which was adopted June 17, 1948, upon the favorable report of the Corps of Army Engineers:

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

Resolved by the Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives, United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors be, and is hereby, requested to review the reports contained in House Document No. 308, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, and subsequent reports on the Verdigris River in Oklahoma and Kansas, with the view of possible relocation or reduction in size of the Oologah Reservoir to the fullest possible extent consistent with the needs of flood control and navigation purposes, with due consideration of the contribution other authorized and proposed reservoirs of the Verdigris system would make toward such reduction, and to avoid so far as is possible the inundation of stripper-well oil properties now operating in the upper reaches of the presently authorized Oologah Reservoir, and to conserve, as far as possible, present and potential highly productive agricultural lands in such authorized reservoir.

Adopted June 17, 1948.

Attest:

ROBERT F. MCCONNELL,
Clerk.

Requested by Representative GEORGE B. SCHWABE.

The following excerpts from a letter from Mr. N. R. Graham, president of the Arkansas Basin Development Association, speak for themselves:

Hon. GEORGE SCHWABE,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR GEORGE: Congratulations on the Verdigris resolution. I was afraid that the Army might hold it up, but last week Colonel Chorpening told me his office had approved. * * *

I feel this has strengthened your standing, for all sides to the controversy were in agreement asking for it. * * * I want to thank and congratulate you, GEORGE, on this accomplishment.

Sincerely yours,

NEWT GRAHAM.

Sound Money: A Curb on War—A Sound Monetary System Will Do More To Bring About World Peace, European Recovery, and Economic Stability Than All the Leagues of Nations, United Nations, and European Recovery Programs That Ever Can Be Formulated

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN SANBORN
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SANBORN. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the following bill, H. R. 7012, and an identical bill, S. 2895, was introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ZALES N. ECTON, United States Senator from Montana.

For an explanation of this proposed legislation I refer my colleagues and the people of the United States to a statement made by me on page A4214 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

H. R. 7012

A bill to promote the general welfare by scrapping the unsound and ruinous monetary policy which is wrecking our domestic economy and creating chaos throughout the world, and replacing it with a sound monetary system in strict accordance with article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress of November 1, 1893 (sec. 311, U. S. C., Annotated (ch. 8, 28, Stat. 4)), which will stabilize the currency; prevent economic collapse in the United States; give economic stability to the rest of the world; stop communism and other forms of absolutism; insure peace by eliminating the causes of war; save for the American taxpayers most of the billions of dollars proposed to be spent under the European recovery program; reduce taxes; protect our national sovereignty; preserve the American way of life; raise the American standard of living; quadruple the recoverable mineral wealth of America; make possible the profitable production here at home of 99 percent of our mineral requirements, including strategic minerals; and usher in an area of the greatest prosperity the United States has ever known

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board are directed to scrap the Laski-Keynes-Marxist formula of "managed economy and managed currency" which, for 14 years, has been draining away our wealth, wrecking our domestic economy, promoting communism, fostering monopoly, throttling small business, and so debauching our currency that the dollar and all fixed-dollar-value securities, including savings, pensions, and life insurance, have lost 63⅛ percent of their value; and replace it with a sound monetary system in strict accordance with article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Constitution of the United States:

"The Congress shall have Power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures"; and the act of Congress of November 1, 1893 (sec. 311, U. S. C., Annotated (ch. 8, 28, Stat. 4)), which is still in effect:

"SEC. 311. Policy of the United States as to bimetallism: It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchange value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts."

To facilitate and expedite the early application of this sound monetary policy and bring about the most equitable adjustment possible between the depreciated dollar and commodity prices, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to permanently peg the price of pure gold at $56 per ounce and the price of pure silver at $3.50 per ounce by buying in unlimited quantities all gold and silver offered at these prices, and by selling in unlimited quantities all gold and silver on demand at the same prices, plus only a small handling charge to cover the actual expense incurred in such transactions.

EXPLANATION OF GOLD AND SILVER PRICES

(NOTE.—The above provision of this bill does not increase the value of gold but merely adjusts the price of gold to the depreciated value of the dollar, and restores the parity value of silver and gold at the ratio fixed by the Congress in 1837. Today $56 is equivalent to $20.67 prior to 1934, the price at which gold was pegged for 90 years (1844 to 1934); and $3.50 today is equivalent to $1.29 prior to 1934, the price at which silver was bought and sold in the United States until the demonetization of silver in 1873. By effectively pegging the price of both silver and gold at the ratio fixed by Congress, the parity value of the two metals will be maintained, and gold or silver money will be equally desirable, stable, and dependable, thereby precluding any possibility for operation of the so-called Gresham law which presupposes a preference by the people for one monetary metal over the other.)

To place an effective brake on the profligate and irresponsible spending of the American taxpayers' money, the right of redemption shall be restored to the American people, permitting them to redeem any United States currency in gold and/or silver coin at face value, on demand; and

To insure this right of redemption, all United States currency in circulation shall be backed by a monetary reserve in gold and/or silver of not less than 40 percent which, based on the experience of more than a century, is the universally recognized minimum reserve necessary to maintain the face value of currency in circulation and insure its ultimate redemption at face value, on demand.

Under this act, 8.57½ grains of pure gold or 137½ grains of pure silver shall constitute $1; and all coins from $1 upward shall have a silver or gold content equal in value to the face value of such coins, the silver coins to be minted in denominations of $1 and $2 and the gold coins to be minted in denominations of $20 and $50; and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint are directed to have minted a sufficient number of these coins to adequately meet demands for the redemption of paper currency.

For convenience in minting, minor silver coins in denominations of less than $1, such as dimes, quarters, and half-dollars, may continue to have a silver content less than their face value, but shall be full legal tender up to $100 and be redeemable in gold or silver coins of larger denomination at face value, on demand.

All silver coins now in circulation shall be recalled and redeemed by the Treasury at face value; and it shall be unlawful to export such silver coins or to reduce them by melting for their silver content.

This act may be cited as the "Sound Money Act of 1948," and provides for the early restoration of bimetallism which time and experience have proven to be the most perfect monetary system the world has ever known.

REA and the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. H. CARL ANDERSEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss the record of the Eightieth Congress, a Republican Congress, with respect to providing funds for the REA.

Since the inception of this program 13 years ago, Congress has made available a grand total of $1,875,428,288 for REA loans. The present Congress has, during the last 2 years, provided $800,000,000, or 42 percent of all the money which has been appropriated for this agency over the past 13 years. In my opinion, that is a record of which the Eightieth Congress has a right to be proud.

Congress has never failed to provide all and more of the funds required to implement this program. This is apparent from the annual budget messages submitted to Congress by the President. Each year the President's REA budget has shown a substantial unobligated balance for the previous fiscal year. These balances, under the terms of the REA Act, are carried forward and become available for obligation during the following fiscal year. The lowest unobligated balance, according to the President's annual budget messages, was for the fiscal year 1945 when there was a carry-over of $885,876. In other years, the balances have ranged from above $1,000,000 to as high as $13,763,348, which occurred at the end of the fiscal year 1943. REA officials advised me within the past few days that the unobligated balance in the REA loan fund as of June 30, 1948, will be approximately $100,000,000. Here again, Mr. Speaker, is irrefutable evidence that the Eightieth Congress has been more than liberal with this agency. Let me repeat here that this Republican-controlled Congress has provided $800,000,000 for REA loans, compared to $1,075,428,288 made available the previous 11 years by Congresses controlled by Democrats.

In spite of this generous record on the part of Congress, we find high-pressure propagandists endeavoring to promote the idea that Members of Congress are against the REA program if they vote against increases for the loan fund which are not requested by the President in the form of a budget estimate. We had such an instance during the present session when, on February 24, the urgent deficiency bill was under consideration, and a motion was offered to increase the REA loan fund by $300,000,000. On a roll call vote, the motion was defeated 181 to 151. Immediately Members of the House who voted against the motion were deluged with letters of protest from constituents challenging their loyalty to the REA program. If these complaints on the part of farmer constituents were activated from pressure centers in Washington or elsewhere, it is apparent that the complaining farmers were not told any of the following facts:

First. The President had not made a budget request for the item.

Second. There was, at the time, an unallocated balance of $73,000,000 available for allocation to REA cooperatives.

Third. The President had theretofore always submitted deficiency budget estimates whenever he deemed additional funds were needed for the REA program and Congress had always theretofore appropriated more money for the REA than could be used in the fiscal year for which it was appropriated, so that always an unobligated balance had been carried forward for obligation in the succeeding fiscal year.

Subsequent facts bearing on this matter are:

First. The President, subsequently submitted a budget estimate—House Document 567—for $175,000,000 which was considered in connection with the first deficiency appropriation bill.

Second. After extended hearings and careful consideration, the appropriations committee of the House reported out an appropriation of $75,000,000, believing that was all which would be needed for the balance of the fiscal year 1948.

Third. At the time the deficiency bill was reported, the House had already provided $100,000,000 above the budget on the regular bill, so that the proposed deficiency appropriation of $75,000,000 plus the additional $100,000,000 provided in the regular Department of Agriculture bill equalled the full amount of the President's budget estimate. This latter was the result of my amendment in subcommittee.

Fourth. The House, subsequently, restored the full amount of the budget estimate by a record vote of 199 to 154, so that the full $175,000,000 was appropriated in the deficiency bill as well as the $100,000,000 in the regular bill.

Fifth. Subsequent events have demonstrated that the appropriations committee outguessed the House on this item, since the carry over from this fund into the fiscal year 1949 as presently estimated by the REA will be approximately $100,000,000.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that some of the friends of the REA, whose sincerity I am not questioning, have on numerous occasions, in an excess of zeal, proposed increases for the REA which were not needed at the time. This does the REA cause more harm than good and often serves to put many sincere friends of the REA on the spot who wish to follow the well-recognized and generally approved procedure of not making appropriations in excess of the President's budget estimates unless very sound reasons for so doing have been advanced.

It is my earnest conviction, Mr. Speaker, that no criticism can properly be leveled at the Eightieth Congress by reason of its record in dealing with the REA. I was glad to be able to secure passage of my amendment which, in the regular appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1949 provided $100,000,000 more than was requested by the budget. My action was taken after Mr. Wickard, Administrator of REA, had testified before our subcommittee that the bottleneck of materials shortages was broken in December 1947 and January 1948. Those bottlenecks had prevented the progress of the program in 1946 and 1947.

Now, with ample money and ample materials available, the Congress is determined that this great work will be brought to an early conclusion. Anything I can do to aid this course will be done. My farm home is among the millions served by the REA, and all farmers in America should enjoy the same privilege as soon as it is humanly possible to arrange for them to do so.

Favorable Reactions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, since July 1947 I have had the privilege of serving as a member of the Interior Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations. This subcommittee consists of seven members under the leadership of BEN F. JENSEN, of Iowa. The ranking minority member of this committee is the affable MICHAEL J. KIRWAN, of Ohio. No committee could have worked more harmoniously than the members of this committee during this session of Congress. The committee traveled by automobile some 11,000 miles through 12 Western States, inspecting Bureau of Mines installations; Bureau of Reclamation constructions, consisting chiefly of hydroelectric power plants and distribution systems and irrigation programs; Bonneville Power Administration and Southwest Power Administration; activities of the Fish and Wildlife Bureau, Indian agencies, schools and hospitals; and administration of public lands, and so forth. In this 6 weeks as stated by Chairman JENSEN on the floor of the House of Representatives while the bill was being considered "we talked to thousands of people in and out of the Department in every walk of life. There was much complaint."

The following commendatory remarks were made by fellow Members of the House of Representatives at the time our bill was on the floor for consideration, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 27, 1948:

Mrs. BOLTON (Ohio). I once served on the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and I followed their affairs for a great many years before that. * * * I was so happy to know that the gentleman [Mr. SCHWABE] was chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN (Minnesota). I think think the subcommittee has done a splendid job on this particular bill.

Mr. MURDOCK (Arizona). I recognize, although not being a member of the committee, how earnestly this subcommittee has worked. * * * I notice the earmarking of $200,000 for aerial pellet seeding to further soil conservation work, as indicated on page 7 of the report, which I want to express approval of.

Mr. GEARHART (California). I feel that I would be remiss in the performance of my duties as a Member of this body if I did not rise at this time to express my admiration and my very high respect for the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman who now occupies the floor is the distinguished chairman, for, indeed, there has occurred during his incumbency as chairman a most encouraging change in procedure and in result. The days of blind bag-grabbing appropriations are over. Because of the insistence upon evidence of the necessity as a justification for an appropriation, the fiscal affairs of the Republic are in better shape than they have been in years—and public confidence grows apace. * * * Though I have seldom received as much as I have asked for, I have never known a committee that was more earnest in its efforts to find the right answers to the very difficult problems with which it deals. I just cannot speak in too high praise or in words of greater respect concerning the gentleman and his fine committee for what I regard as an outstanding public service.

Mr. ANGELL (Oregon). I, too, want to commend the chairman and the members of this subcommittee for the excellent work they have done. They visited many of these projects in the West. I know they came through my district, the Columbia Basin area, and were most diligent in attempting to see for themselves, on the ground, the various problems with which we are faced. I am sure they have done an excellent job.

Mr. PHILLIPS (California). This is a good bill, and I think the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Iowa is the chairman has done a very good job on the bill. They deserve credit, and I think they deserve the support of the House in the passage of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO (Michigan). I want to add my word of approval of the work of the committee, especially what you did in refusing money for the building of transmission lines in the Southwest Power Authority. It was because of the action not only of this committee but your predecessor, and also when it was under the control of the Democrats, who refused to grant money for the building of transmission lines in direct competition with lines already established by private industry and serving the area, that I introduced legislation to compel the Federal Government not to go into the private power business but to sell power, either at the bus bar or at the dam, to private industry wherever that was possible, and, if that was not possible, then, and then only, should the Federal Government transmit the power to the interior and to the consumers. So I commend the committee on this action in that respect and approve of the comment the gentleman from California has already made.

Mr. PHILBIN (Massachusetts). I also should like to add my word of appreciation for the consideration and courtesy the committee exhibited to me and the other Members of Congress from New England in connection with the matter of funds for the rehabilitation and repair of the fish hatchery at Nashua, N. H. I commend the committee on the courtesy, patience, and zeal with which they have approached this work.

Mr. HILL (Colorado). If I may make another statement, I should say that our people in Colorado are more than happy to have had an opportunity to show you that project first-hand last summer after the Congress adjourned. All of us appreciate very deeply the fact that you inspected it and looked it over and know what the possibilities will be there to add greater production to that valley when this project is completed.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM (Iowa). I want to congratulate the gentleman and the members of his committee for the remarkable piece of work they have done in bringing out this bill. Personally, I want to thank the gentleman for all the people of the great State of Iowa for his constant effort to save money for the taxpayers, and at the same time bring out necessary projects.

Mr. BARRETT (Wyoming). I, too, want to congratulate the committee on this bill.

Mr. KIRWAN (Ohio). Mr. Chairman, I first want to congratulate the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations and the majority members of the committee. They were very gracious and granted the minority members all the time they wanted to interrogate any witness who appeared before the committee. I am very appreciative of their courtesy. Generally speaking, I think this is a good bill.

Mr. GORE (Tennessee). The distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] has done, I believe, the most thorough job of investigating and studying the problems of the Indian Service that I have seen done in my 10 years in the Congress. The membership may not find themselves in full agreement with all the recommendations of the subcommittee in this regard, but I do not think it will be challenged any place, from any source, that the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] has done a very thorough and exhaustive job in conducting the hearings and the investigation into this subject. For that service to the Congress, he is to be congratulated and now has my congratulations.

Mr. BARTLETT (Alaska). In concluding, I want to thank the members of the subcommittee from the bottom of my heart—and I know every Alaskan would wish to join me in this—for the really magnificent contribution they have made in this bill aimed at removing the dread scourge of tuberculosis from Alaska.

Mr. CRAWFORD (Michigan). I, too, wish to compliment the committee for giving due consideration to the Central Valley project of California.

Mr. ALBERT (Oklahoma). I take this time first of all to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] for his very able discussion of this bill insofar as it pertains to appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CASE (South Dakota). I do, however, want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the long, hard, arduous, and intelligent work the members of this subcommittee have given to the Interior Department appropriation bill this year. Certainly in the time I have been a Member of the House, there has never been as much time devoted to preparation of the Interior appropriation bill as has been here evidenced by the voluminous hearings on the details of the bill. I also wish to express my appreciation for the intelligent approach the committee has made to various matters with which it deals.

Mr. MORRIS (Oklahoma). The distinguished gentleman [Mr. SCHWABE] who is now speaking, knows that it is also my desire that these district offices be abolished inasmuch as we have discussed the matter, and I want to compliment the gentleman and the committee for having taken this forward step. In my opinion, it certainly will be beneficial to the Indian Service and it will be beneficial to the Nation as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. STIGLER, the Representative from the Second Congressional District of Oklahoma, is one of the best informed men in Congress on Indian affairs, particularly insofar as the problems and administration affect Oklahoma Indians. Representative STIGLER was not present at the time this bill was considered on the floor, but he appeared before our committee and made a lengthy statement before our committee heartily approving our program and his statement appears in the printed hearings before the committee in connection with this bill. Mr. STIGLER, as shown by the hearings, stated:

> I believe, and I know that it is, since I have been in Congress, the first time that we have been able to obtain a real first-hand knowledge about the operations of the Five Civilized Tribes for the benefit of Members of Congress, and it is one of the biggest agencies in the Indian Service.

Mr. Truman Is Right

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN D. DINGELL
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, as a practical and an uncompromising foe of communism, I submit the following editorial published in the Detroit Free Press under date of May 15, 1948.

The line-up of sound thinkers ever increasing and opposed to the Mundt bill, which died in the Senate, includes in addition to President Truman such men as Bishop Haas, Father Walsh, Senator Taft, Republican Presidential nominee Dewey, and many others who fear the dangerous possibilities of such enactments.

MR. TRUMAN IS RIGHT

In declaring his opposition to a movement in Congress to outlaw the Communist Party in America, President Truman had his feet planted on solid ground.

The position which he took on this matter places him beside Senator TAFT and Governor Dewey, who have also made clear that they are opposed to such a measure. Only Harold Stassen favors the plan.

As Mr. Truman pointed out, there already are adequate laws on the books, both Federal and in most States, to handle treason or subversive activities which endanger the security of the Government.

To pick out the Reds and to outlaw them as a political body, would not stop them from engaging in nefarious activities any more than existing legislation does. It is a matter, not so much of new laws, as of continuing vigilance and the enforcement of measures which are now at our disposal.

There is danger, too, in eliminating by legislation any political movement, dangerous as it may be. In the first place, the result is questionable, particularly where it involves people like Communists who work best underground.

But even more important is the question of where such laws will stop. If America is not strong enough to prevail against communism, and must banish it, who can say what other minority group may not next be adjudged dangerous and treated in the same way. To infringe on the civil rights of any group, no matter how undesirable it may be, is only opening the door to similar treatment of any unpopular cause.

Keeping the Record Straight

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, much confusion seems to exist as to the purpose, status, and activities of the Southwestern Power Administration. It occurs to me that the public is entitled to know the facts. Therefore, I submit this information for the purpose of keeping the record straight.

In the first place, the Southwestern Power Administration was created by an Executive order of President Roosevelt. Congress has never authorized or approved this bureau, so far as enactment of any law creating the same is concerned. For this reason, the President's Bureau of the Budget, in requesting appropriations for the Southwestern Power Administration for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1948, included items for salaries, operating expenses, and so forth, in the request of the Secretary of the Interior's office rather than having a separate budget request for the Southwestern Power Administration.

Apparently, according to its original inception and the inference that may possibly be drawn from the Executive order of the President setting up this administration, bureau, or agency of government, the New Dealers in power at that time had in mind the creation of various authorities, as they called them, to construct, own, control, and operate the electric power business of this country. The scheme was socialistic in the extreme. From the words of those who advocated and were to be in charge of the operation of the authorities that actually were brought into existence, the plan undoubtedly was to put the Government into business in competition with private enterprise and, eventually, to have the Federal Government own and operate the electric power business of this country.

The New Deal administration insisted upon and enacted into law certain projects in connection with the Flood Control Act to the effect that wherever at all feasible hydroelectric power units should be installed in flood-control dams and projects. The Bureau of Reclamation has installed many of these. This is another bureau operated under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and its operations cover large areas in many of our Western States where irrigation is necessary to the economy of the people of those States.

The Southwestern Power Administration envisioned a government within a government, or an empire of its own, as it were, that would control the power business of the Southwest with tie-ins that would extend to and connect with the TVA on the east and Bureau of Reclamation projects on the west, as well as with projects that it was hoped might be built in the Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, and other river valleys, and authorities created therefor.

Several of the largest hydroelectric power plants and dams in connection therewith have been built by the Corps of Army Engineers, and they are operated by the Army engineers. This is true of the Denison Dam on the Red River between Oklahoma and Texas. Some people labor under the misapprehension that, because the Southwestern Power Administration assumes the right and authority to sell the power generated at the Denison Dam the Southwestern Power Administration operates the hydroelectric generating plant at that dam, but such is not the case. It is operated by the Army engineers. The same is true of nearly all of the dams that have been constructed and are now in operation or in contemplation of operation in which power installations are included, except in the Western States where irrigation is an important feature, and in those cases frequently the Bureau of Reclamation operates such power plants. But even in some of the Western States the power plants are operated by the Army engineers, as in the case of the Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River. The other large dam on the Columbia River with its power plant, the Grand Coulee Dam, was built and is being operated by the Bureau of Reclamation. In each instance, however, the Bonneville Power Administration markets the power generated from these dams.

The alleged program of the Southwestern Power Administration was to tie several Government-constructed dams together, and 2 years ago they came before Congress and asked for an appropriation of $23,000,000. They wanted to build steam generating plants, as they said, to firm up the power; for they knew their hydroelectric plants could not be justified on the basis upon which the program apparently was originally sold to the Congress and to the public. The Congress, then a Democratic Congress, and a New Deal Congress, refused to allow any money or to appropriate any funds whatever for the construction of steam generating electric plants by the Southwestern Power Administration. All of us know that firm or dependable power is not to be had from the hydroelectric plants at dams on streams down in our section of the country, for the flow of those streams varies materially from one season of the year to another. About all these hydroelectric plants can be used for is to furnish peaking power, and that is not dependable power or firm power such as is necessary for industry, municipalities, and the Rural Electrification Administration, in their operations. Hence, the best sale that can be made of power generated at these hydroelectric plants is to private industries in the power business who have steam plants of their own, or to those municipalities which operate steam plants.

Three years ago, Congress appropriated $7,500,000 for the Southwestern Power Administration, with which to build some transmission lines; but denied it the authority to build steam generating plants That was for the 1947 fiscal year. In the 1948 fiscal year, Congress refused to appropriate any additional funds to the Southwestern Power Administration, for the reason that they had not yet expended the funds appropriated for the previous fiscal year.

In the 1949 fiscal year, commencing July 1, 1948, the Southwestern Power Administration asked for appropriations for new expenditures of $3,000,000. This was denied by the present Congress, without a dissenting vote; and only enough money for the Southwestern Power Administration to operate for 8 months was appropriated out of the Treasury, for the reason that it was thought that the operation and management of the Southwestern Power Administration should be investigated, and those in charge of these appropriations were not satisfied with the justification submitted by the Administrator. For example, the Administrator of the Southwestern Power Administration appeared before the Interior subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, attempting to justify a submission by the President's Bureau of the Budget for $55,000, $45,000 of which was for alleged operation and maintenance to operate completed facilities—and there are no completed facilities—"and $10,000 for administration costs." As part of the Administrator's statement upon which he expected the committee to approve his requested $55,000, he stated before the committee:

We have some pretty bad woodpeckers in Arkansas, and we have to maintain the lines as soon as they are turned over to us. It has been said the woodpeckers bore into the transmission-line poles a distance of about 2 feet, and when these holes are filled with concrete, those woodpeckers dig the concrete out.

How could anyone expect a sane Congress to appropriate $55,000 or any other sum based upon such a statement of the one in charge of the Southwestern Power Administration?

Many other statements of the Administrator before the Appropriations Committee are about as lacking in rational justification for appropriations. He stated at one time that all of the lines from Norfork down to the Denison Dam were contracted last year, and explained that this was so contracted prior to July 1, 1947, except the substation at Schulter, and at a later appearance before the committee, the committee understood that there had been no contracts let subsequent to July 1, 1947, and that there were ample funds from the previous appropriation of 1947 to complete the work that had been authorized and which we understood had been contracted. However, we were told later that that was not true, and some changes had to be made.

The Administrator further told the committee at the time he appeared before them on February 18, 1948, all of which appears in the printed hearings of the Interior Department Appropriations Subcommittee in connection with the appropriations for the Interior Department for 1949, that the rates charged by the Southwestern Power Administration for electricity are comparable to private industry's rates in the same area.

It is very close. Our rate to REA co-ops would run about 5 mills, and a lot of the companies are approaching that. * * * We would come very close together.

Some have the erroneous impression that the line that the Southwestern Power Administration is building connecting the Norfolk and Denison Dams is soon to be completed. The Administrator told our committee that they would do well to complete it within 3 years. This was his statement when he first appeared before the committee. In a later appearance, on May 14, 1948, the Administrator stated that there is very little of the line to be completed in 1949, and that only one or two segments near the end of that fiscal year are in contemplation of completion. That means that little, if any, of the line will be completed by the contractors by July 1, 1949. This is merely to keep the record straight.

It might also be of interest to the people to learn that the National Reclamation Association, of which Mr. Don McBride is secretary-manager, in its sixteenth annual convention at Phoenix, Ariz., October 29–31, 1947, adopted a resolution emphatically opposing the continuation, or appropriations for further activities, of the Southwestern Power Administration, in the following language:

Whereas the Southwestern Power Administration was created by an Executive order to meet emergencies which existed by virtue of the war and which no longer exist; and

Whereas the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, appropriated $7,500,000 for the continuation of the said Southwestern Power Administration, and said appropriation is but the initial step in the expenditure of more than $200,000,000 to achieve a program outlined in a so-called "comprehensive plan" by the Southwestern Power Administration, which plan sets out the purposes for which said Southwestern Power Administration was created and sets up what is tantamount to a Federal Regional Valley Authority by Executive order without previous enabling legislation; and

Whereas the National Reclamation Association has taken action by resolution and otherwise in opposition to the creation of Federal valley authorities and such opposition is directed against such Federal agencies whether established by congressional act or by Executive order which would bring such agencies into being without previous sanction by Congress; and

Whereas this association deplores the effort to make permanent a creature of Government designed to meet a war emergency and thereby attempt to inculcate principles, procedures, and policies for the peacetime economy without the specific authorization of Congress; and

Whereas there are potential conservation and reclamation and flood-control projects in the Southwest, some of which are proposed by State and Federal agencies other than the War Department, the feasibility of which depends on varying amounts of power revenues, but if the potential market in the Southwest is supplied by Federal steam plants and Federal transmission systems, as proposed by the Southwest Power Administration, many of such projects will prove nonfeasible which would otherwise be feasible; and

Whereas in the considered opinion of the National Reclamation Association there is absolutely no need for extending the Southwestern Power Administration system to other public-power developments, either presently operated or proposed; these having already been interconnected, or are susceptible of interconnection with public systems without the unnecessary waste of Federal funds to provide power markets: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Reclamation Association oppose the continuation of the Southwestern Power Administration and any further appropriations by the Congress for use of said Administration in construction, purchasing, or otherwise acquiring transmission systems and fuel-generating plants.

The late Senator Overton, of Louisiana, is reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 13, 1948, as having said on the floor of the Senate, that he was reading from the Dallas Morning News of April 6, and quoted these words:

Sturrock also charged Monday that the Department of the Interior is trying to keep secret a $3,180,000 appropriation it is seeking for the Southwestern Power Administration, a proposed Federal project which is bitterly opposed by most Texas water groups.

Senator Overton, following the reading of this excerpt from the newspaper, is reported as having said:

Mr. President, I think I may safely add that it does not have the support of a majority of the Senate of the United States.

A portion of Mr. Don McBride's testimony before the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, April 12, 1948, in the printed hearings, follows:

This resolution provides that the association oppose the continuation of the Southwestern Power Administration for any further appropriations to finance its activities. A casual glance at the President's budget would indicate that no appropriations were requested for the construction of any portion of the program outlined a few years ago, amounting to a total of $20,000,000 for the construction of transmission lines and steam plants in the territory of the Southwestern Power Administration. However, when the small print is read, it is found that on pages 456 and 457 of the budget there is requested $3,180,000, "for the administration, operation, and maintenance, and for construction of additional power facilities in the Southwest." For obvious reasons this item was taken from its proper place under the Southwestern Power Administration and placed under the item for the office of the Secretary.

* * * I was chairman of the Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board, which is responsible for the planning and development of the natural resources of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. McBride was then asked if he could think of any good reason whatever why this administration should be continued and appropriations continued to be made for it in any form whatever. Mr. McBride answered:

There is no reason under the sun that I am aware of, and I think, as you said, that I have intimate knowledge not only of the territory in Oklahoma but in Arkansas. * * * The National Reclamation Association opposes any appropriation for the Southwestern Power Administration for the reasons that we believe it is tantamount to a Federal regional valley authority set up by Executive order without previously enabling legislation. * * * Furthermore, we believe that the Southwestern Power Administration was created during the war to serve a useful purpose and that its duty has been performed. * * * We believe that this is one place that the President's budget can be trimmed and, at the same time, the people of the territory of the Southwestern Power Administration in no way will be injured.

Mr. Speaker, these and many other facts could be produced to keep the record straight.

The Mundt Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EARL C. MICHENER
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, May 19, 1948

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the debate on this bill has continued for days. The Committee on Un-American Activities has led the fight for the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has spearheaded the opposition. Suffice it to say that each side has been adequately presented.

The first decision under our responsibility as legislators requires that we answer this question: Is communism throughout the world and in our own country such a threat and menace to our free institutions, our personal liberties, and our form of government, as to require the interposition of the legislative powers of the Congress?

No one has had the temerity to directly defend communism in this forum. This legislative proposal has been otherwise attacked. It is insisted that there are but few known Communists in the United States, and that to attempt by legislative fiat to hamper or control the activities of these Communists in our midst might interfere with our constitutional guaranties.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] insists that there are in existence two well-known laws: The Voorhis Act, which provides for the registration of foreign agents, and the McCormack Act, which makes it a criminal offense for anyone to willfully advocate overthrow of the Government by force and violence. In addition, of course, there is the law against treason.

It is argued that there is no necessity for passing additional legislation inasmuch as the enforcement of present laws will adequately protect the country against communism. I cannot agree with my friend from New York in this particular. My conclusion is strengthened by the statement made by the Attorney General when he appeared at the hearings before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. In explaining the necessity for additional law, he said:

I lack the precise mandates which Congress should provide to give me the authority to move in against the subversive Communists.

The committee then made further inquiry as to the type of legislation the Attorney General felt he needed to make it possible for him to properly protect the Government against communism.

The committee's study and investigation found fruition in this Mundt bill which is now before us. I agree with the committee that the Constitution does not deny to the Congress the power to enact laws which will defend the Nation from those who would use liberties guaranteed by the Constitution to destroy it. Communism as an economic, social, and political theory is one thing; communism as a secret conspiracy, devoted to subverting the interests of the United States to that of a foreign dictatorship, is another. If communism in the United States operated in the open, without foreign direction and without attempting to set up a dictatorship subservient to a foreign power, legislation directed against Communists might not be justified or necessary. As we all know, this, however, is not the case.

Our country is today resisting Communist aggression abroad, and it naturally follows that if we have communism at home, the part of wisdom suggests that we proceed at once to put our own house in order. The Communist fifth column in this country is real and dangerous. It takes its direction from Moscow. It operates in secrecy and behind closed doors. Deception is one of its cardinal principles. In these circumstances it is not surprising that the American Communists are all upset. If this Mundt bill becomes a law, they will be forced to give their right names.

Ten years of investigation by the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the Department of Justice, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have established these facts:

First. That the Communist movement in the United States is foreign controlled.

Second. That its ultimate objective with respect to the United States is to overthrow our free American institutions in favor of a Communist totalitarian dictatorship to be controlled from abroad.

Third. That its activities are carried on by secret and conspiratorial methods.

Fourth. That its activities, both because of the alarming march of Communist forces abroad and because of the scope and nature of Communist activities here in the United States, constitute an immediate and powerful threat to the security of the United States and to the American way of life.

It is easy to argue that additional law is not needed, yet the fact remains that existing law has proved ineffective. It is pretty hard to devise means of combating the tactics of communism, which have been evolved by shrewd men who spend their lives perfecting methods to circumvent the law and law-enforcement machinery of every country in which they operate.

The Mundt bill does not outlaw the Communist Party as such. It is aimed at exposure of Communist activities. It will take the wolves out of sheep's clothing. It will remove the false whiskers.

Section 4 of the bill provides:

CERTAIN PROHIBITED ACTS

SEC. 4. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

(1) To attempt in any manner to establish in the United States a totalitarian dictatorship the direction and control of which is to be vested in, or exercised by or under the domination or control of, any foreign government, foreign organization, or foreign individual;

(2) To perform or attempt to perform any act with intent to facilitate or aid in bringing about the establishment in the United States of such a totalitarian dictatorship;

(3) Actively to participate in the management, direction, or supervision of any movement to establish in the United States such a totalitarian dictatorship;

(4) Actively to participate in the management, direction, or supervision of any movement to facilitate or aid in bringing about the establishment in the United States of such a totalitarian dictatorship;

(5) To conspire to do anything made unlawful by this subsection.

I ask you, Does this section take away any of the rights, guaranties, or privileges to which those affected are entitled under the Constitution? The answer is, Of course not. Be it remembered that there has been more opposition to this section by Communists, fellow travelers, their comrades and organizations, than to any other provision in the bill. Be it also remembered that this section has reference only to an organization controlled by a foreign power.

The reading of the section should convince all patriots it is only a proper and necessary safeguard to our Republic.

The committee report states that—

A careful analysis of the strategy and tactics of communism in the United States discloses activities by reason of which the committee has concluded that legislation can and should be directed toward—

(1) Making unlawful all activity which has as its purpose setting up a totalitarian government in the United States under foreign control;

(2) In view of its foreign-directed character, requiring the Communist movement in the United States to operate in the open rather than underground;

(3) Cutting the threads which bind the international Communist conspiracy together by restricting travel of members of the American section of the world Communist movement; and

(4) Protecting the integrity of the Government itself by denying Government employment to members of the American section of the world Communist movement.

Mr. Speaker, is there an individual here, unless he be a Communist or a Communist sympathizer, who does not agree with these conclusions? If these facts are admitted, then it is high time that the Congress does something about it.

The other section of the bill which makes the Communist Party and its sympathizers squirm is the provision requiring the party and its front organizations to register with the Attorney General. This registration must include the names of officers, the sources and use of funds of all front organizations; also the names and addresses of all members of the Communist Party. It is also made unlawful for Communists to accept Federal employment without revealing their connections and it will be likewise unlawful for any Federal officer knowingly to appoint a Communist to a Government position. What is wrong about that?

In short, it will not be unlawful to entertain Communist views and free speech, as contemplated by the Constitution, will be preserved. If Communists are operating in the country, certainly they should be compelled to make their identities known and when their identities are known, then there should be a law against their subversive activities. That is all this bill contemplates.

I repeat that the Communist Party is not outlawed. Neither are Communist-front organizations, but both are required to advocate their philosophy in the open and not underground. If any American wants to run with the Communists, he should be willing to face the consequences. If he advocates a cause because of conviction, he should be willing to take his stand openly. The footlights of public inspection should be turned on so that all of us can see the act. The floodlights of legal exposure will be most helpful. As has been so aptly said, there should be no dark corners of conspiracy in the United States.

Executive orders issued by the President are advisable and necessary at times; however, the democratic way is to permit representatives of the people in Congress, after adequate public hearings and debate, to write laws rather than for the people to be controlled by Presidential proclamations issued without public hearings or public debate. At present, by virtue of a Presidential order, the Attorney General, after an ex parte investigation, issues a list of Communist-front organizations. It seems to me the better way is for the Attorney General to hold public hearings and permit these organizations to be heard before they are listed and published as subversive. This bill does just that thing, and more. If these organizations are not satisfied with the findings of the Attorney General, a right of review in the courts is provided. That is the American way, and do not forget that the facts must be established by a preponderance of the evidence and not merely by the presentation of any substantial evidence.

The Mundt bill has the endorsement of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Catholic War Veterans, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and such patriotic organizations as the Daughters of the American Revolution, in addition to what I believe to be a vast majority of the American people.

Naturally all Communists are opposed to any legislation restricting their activities. This does not mean that all of those who oppose the Mundt bill are Communists. Some sincere, public-spirited, and thoroughly patriotic individuals and groups doubt the wisdom of passing it. They have been misinformed about the bill. Their views are entitled to every consideration but, in the end, it is the duty of the Congress to weigh all the evidence and then act without fear or favor in the interest of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, I say this because I have received a large number of telegrams, postcards, and letters from the city of Ann Arbor, Mich., opposing the Mundt bill. The signers of these telegrams are certainly not all Communists, but evidently believe that this bill is a step in the wrong direction. I have had no opposition to the Mundt bill from residents of the congressional district which I have the honor to represent here, excepting these messages from Ann Arbor. Because of these protests from this group, I have given unusual attention to this bill and the reasons for its proposal. For instance, the first protest telegram which I received reads, as follows:

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

Representative EARL C. MICHENER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge strongly that you oppose the Mundt bill for control of subversive activities.

Any conspiracy to set up totalitarian government under foreign control is adequately punishable by present laws on treason.

Proposed new law is totalitarian in spirit and in complete disregard of Bill of Rights. It can easily lead to undemocratic suppression of political parties which oppose policies of the Government.

The threat of communism should be met by a constructive program which eliminates the causes of communism and not by forcing the Communist Party underground.

I am personally acquainted with many of these people who sign as professors of the teaching staff of the University of Michigan. Their views are entitled to consideration and I regret that it is impossible for me to agree with them. I think they all call themselves liberals. Some of them are followers of Henry Wallace.

One of these professors addressed a letter to me on May 15 which reads:

WASHTENAW COUNTY
COMMITTEE FOR DEMOCRATIC RIGHTS,
Ann Arbor, Mich.

Hon. EARL C. MICHENER,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MICHENER: I suppose you have been wondering what has been happening here in Ann Arbor and what is the basis of the flood of telegrams and letters we have been sending you about the Mundt bill.

Last week Professor Brumm and I took the initiative in organizing a Washtenaw County Committee for Democratic Rights, whose main purpose is to oppose any threat to democratic rights such as the Mundt bill. We have contacted, by mail and phone, a large number of persons in the community, and as a result our committee now includes over 150 members, including such distinguished citizens as Dean Hayward Keniston, Prof. Preston Slosson, Prof. Arthur L. Dunham, and many others. They are the ones who have endorsed and signed the telegrams we have been sending you.

We do not know the outcome of the House debate on the bill, but we hope you are taking our opinions into account. It is indeed significant that the bill is being opposed, not only by outstanding liberals, but also by many conservatives. In fact, perhaps the main reason for the opposition is that the bill itself is regarded as far too radical and extreme.

There is one request which we would appreciate very much your fulfilling. If the bill passes the House, could you please send me a copy (if possible, several copies) of the final House version of the bill. We want to acquaint everyone here with the actual text. All opinions expressed thus far by the members of our committee have been based on the text of a committee form of the bill. It is the text itself which has caused the opposition, and not a propaganda campaign.

Sincerely,

WILFRED KAPLAN,
Cochairman.

Mr Speaker, this letter was most helpful to me in explaining why this flood of telegrams was received from Ann Arbor.

The Mundt bill as it passed the House was amended and improved, and I feel sure some of the objections of these Ann Arbor friends have been removed. The fact that the bill, after several days' debate, study, and amendment, passed the House by a vote of 319 for to 58 against, which is not a political, partisan vote, is pretty good evidence that the majority sentiment of the country found expression in the votes of the congressional Representatives in Congress.

Personally, I do not believe that this bill is unconstitutional. If I were so convinced, of course I would vote against it. It has been argued that because of the time element in this session, the Mundt bill cannot be considered by the Senate; that, therefore, its passage by the House will be but an idle gesture. To me this argument carries no weight. The House has a responsibility and, if the safety of the country requires this legislation, we should fearlessly meet the issue regardless of what the Senate or the President may do.

We have been warned that this law could not be enforced, and that the Communists would not respect it, especially with reference to registering. Indeed, every Member of Congress received a personal letter from William Z. Foster, chairman of the Communist Party, U. S. A., dated May 7, 1948, protesting against any legislation of this type, and advising the Congress:

The Communist Party will not register should the Mundt bill become law.

This is a threat and a promise. Mr. Foster set forth his reasons for opposing the law, and those reasons I have heretofore mentioned.

Well, if this bill is unconstitutional and impinges upon the constitutional rights, privileges, and liberties of our citizens, then it should not be the law. The Supreme Court will determine that question and I think the Congress will be pleased to give the Court the privilege of exercising its constitutional functions. If Mr. Foster is correct, then his views will be upheld. On the other hand, if he is wrong, the Court will by the same token uphold the law.

Socialized Medicine in Any Form Cannot Be Justified in This Country

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, during the latter years of the New Deal administration, many forms of socialized medicine were suggested. Regardless of the form, or even if it be called compulsory health insurance, socialized medicine cannot be justified in a free America.

We are not ready, and I hope we never will be ready, to inaugurate or usher in a socialistic regime. We don't need socialization of medicine, socialization of housing, or socializaton of any profession or industry. Let us ever steer clear of the efforts of some to put the camel's nose under the tent.

A most interesting book has been issued by the Brookings Institution, of Washington, D. C., entitled "The Issue of Compulsory Health Insurance." The following article on this publication recently appeared in the Washington Star:

CONDITIONS DISTORTED IN HEALTH-INSURANCE FIGHT, BROOKINGS SAYS

The movement for compulsory health insurance has not only ignored the fact of good and improving conditions, as revealed by mortality rates, but has misused statistics to show evidence of need for medical care, a Brookings Institution report charged today.

The study, entitled "The Issue of Compulsory Health Insurance," conducted for the Subcommittee on Health of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, was made by Drs. George W. Bachman and Lewis Meriam.

It declared compulsory health insurance advocates have failed to take account of numerous factors affecting costs and practicability and quality of medical care that might be expected under a compulsory system.

"There are probably enough physicians available in the country as a whole to meet the needs of those who seek medical care, but not enough to meet all demands likely to be made under an insurance system," the report declared. "Likewise, there are not enough dentists to meet present yearly demands, and there is a great shortage of nurses. The construction of numerous hospitals would still further complicate the situation. Additional requirements imposed upon the present active medical personnel could only lead to deterioration of quality of medical care."

The health of America's white population equals that of small countries with the best records, the report said, and great strides have been made here in the health of Negroes.

"The use of statistics on draft rejections as evidence of a lack of medical care has provided a misleading picture of the health of the people," said the report, pointing out men were physically disqualified for the armed forces for causes in no way related to lack of medical care, such as being too short.

Each single rejection was entered statistically, the same man being counted a number of times, the report declared.

In the Brookings Institution report, there are a few pertinent sentences which I wish to quote. On page 37 the following interesting findings and conclusions appear:

Although in every income class some consumer units will spend more in a given year than they receive in income, the average unit with an income of roughly $2,000 or over will show savings.

On the average medical care is not a big item. In most income classes it amounts roughly to between 4 and 4.5 percent. Again, on the average it does not equal expenditures for automobile purchase and operation or alcoholic beverages, and it is about the same as expenditures for tobacco and recreation combined. In both 1935-36 and 1941, the available figures show for all income classes with total incomes of $1,500 a year or over that savings exceeded expenditures for medical care.

In the light of these facts, it seems necessary to conclude that on the average lack of medical care among consumers with total incomes of around $2,000 or over at 1941 price levels is due more to failure to give medical care a high priority than to lack of resources to pay for it. Curtailment of luxury items in food, clothing, and shelter and reduction in expenditures for alcoholic liquors, automobile ownership and operation, tobacco, and recreation would permit a material increase in medical care. Changes in State and national income-tax laws with respect to deductions for the cost of medical care would permit material increases in expenditures for medical care.

Some persons, possibly conversant with these income and expenditure figures, say that families with low income cannot pay for medical care without lowering their level of living. If the maintenance of the customary rate of saving is included as an item in the level of living, the statement is obviously true, but it seems to beg the question. Prudent persons save for the rainy day. Conditions that call for substantial expenditures for medical care are, according to their plans of financial management, to be met from savings if necessary. Thousands of individuals faced with demands for medical care meet them currently by curtailing their expenditures for nonessential or luxury items. True, they reduce their level of living, but their level of living depends on how much they have left after bills for essentials have been paid.

On page 48 of the Brookings Institution report, this statement appears:

One of the greatest dangers of socialization is the destruction of individual incentives, and this danger is particularly great when dealing with persons of great creative ability.

Finally, I quote from page 51:

The introduction of compulsory insurance opens the way for governmental control of the medical profession.

Rural Electrification

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE
OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, rural electrification has proved to be the most popular of all programs for Government assistance to farmers. To one who, like myself, can remember a boyhood on the farm where the only illumination was coal oil lamps and lanterns, it is easy to see why this is so.

Electricity brings to the farm home many of the conveniences of the city, not only illumination, but such conveniences and necessities as refrigeration, electric stoves, electric washing machines, electric irons, and many others. To a large extent, it is taking the drudgery out of farm life.

But household use is only one of the manifold uses for electricity on the farm. Even more important, from the standpoint of efficient operation, are the great savings which are made through the use of electric machinery of various kinds—in the barn, the tool shed, and the farm lot. Even in those areas where electrification has long since taken place, new and more effective uses for electrification are being found all the time. It is said that already about 400 different uses for farm electricity have been reported.

The rural-electrification program is a program of self-help for farmers. It is based upon loans made by Government agencies to rural-electrification cooperatives organized by farmers themselves to bring electricity from a central power station to their farms. These cooperatives operate on a nonprofit basis so as to provide electric service at cost to their members. The directors of these cooperatives are local people, elected because of their interest in farm electrification. They serve without compensation.

REA loans are made on a business-like basis. They bear 2 percent interest and are payable over a maximum period of 35 years. They are sound and safe loans, but not loans that could ordinarily be made by commercial lending agencies. Not only are borrowers paying up the principal and interest on their loans as due but, in many cases, they are making payments on principal in advance of the due date. As of March 31, 1948, REA borrowers had paid $160,761,674 in principal and interest on their Government loans. This included $19,239,822 paid on principal in advance of the time it was due. Only $1,077,165 was more than 30 days overdue.

Government programs for rural electrification began in 1935. There has been steady progress since that time although naturally the war slowed matters up because of inability to secure labor and materials. Shortages of labor and materials are still slowing up construction, but even with these handicaps great progress is being made.

Congress has given full recognition to the need for greater progress in rural electrification. Appropriations have been increased and the Eightieth Congress, in its two sessions, has authorized loans amounting to $800,000,000 which is about 40 percent of the total authorizations since the program began in 1935. I am sure that Congress will continue to authorize loans as fast as the funds can be used effectively. I was very happy to have the privilege of voting for those increased amounts.

Naturally, Kansas people will be interested in what has been done in our States. The first REA loan in Kansas was approved in November 1936, and the first REA-financed line was put in operation on April 1, 1938, by the Brown-Atchison Electric Cooperative Association of Horton. According to a recent release from the Rural Electrification Administration, up to May 1948, total loans in the amount of $44,110,351 have been approved for Kansas and there were still on file applications totaling $12,140,000.

Nine of the thirty-five REA cooperatives in Kansas are located in the Fifth Congressional District. Loans in the amount of over $12,500,000 have been approved for these cooperatives and, as of May 1, there were pending applications covering $4,435,000 additional. Thus, more than a fourth of all of the loans approved in Kansas have been made to cooperatives in the Fifth District, and of the applications now pending for Kansas, more than a third in amount are from the Fifth District. This illustrates the great interest which farmers in the Fifth District are taking in rural electrification. The number of Fifth District consumers covered by the applications is 14,762, and of these 7,574 have been connected up to date.

There are difficult problems to be solved in connection with rural electrification in the Fifth District, particulary in the western part where farms are large and population is sparse. In addition, in some areas, there is a lack of adequate and cheap power sources. These obstacles, however, are gradually being overcome and I think the time is not far distant when REA cooperatives will be operating in every one of the 33 counties in the district. There is no matter before Congress in which I have personally taken a greater interest than rural electrification. I am tremendously interested in seeing that its facilities are expanded as rapidly as possible. While I realize there are many problems to be met and that the shortage of materials and labor is still slowing up construction, I do not want any farm home where electricity is desired to wait any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Let me take this occasion to say that I shall continue to do everything possible to expand rural electrification and will not be satisfied until the lights go on in every farm home in my district.

Inconvenience and Confusion Result From Rural Mail Routes Crossing State Lines

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, when Congress is not in session, I make it a point to visit as many communities of my district as possible. I have made it a practice to invite my constituents to discuss with me any problems they may have involving the Federal Government or any of its agencies. I have always tried to make it easy for my people to present their problems to me. After all, according to our American traditions, government, whether it be Federal, State, or local, is instituted and maintained to serve the people. In many foreign lands, it seems to be the plan that the state comes first, and the people are supposed to serve the state. This is statism, in whatever form it manifests itself.

When any Government agency is established in our country, it is the duty of those administering that agency to see to it that the service they render the people is the simplest and best service that can be rendered for the money. Many years ago, free rural delivery of mail was established for the purpose of delivering mail at the front gates of the people who lived along the route. Usually, the rural route emanated from the larger towns where the railroads brought the mail to, and took it from, such towns.

The system became very popular with the country folk, and is among the most worth-while services rendered by the Federal Government. However, as time went on changes and improvements suggested themselves. We should ever strive to improve the service. For example, my congressional district is bordered on the north by the State of Kansas and on the east by the States of Missouri and Arkansas. These three States were settled and developed before what was then known as Indian Territory, now the State of Oklahoma, became densely populated, or had any towns and railroads of consequence. Quite naturally the rural mail routes were established out of the towns and cities of Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas along the Oklahoma borders, and the rural mail routes reached over into Oklahoma. Oklahoma has since become more densely populated. Her cities and towns have sprung up and developed until they are on a par with those of the adjoining States. But the rural mail routes have not been changed. The Post Office Department has not kept pace with our development and increase of population.

Great inconvenience and confusion result from rural mail routes crossing State lines. In some instances hundreds of patrons live in Oklahoma on rural routes emanating from towns in neighboring States. The friends and relatives of the Oklahoma citizens know that they live in Oklahoma, and naturally are prone to address their mail to the post offices in Oklahoma nearest to which such Oklahoma citizens reside. Again, I say, inconvenience and confusion result.

In some instances the mail emanates from a town in the bordering State and is carried on a rural or star route to one or more towns within the borders of Oklahoma, extending many miles into Oklahoma, to people living along that route.

The only way to avoid this confusion is to let those rural mail routes originate in Oklahoma post offices. Not only friends are misled, but public officials are confused. The progress of business is impeded, advertisers fail to reach the people in their trade territories, and all are the losers.

I quote the following letter from an outstanding citizen, a member of the Craig County Excise Board, which illustrates some of the inconvenience and confusion which result from rural mail routes crossing State lines:

WELCH, OKLA., June 17, 1948

Hon. GEORGE B. SCHWABE,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reference to rural route 3, Chetopa, Kans., and the proposed change to Welch, Okla.

I have been a patron of rural route 3, Chetopa, Kans., for a number of years. My home is in north Craig County, Okla., yet we receive our mail on a Kansas delivery. May I quote to you a few of our difficulties concerning this matter. My daughter teaches school in Oklahoma and since Oklahoma does not hire Kansas teachers, she has been investigated a number of times with a Kansas address. All people who obtain Federal loans run into considerable delay and difficulty when they live in Oklahoma and receive their mail on a Kansas delivery. One more thing which we have trouble with most every day is the official documents which have to be signed Chetopa, Kans., Craig County, Okla. It seems to me that we could eliminate considerable trouble by changing this route to Welch, Okla.

Your support on this matter will certainly be appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

R. N. MIRES,
Member, Craig County Excise Board.

I have been working on this proposition for some time, and hope that it will challenge the attention of the Post Office Department and that, as a result of the efforts I am exerting, the Department will attempt to correct these awkward situations, to the end that the patrons of our rural free-delivery system who live near the State borders may enjoy the same service that citizens not so located now enjoy and appreciate so highly. This will make the homes of such people more attractive, more inviting, and will actually increase the value of their homesteads and their land.

It is a problem which should be solved without further delay.

Historical Review of Marshall Plan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, 3 months ago on March 24, 1948, Women Investors Research Institute, Inc., of 224 Second Street SE., Washington, D. C., of which Cathrine Curtis is president, prepared—at the request of a group of Members of the Congress—a special study of the Marshall plan and its historical background. The accuracy of this study, institute special report No. 500, is indicated by congressional action in the last few months. For example, this study states that—if Congress enacted the Marshall plan into law—it would be necessary for us to enact certain implementing legislation if there was to be any hope that the so-called Marshall plan could work.

This study stated 3 months ago that the first piece of such implementing legislation would provide for lend-lease II in order to give military equipment to the Marshall plan countries. The Senate, after a few hours debate, passed Senate Resolution 239 on June 11—which admittedly grants the President power to lend-lease such military equipment as he believes necessary to these Marshall plan countries.

This institute study also stated that the second piece of such implementing legislation would be enactment of a peacetime Selective Service Act. That will have become law before this session of Congress adjourns.

This excellent and authoritative Marshall plan study which Women Investors Research Institute prepared for Congress lists four additional pieces of legislation that will be necessary to implement the Marshall plan. They are contained in the complete study, which follows:

ANALYSIS AND HISTORICAL REVIEW RELATIVE TO THE MARSHALL PLAN

Several weeks ago the institute was requested by a group of Members of Congress to analyze the so-called Marshall European recovery plan and to report:

1. The stated objectives of this type of plan
2. Whether such objectives—if achieved—would be generally beneficial to the United States and to the world.
3. The probability of achieving those objectives through such a plan.
4. What steps the Congress might consider to make such achievement possible, if analysis established the improbability of their achievement through the Marshall plan.

The report, which follows, is divided into two parts.

Part I reviews the stated objectives of the Marshall plan, analyzes the probability of achieving those objectives through such a plan, and offers some suggestions for congressional consideration.

Part II presents a brief historical review of the events which have contributed materially to the creation of the present European situation—with which the Marshall plan is supposed to cope—and additional events that have contributed to the present threat of world totalitarianism and world war III.

PART I. THE MARSHALL PLAN

The stated objectives of the Marshall plan—according to statements made by Secretary of State George C. Marshall before the Senate Foreign Relations and House Foreign Affairs Committees—are:

1. To halt the spread of communism in Europe.
2. To restore normal trade and commerce throughout the world.
3. To maintain true freedom of the individual.
4. To establish a durable peace.

Further, the "Findings and Declaration of Policy" of both the Senate and House foreign aid bills declare that:

"The restoration or maintenance in European countries of principles of individual liberty, free institutions, and genuine independence rests largely upon the establishment of sound economic (and political) conditions, stable international (economic and political) relationships, and the achievement by the countries of Europe of a healthy economy independent of extraordinary outside assistance. * * * Accordingly, it is (further) declared to be the policy of the people of the United States to sustain and strengthen principles of individual liberty, free institutions, and genuine independence in Europe * * *." (Words in parentheses are additions made in the House bill to the Senate bill.)

These objectives, if achieved, undoubtedly could be beneficial to the United States and to the entire world.

It must be recognized that, under the Marshall plan, the United States, with its private enterprise system of American industrial capitalism, is expected to furnish aid to any European country that can qualify under its broad requirements.

Who benefits?

It is presently understood that the countries which will benefit under this plan are Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Eire, France, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxemburg, The Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, and the United Kingdom

However, Secretary of State Marshall, former Under Secretary of State Acheson, William McC. Martin, Chairman of the Export-Import Bank, and other high administration officials have testified that no country—even Russia and her satellite countries—is barred from partaking of Marshall plan benefits. And all colonial possessions of participating countries also will be allowed to enjoy these benefits, according to Secretary Marshall's statements.

While this plan has generally been advanced as an economic aid plan, the House Foreign Affairs Committee frankly declared—in opening its Marshall plan hearings—that its objective in those hearings—and in Marshall plan action—is to establish "an over-all pattern for all foreign relief."

The Marshall plan proposes that this relief by the taxpayers of the United States shall not go from this Government to those individuals in foreign countries who actually need it—or who can make the best use of it—but to the administrations in charge of those governments. They, then, will distribute this relief to such citizens within their respective countries as they deem advisable and in a manner most beneficial to their own objectives.

What are those administrations? What are their probable objectives?

The three forces

Ex-Premier Leon Blum of France recently announced "There is a third force rising in Europe"—thereby implying the previous existence of two other forces. These three forces are:

1. The largest minority—unorganized and not too well financed—is composed of those who believe in private enterprise, the right privately to own property, to make profits, and who believe in free institutions and individual liberty and who are strongly opposed to all forms of controlled economy.

2. The second largest minority—strongly organized and well-financed—is composed of Communists and Communist sympathizers.

3. The third, and smallest, minority—well organized and financed—is composed of various types of Socialists who believe in the planned economy of a corporate state—with its state control of enterprise, property, and individual activity.

Neither group has, within itself, sufficient strength—votes—to gain control of government through lawful means.

Both Communist and Socialist groups oppose any possibility of the private enterprise group attaining control of government. The Communists know, in that event, they will be driven from the country and all hope of seizing power will be lost. The Socialists realize that, if the private enterprise group attains power their dreams of the corporate state and planned economy will be, at least temporarily, ended.

The Socialists attain nominal control of government under such circumstances by entering into a bipartisan coalition arrangement with the Communists.

Under this arrangement the Communists form a coalition with the Socialists and, for a price, vote to enable the Socialists to take over nominal control of the government.

The price paid by the Socialists for this coalition support is to permit the Communists to take over certain key cabinet posts.

These posts usually are the ministries of the interior, defense, and foreign affairs.

The ministry of the interior, under the European system of government, has control of the police, the labor unions, and similar internal affairs.

The ministry of defense has control of the armed forces.

The ministry of foreign affairs is comparable to that of our Secretary of State.

The Communists are not always in a position to compel the Socialists to give them all three of these posts, but the minimum price for coalition support is either the Interior or Defense posts.

Once the Communists gain control of either, or all of these posts, they are in a position to press forward their campaign to turn the country into a Soviet satellite. They usually proceed slowly, using every propaganda devise to convince the citizenry that they are the true defenders of democracy and the common man.

They become the most outspoken proponents in the legislature and in the press of social legislation for the downtrodden, punitive legislation against profits and private enterprise, and speak loudly of equality for all. Their program is designed to win public support, to convince the people that they, the Communists, are true patriots.

The bipartisan trap

Invariably the Socialists in an attempt to hold their waning public popularity and to stem an apparent rising public popularity for Communist proposals, join with the Communists in a bipartisan activity. Their hope is that in so doing they can take public credit for such social and similar legislation as may be enacted.

Meanwhile, having gained control of either Interior or Defense posts the Communists begin their liquidation of the leaders of the private-enterprise opposition. This campaign starts with smearing the opposition leaders and ends with their physical liquidation.

While carrying forward these campaigns, the Communists are maneuvering a steady infiltration of their workers and adherents into key positions in the police, the tradeunions, and the armed forces.

If they have been able to gain control of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, that permits them to maintain direct contact with Moscow and to direct the foreign affairs of the country for the benefit of Stalin.

Finally, when they believe they have gained sufficient strength, principally through a system of political blackmail and smear campaigns against both Socialists and private enterprisers—they create a government crisis—bring on chaos—take over control of the machinery of government—and turn the country into another Soviet satellite.

This program succeeded in Czechoslovakia.

It failed in France because French Communists overestimated their strength with the people. When the real test election came—they found that many Frenchmen—particularly farmers—had voted the Communist ticket as a protest against the French Socialist Government's policies, especially its price-control policy.

Communists and Socialists have common goal

Coups—similar to that which recently occurred in Czechoslovakia—are a constant threat in any country where a comparable Socialist-Communist bipartisan coalition government exists, for—as George Bernard Shaw so aptly remarked "socialisim is nothing but communism, with better English." Lenin stated that "socialism is termed by Marx as the first stage, or lower phase of communism" and Bukharin declared that "socialism is communism in course of construction. It is incomplete communism."

An analysis of the objectives of both socialism and communism reveals they have the common goal of complete state-controlled, planned economy. While the Socialist seeks to attain that goal through the safer route of legislative compromise and chicanery—the Communist drives toward it either by direct revolt or—if that is not immediately feasible—through conspiracy.

The latter approach was exposed by Max Eastman—translater of Leon Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution, in a recent article, when, speaking of the situation in the United States, he wrote "The Communist movement is not a propaganda league * * * not an educational movement * * * it is a conspiracy to seize power. * * * They—Communists—are opposing communism themselves now because they find this the easiest way to get their members, accomplices, and dupes into key positions. * * * They are not conspiring to seize power now. * * * They know, as well as you do, the juvenile folly of that. They are planning to seize power in a national crisis."

Since the preponderant majority of the present administrations in control of the governments of the 16 western European countries are either Socialist or Socialist-Communist coalitions—it is difficult to understand how subsidizing those administrations can be expected to assist in achieving the stated objectives of that plan.

Aids Soviet trade

Further, the Marshall plan is not intended to end all trade between the 16 western European countries and the Soviet and its eastern satellites, according to Secretary Marshall, Mr. Acheson, Export-Import Bank Chairman Martin, and other high administration officials. They have stated—in committee testimony—that the economies of the 16 western European countries cannot be restored to a stable condition unless their trade with the eastern European countries is renewed.

This should not be a surprise. The complete severance of trade between these two sections of Europe would be comparable to a similar severance between the States east and west of the Mississippi in this country.

Therefore, it must be anticipated that at least some of the aid that flows to the 16 western European countries under the Marshall plan must pass through the iron curtain into Soviet satellite countries and to Russia.

It is true that the public has been led to believe—through carefully planned propaganda—that the Marshall plan is primarily designed to halt communism. However, the record reveals that this propaganda theme was advanced only after a State Department survey of public sentiment established that the plan could win wider public acceptance if it had an anti-Communist tinge.

This same propaganda campaign has created the general impression that the greater part of funds advanced to foreign countries under this plan will be loans that are to be repaid. Again, Secretary Marshall, Mr. Acheson, Export-Import Bank Chairman Martin, and other administration officials have admitted that not more that 20 percent of Marshall plan funds will go to these countries in the form of loans that we may hope to collect.

Marshall plan commitments

This propaganda campaign also has led the people generally to believe the Marshall plan will consist—for the most part—in shipping food to Europe needed to prevent people from starving. A break-down of the plan's proposed commitments shows that it is divided as follows:

Thirty percent in heavy equipment such as steel, trucks, tractors, building materials and equipment, rails, machine tools, dock-loading equipment, etc.; 40 percent in grains, foodstuffs, and similar items, and the remaining 30 percent in various consumer goods items, such as automobiles, washing machines, radios, sewing machines, electric ice boxes, and similar devices, home furnishings, household furniture, etc.

The vast majority of these items already are in short supply in this country. If—to this extraordinary drain on our production—we add the demands of a stepped-up national defense, the ultimate result must either be wild inflation and soaring prices or reenactment of price-control legislation.

It is believed that those who originated the Marshall plan recognized this possibility. President Truman has repeatedly asked Congress for such legislation. In addition, the State Department's working-group list for this program also reveals that the working group on domestic controls needed to implement ERP was head by Donald D. Kennedy, now of the State Department, but formerly price executive of the OPA.

What is implementation?

Proponents of the plan now admit that economic aid alone will not halt communism in or bring economic stability to Europe. Implementation will be needed. Implementation, in present-day diplomatic language, as was learned in the Palestine partition situation, means the use of troops.

The European countries involved already have notified us they cannot be expected to supply this implementation. They frankly state they now face a manpower shortage and cannot be expected to use much of the existing manpower pool for military purposes. They also state—if they are to achieve economic stability—they must use most of their available manpower for production.

They evidently expect to implement the Marshall plan with some form of lend-lease of military supplies and send the troops to handle those supplies. (See Reference to the London Economist in part II.)

In view of the foregoing, how can the Marshall plan achieve its stated objectives?

Certainly maintaining Socialist or Socialist-Communist coalition governments in Europe cannot be expected to halt the spread of communism or maintain true freedom of the individual there. And, since subsidizing such governments can only result in a continuation and extension of the planned-economy ideology in Europe, how can that restore normal trade conditions throughout the world or establish a durable peace?

It would appear that, if the Marshall plan should be enacted, it would result in the foregoing world situation. The United States then would face one of two alternatives:

As the lone free-enterprise country in a world of planned-economy countries, it must abandon its free-enterprise economy for some form of planned economy, or face economic isolation.

What other objective can enactment of the Marshall plan achieve?

Foundation for world government

It can lay the foundation for acceptance by this country of the International Trade Organization program, an important part of the United Nations world program.

The purpose of ITO is to establish and maintain a world planned economy—with allocation and control of production, prices, markets, and investments. It provides for an industrial rationing system—under which no new industry can be started by any member country without permission of the ITO Council.

Acceptance of this program is being carefully prepared by the State Department, under a plan that Department instituted in the fall of 1945. Discussions now have reached the final stage between representatives of this country and those of 50 foreign nations. The present schedule calls for submitting this program to Congress for approval and acceptance early next year.

In this connection, it should be noted that, when Marshall-plan proponents faced stiff opposition of the complete 4½-year commitment originally requested, they readily agreed to accept only a definite commitment until June 30, 1949.

Such a commitment would keep the planned-economy governments of a majority of those 50 foreign nations in existence until the ITO program is put before Congress.

Analysis of the ITO program establishes that—once it is accepted—it will practically banish free enterprise and individual liberty from world trade. A form of corporate state planned economy—similar to that which Bernard M. Baruch helped Mussolini establish in Italy in the early 1920's—will replace private enterprise and individual initiative.

Acceptance of the United Nations ITO program will also call for acceptance of certain related programs of the UN Economic and Social Council—such as a world FEPC.

Implementing legislation

Therefore—if Congress approves the Marshall plan—it would appear evident it must be prepared to approve—at an early date—implementing legislation calling for:

1. Lend-lease II to supply Marshall plan countries with needed military equipment.

2. Selective service—with an antisegregation clause—to supply the manpower to use that military equipment in Europe.

3. Mobilization of the National Guard and Organized Reserves to help train inductees for foreign service.

4. Price control to prevent wild inflation and soaring prices in the United States.

5. A declaration of war as a result of an incident caused by our efforts to implement the Marshall plan.

6. Acceptance of the ITO and related programs for a world planned economy.

Is it possible to achieve the stated objectives of the Marshall plan?

It is believed this can be done—under a private enterprise plan that will provide for the flow of needed assistance from free men in the United States to free men throughout the world. Such a plan would eliminate the dead hand of bureaucracy and its resultant waste. It would have to pay its own way through careful investment, efficiency, and sound management. It could not draw on the United States Treasury to make up deficits.

Private enterprise approach

Such a program might be divided into two general parts:

1. Permissive legislation, enabling the formation of a multibillion dollar investment trust.

The bonds of this investment would be offered to the public and—since such investment would fall within the classification of venture capital—they should offer inducements above those of ordinary investments—such as a tax exemption on earnings for a limited period.

Such permissive legislation should provide for specific exemptions from existing statutory controls—such as SEC registration—since the latter could cause untold delay and unnecessary expense in meeting filing requirements.

This would enable those who really wish to help Europe to do so without compelling all the taxpayers to foot the European-aid bill.

2. Assistance for the actual needy, such as that provided for by the American Relief Act by which Herbert Hoover aided the European needy following World War I.

This should provide for raising funds through voluntary contributions from all who wish to aid the starving of Europe again without making all taxpayers foot the bill. It should be administered by church groups experienced in this field rather than by a Government bureau.

With the acceptance of such a program, funds now allocated in the fiscal 1949 budget to foreign-aid accounts, could be transferred to the national defense account.

Our industrial capitalism—based on individual creativeness and productivity—has produced more benefits for mankind than any other economic system in history. In the short span of 170 years, it has made us the most powerful Nation in the world. It has given our people a higher standard of living than is found elsewhere in the world. Not only has it provided for our own needs—it has fed and clothed the needy of the world, and provided the manpower, matériel, and money needed to win two world wars.

As long as it survives—there will always be hope for individual liberty throughout the world. When it falls—all hope for the survival of individual liberty is lost.

Despite its present heavy burdens—it is confidently believed that—relieved of at least some of the restrictions now impeding its free operation—it can successfully assume the additional burden of restoring economic stability to those who believe in individual liberty.

It should not be compelled to bear the additional burden of underwriting the maintenance of economic systems that are designed to destroy it.

If economic stability is restored to the world through our free-enterprise system—rather than through another form of government control—it can be the one great bulwark for the preservation and perpetuation of free institutions and individual liberty.

Oil and Lumber Production and Export

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD J. WELCH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of conservation of our natural resources, two of the most important of which are oil and lumber, I invite attention to the following facts secured by me from the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, and the Bureau of the Census showing the tremendous quantities of oil and lumber being used and exported by this country:

OIL DATA

	Barrels
Domestic oil consumption, 1947	1,988,970,000

Domestic consumption increased 65.3 percent in 1947 over 1938.

Oil used for generating electric power

	1946	1947
	Barrels	Barrels
California	10,219,658	15,999,491
Oregon	257,505	266,792
Washington	429,551	530,159
United States total	36,315,871	45,300,002

This shows an increase in the use of oil for generating electric power in 1947 over 1946 in California of 56.6 percent; in Oregon, 3.6 percent; in Washington, 23.4 percent; and in the United States of 24.7 percent.

Exports

Exports of oil, 1947	164,463,000

Under the European recovery program, the Economic Cooperation Administration proposes to furnish 34,894,000 barrels of irreplacable United States oil during the next year, an additional 158,410,000 barrels from "dollar" sources, 188,157,500 barrels from "nondollar" sources, and 13,870,000 barrels to be produced in participating countries; or a total of 395,331,500 barrels.

LUMBER DATA

Final governmental statistics on lumber production in the United States for 1946 and 1947 are not yet available. From the very latest information that is obtainable it is estimated that 1946 production amounted to some 36,000,000,000 board feet and 1947 production some 38,000,000,000 board feet. Production in California, Oregon, and Washington in 1947 was slightly more than in 1946 when these three States produced 12,431,000,000 board feet or more than 30 percent of the total for the entire United States.

	Board feet
California	2,681,000,000
Oregon	6,328,000,000
Washington	3,422,000,000
Three-State total	12,431,000,000

California total includes Nevada, which is so small the Bureau of the Census does not report it separately.

Exports

Exports of lumber in 1947----	1,153,701,000

Of this total export, 801,411,000 board feet was from the Pacific coast ports. This amounted to 69.5 percent of the total United States exports and 6.4 percent of production in California, Oregon, and Washington.

Under the European recovery plan the Economic Cooperation Administration expects to furnish some 238,150,000 board feet of lumber and lumber products to participating nations.

Republican Eightieth Congress Keeps Pledges; Reverses Ruinous New Deal Trend and Establishes Solid Foundations Upon Which Our Country Is Going Forward; Record of Accomplishments Is Unsurpassed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. HALLECK
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Eightieth Congress has lighted beacons for the American way of life—liberty, peace, security, prosperity, and happiness for all our people and all humanity.

When the Eightieth Congress convened January 3, 1947, by mandate of an aroused people, we were confronted by the disastrous results of 14 years of New Deal Democrat bad government.

Our country was on the brink of disaster, threatened as it was by economic disintegration of our free economy and revolutionary change in our free Government.

A radical-minded administration driving for ever-increasing control and authority over the lives of our citizens was rapidly chipping away our freedom and our liberties. Our efforts as a Nation for production and plenty, for happiness and security, were being destroyed.

The Republican Congress, with understanding, courage, and foresight, met the challenge to the preservation of the Republic and, reversing the ruinous New Deal policies, established solid foundations upon which our country is now going forward.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF REPUBLICAN CONGRESS

Here are major accomplishments of the Republican Congress:

Freed competitive enterprise: Liberated the people from 76,000 rules, regulations, directives, and orders, thereby releasing the energy and the capacity of the people with resulting all-time highs in employment, production, profits, and wages, and a record $200,000,000,000 annual national income.

Balanced Federal budget: The Federal Treasury for the first time in 16 years is using black ink instead of red and is no longer resorting to inflationary deficit spending. Fiscal 1948 ended with the biggest Treasury surplus in all history—$8,419,469,843, seven times the previous high established 21 years ago.

Cut national debt: Prudently shaved $7,000,000,000 off the public debt.

Pruned spendthrift budgets: Cut President Truman's padded budgets more than $6,000,000,000 and lopped off more billions in hold-over wartime appropriations in the greatest, most complex Government financial conversion from war to peace in all time.

Cut taxes: Reduced taxes $4,800,000,000, despite three Presidential vetoes, with 71 percent of the tax relief going to those with incomes under $5,000; 7,400,000 wage earners in the lowest brackets removed from the tax roll; married couples allowed to divide their income for tax purposes and special relief for persons over 65 and the blind.

Improved labor-management relations: Passed over Presidential veto the Taft-Hartley Labor-Management Act providing fair and just procedures for peaceful settlement of labor-management disputes; protecting the rights of workers to unionize and control their unions, to bargain collectively and to strike; restoring Constitutional rights of employers, and safeguarding all the people against widespread work and production stoppages that imperil the national welfare.

Exposed Communists: Battled for elimination of Communists, Fascists, and other subversives from the Federal Government; exposed Communists' infiltration in a minority of labor unions and in the Hollywood film industry; caused jailing of Communists for contempt of Congress; landed top Soviet Russia agents in jail and advanced legislation for public registration of alien-controlled Communists.

BILLIONS FOR OTHER COUNTRIES

Aided foreign nations: Appropriated $9,579,657,128—$2,377,573,900 in first session and $7,202,083,228 in second session including $1,000,000,000 for reconstruction loans—for relief to impoverished humanity in foreign countries, to help reestablish their national economies and to restrain Communists' aggression; created an Economic Cooperation Administration to administer foreign aid; kept all congressional commitments to United Nations.

Joined International Refugee Organization and gave it $71,073,900 to carry on.

Enacted a bill to admit 205,000 displaced persons in next 2 years and permit 15,000 refugees already in the United States to remain.

Strengthened National Defense: Rescued our disintegrating National military establishment by unifying the armed services; by forcing adoption of a "plan of action"; by making cash appropriations and contract authorizations totaling $24,128,110,346—$9,528,295,733 in first session, $14,599,814,613 in second session—with special emphasis upon air power; by adopting a temporary selective service act; by providing for development of better weapons including guided missiles and atomic bombs; by authorizing $178,000,000 for Merchant Marine expansion, and by revising Army justice in an effort to assure completely fair treatment under Army law for officers and enlisted men.

Cared for veterans: Passed 188 bills meeting needs of war veterans, including increased compensation for disabled veterans with and without dependents; increased compensation for dependent survivors of war dead; increased subsistence payments to World War II veterans in institutional training; increased allowances for student GI's; increased proportional pay for veterans in on-the-job training; cashing of GI terminal-leave bonds; higher pensions for Spanish-American War veterans; and aids for veterans' housing.

FOSTERED RECORD HOME BUILDING

Generated building boom: Took housing problem from the bungling New Deal administration; freed the building industry of stifling rules, regulations, and directives; stimulated construction through Government guaranties of building loans; had Government assume large part of responsibility for veterans' loans; and gave war veterans priority in home building and rental of new homes. In 1946, under New Deal regimentation and confusion, 437,800 dwelling units were completed; in 1947, under Republican free enterprise and sound Government aid, 835,100 units were completed; and, in 1948, a million dwelling units will be completed in the biggest building boom of all time.

Helped farmers: Adopted long-range agriculture program pledging price support for maximum production of food; provided twice as much money for rural electrification as any previous Congress; appropriated more than $500,000,000 for soil conservation; launched greatest rural road-building program in history; fostered stability of agriculture through a new, workable Crop Insurance Act; chartered Commodity Credit Corporation; and greatly expanded Government aid in campaigns against livestock foot-and-mouth disease and crop deterrents, such as weeds, insects, and other pests.

Forwarded reclamation, river and harbor improvements, flood control: Rescued the vitally needed, Republican-inaugurated reclamation program for the West from President Truman's disastrous money-freeze order of August 1946, and appropriated more money for reclamation—$389,804,000—than any previous Congress; likewise made record-breaking appropriations for river and harbor improvements — $285,500,000 — and flood control—$712,063,000—all being essential to expansion and protection of our national economy.

CARED FOR NEEDY, AGED, AND ILL

Expanded social security: Passed over Presidential veto a bill increasing payments by $5 per month for the needy aged and the blind, and increasing payments by $3 per month for each dependent child, thereby adding $184,000,000 annually to social security payments received by 3,500,000 needy dependent children, the aged and the blind; and exempting from social security insurance payments newspaper and magazine vendors and other independent contractors over whom no employer exercises direct control, thereby preventing an impairment of the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund built up by those who had paid taxes over the years.

Established a National Heart Institute within the United States Public Health Service to fight America's No. 1 killer, diseases of the heart and circulation; provided $500,000 for the research institute to combat these diseases, which affect 1 person in 16, cause 1 out of every 3 deaths, and result in a loss of 152,000,000 work days a year.

Provided $28,400,000 for the National Cancer Institute to study the disease of cancer and to disseminate knowledge on how to reduce its terrible toll in lives.

Provided a cost-of-living pay increase for postal and other Federal employees: Despite President Truman's opposition as expressed in a budget message to Congress, we gave 478,000 postal workers a pay increase of $450 a year each, and 840,000 Civil Service employees a boost of $330 each; increased some postal rates as a partial offset to the $600,000,000 cost of the pay rise.

Facilitated the making of equitable and non-discriminatory transportation rates: Passed over Presidential veto the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, exempting railroads from anti-trust suits for rate agreements, provided the rates are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission as being in the public interest.

Improved United States Employment Service: Enacted over Presidential veto a bill transferring and improving the United States Employment Service from the Department of Labor to the Federal Security Agency for administration in coordination with unemployment benefits.

Created Government Reorganization Commission: Established a bi-partisan commission, headed by former President Herbert Hoover, which is preparing for submission to the next Congress a comprehensive plan for reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government in the interests of efficiency and economy—a major operation on the sprawling, tax-eating bureaucracy.

Acted to limit Presidents' terms: Submitted to the States for ratification a constitutional amendment limiting Presidents to two terms.

AIDED SMALL BUSINESSES

Authorized voluntary trade agreements: Empowered the President, upon advice of the Attorney General, to approve voluntary agreements among business firms to ration and channel commodities in short supply to the most essential purposes domestically and to meet foreign commitments.

Extended export controls: Temporarily extended and strengthened the President's authority to control exports in line with United States policy to favor cooperating nations and withhold sinews of war from noncooperating countries.

Aided small businesses: Created special committees of the Senate and House of Representatives which are seeing that small businesses, the backbone of American industry, get a fair break, especially in the awarding of Government contracts for national defense and aid to foreign nations.

Extended Reciprocal Trade Act with reasonable safeguards: Extended for 1 year the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, with amendments requiring the President to report to Congress and the people when, in secretly making a trade agreement with a foreign country, he exceeds recommendations made by the United States Tariff Commission pursuant to standards prescribed by Congress for protection of American industries and agriculture.

LEGISLATION BENEFITS ALL

The Republican Congress passed hundreds of other measures that are benefiting every segment of our population and creating wholesome conditions for prosperity and happiness; measures buttressing industries, agriculture, and mining; supplying long-needed banking legislation; strengthening the Federal Reserve banks' operation; reorganizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and in other ways making for sound national progress.

Scores of investigations of charges of fraud, corruption, and weary incompetence by the tired, warring, quarreling, bolt-ridden Democratic administration were made. Scandalous situations were exposed, including:

Gambling in the grain and other commodity markets by persons in positions to know when the Government was buying for shipment abroad—gambling that helped raise the cost of living for all our people.

Irregularities in negotiation of war contracts.

Attempts by the administration high-ups, including the President, to pervert the nonpartisan, Republican-created vast reclamation program that is so vital to the West, into a political football.

And worst of all a stubborn resistance by administration officials to a purging of Communists, Pinkoes, and other subversives from the Government household, was revealed.

We reorganized the congressional legislative machinery; telescoped many committees into a few, and staffed them with specialists in their responsibilities.

We created a joint congressional committee which is keeping constant watch on all factors entering into the cost of living and making recommendations.

We sent our own committees across the country and thus gathered first-hand information, and we sent special committees to Europe, the Middle East, and the Far East for study and report on conditions that required action by Congress.

Fumbling and bungling by the New Dealers in our foreign relations, with their parade of Secretaries of State, have produced confusion in foreign policies that has delayed durable peace, and is having an expensive impact upon our domestic economy.

Many of the ills confronting the United States and the world, root causes for high prices, about $30,000,000,000 in aid given to foreign countries since the cessation of hostilities and rebuilding of our national defenses, stem from the betrayals at Quebec, Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam.

The Republican Party had no part in making those blunders. Our leaders in Congress were not consulted when the tottering structure for peace was being built. On many of the foreign policies, the so-called bipartisan policy has been a myth, because our Republican leaders were not consulted.

Responsibility for the bankrupt diplomacy cannot be escaped by the Truman administration on the ground that it is the product of bipartisan policy.

It is obvious that an administration which harbors so many who see in the Russian way of doing things a better system than our own, could not be expected to follow a consistent and firm position in dealing with communism at home or abroad.

REPUBLICANISM AGAINST RADICALISM

Back in December 1945 the Republicans of the Senate and House of Representatives, united in issuing a statement of principles, policies, and objectives. The Declaration said:

> Today's major issue is between radicalism, regimentation, all-powerful bureaucracy, class exploitation, deficit spending, and machine politics, as against our belief in American freedom for the individual under just laws fairly administered for all, preservation of local home rule, efficiency and pay-as-you-go economy in government, and the protection of the American way of life against either Fascist or Communist trends.
> We believe that genuine social and economic progress can be achieved only on those American constitutional principles and it is our purpose to give our citizens this clean-cut choice.

In the election of November 1946 voters throughout the length and breadth of our land sent to Congress Senators and Representatives who were dedicated to those principles, policies, and objectives. The election resulted in a landslide victory for the Republican Party, and it has been confirmed by subsequent elections to fill vacancies in the Congress.

The people demanded and had a right to expect cooperation of President Truman in carrying out their will for an end to regimentation, all-powerful bureaucracy, radicalism, vote buying, business badgering, exploitation of group against group, spendthrift policies, and back-breaking taxes.

Shortly after the 1946 repudiation of his administration the President issued a written statement acknowledging the verdict of the people and pledging that cooperation, but he has not kept that pledge. Instead he has fought Congress, the policy-making department of our Government, every step of the way.

TRUMAN ASKS POLICE-STATE POWER

He has abused the weighty Presidential veto power by invoking it as a weapon of minorities to thwart the will of the people as expressed by overwhelming majorities in Congress.

Mr. Truman holds the unenviable record of having had more vetoes overridden by Congress—six of them—than any President for a like period dating back to post-Civil War days.

Yielding to special interests and pressure groups, he has submitted to Congress recommendations for spending, over and above his all-time high annual budget, that would, if approved by Congress, add $20,000,000,000 to the Nation's tax bill, greatly expand the Washington bureaucracy, and wreck our national economy.

The evidence is abundant that President Truman failed utterly in planning for postwar conversion. To a special session of Congress in 1945 he submitted recommendations for a gigantic Government spending program to cushion his expected vast unemployment, collapse of commodity prices, and lessened purchasing power.

He failed to understand that all the people wanted was a signal from their Government to go ahead and get on with peacetime production. He geared his whole program to an anticipated depression. He was wrong then, and he has been wrong ever since. He was quick to blame others for firing the boilers of inflation, but negligent in using his powers to arrest rising prices.

To garble, twist, and belittle actions of the people's Congress, the President called the signals for 45,000 propagandists on the Federal pay roll. That gigantic political machine had a $75,000,000 campaign fund—all from the taxpayers' pockets.

The President branded Government price-fixing, rationing, and controls in peacetime as police state methods, and in the next breath asked Congress for power to fasten those very controls upon the people—shackles that would smother productive enterprise and the output of goods so urgently needed as a solvent for high prices.

He said it would be all right for Congress to vote him power to control the people, because, he said, that would be a constitutional procedure. Plainly, he does not recall that was the way other peoples lost their freedom.

Truly, eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty.

REPUBLICAN PARTY UPHOLDS CONSTITUTION

For our part, we Republicans reject the alien ideology that calls for an all-powerful central government controlling the lives of the people.

We have faith in our free people—faith and love and confidence in the dignity of man—an abiding faith that free men in our Republic have accomplished more, and will continue to accomplish more, for the happiness and contentment of humanity than has been or can be accomplished by men in any other kind of society.

In our Republic the constitutional course of Government is to provide for every citizen an opportunity to improve himself, to encourage him to do so for himself and his children; to keep the Government as his servant and not his master; to promote output of the things that make life pleasant, to lighten debt and taxes, to lay down rules of fair play, and to protect those whose own strength and resources are not sufficient to protect them.

LET'S LOOK AT THE RECORD

Now, let us look in more detail at the record of the Republican Congress. Let us see how we have given effect to American constitutional principles.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

This is what we Republicans pledged:

Economy in Government spending must be achieved. Extravagant Government spending now advocated by the administration in every field can only lead to ruin. Bureaucracy, with its thirst for power and self-perpetuation, must be drastically reduced. The number of Government employees must be cut to an efficient minimum.

We have kept that pledge.

President Truman holds the record as the biggest peace-time spender of all time.

Confronting the Republican Congress when it convened was the tremendous job of converting the Government's fiscal affairs from a war to a peacetime basis, the most stupendous financial operation that ever faced a Congress. To the hard-working Appropriations Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate goes much of the credit for bringing a semblance of order out of chaos.

Details reached around the earth, billions of dollars were involved and major policies had to be determined in the conversion.

Most harassing of all in this gigantic operation were the continuous demands by the Truman administration for more and more spending and a bigger and bigger bureaucracy. These pleas were taken up by the 45,000 propagandists on the Federal pay roll, dipping into the $75,000,000 campaign fund taxed from the people.

The President pledged to cooperate with the Republican Congress, but instead he and his army of job holders, augmented by New Dealers outside the Government taking up the cry, fought economy every step of the way.

He submitted to Congress budget estimates calling for expenditures of $37,500,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948. He recommended in excess of another billion before the first session of the Congress adjourned.

He submitted to the second session of the Congress an all-time high, peacetime budget calling for expenditures of nearly $40,000,000,000 during fiscal year 1949 and then swelled that by several billions in supplemental recommendations.

On top of all this he submitted a series of recommendations for new ventures in Government spending that would, if approved by the Republican Congress, have added $20,000,000,000 to annual Federal expenditures, forced higher taxes, expanded bureaucracy and plunged the Nation into bankruptcy.

Compare these astronomical figures with the total Government expenditures in prewar years. Expenditures for fiscal 1933 totaled $5,143,000,000; for 1934 they were $7,100,000,000; and for 1939 the Government spent $9,027,000,000. The Republican Congress not only called a halt on the New Deal Democrat trend; we reversed the procession.

CUT TRUMAN'S PADDED BUDGETS

We cut the President's fiscal 1948 budget estimates $2,766,000,000; rescinded funds that otherwise would have been spent amounting to $442,500,000; made recoveries for the Treasury that the President did not recommend amounting to $911,700,000, and we made cuts that were effective in making savings in the operations of the previous fiscal year amounting to $359,740,568.

Thus the total savings to the Federal Treasury accomplished by the Republican Congress during its first session were approximately $4,500,000,000.

We continued the same program of prudently pruning the President's budget and supplemental recommendations during the second session providing for fiscal year 1949. From the regular departmental appropriation bills, deficiencies, supplementals, and so forth, the Republican Congress appropriated $2,741,481,291 less than the President requested.

And it should be noted that the Democrats in Congress, almost to a man and almost on every occasion, apparently desiring nothing so much as to see the Republican economy program fail, vigorously opposed cuts in appropriations advocated by the Republicans.

Notwithstanding this reckless and sometimes demagogic resistance, the Republican Congress saved better than $6,000,000,000 and this does not include the rejection of the President's $20,000,000,000 high-living, vote-luring political recommendations.

These savings were made by eliminating useless and unnecessary expenditures, not by destroying essential or necessary functions and operations of Government.

Failures of New Deal Democrat administrations, past and present, in foreign relations are reflected in higher Government expenditures for national defense and to provide aid for freedom-loving foreign countries. These in turn are major causes of high prices.

More than 80 percent of our national expenditures now goes toward prevention of wars, foreign aid, aid to our own veterans, and in liquidation of past wars. Hence, the urgency of having a Republican President who will cooperate with a Republican Congress, working together for efficiency and economy in Government.

Incompetence of the Truman administration is illustrated by the President's failure to present to the Congress the major budget requests at the opening of the Congress in January as the law requires.

Final budget estimates for Government corporations this year did not reach the Congress until April 6; for the Interior Department until May 10; for the Army and the Air Force until May 26; for independent offices, including the Veterans' Administration, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the Maritime Commission, until May 27, and for the Navy, until June 1.

Obviously this fumbling delay made it difficult to hold proper hearings and get the appropriation bills through the Congress before beginning of the 1949 fiscal year on July 1, 1948.

However, through tremendous effort the Congress did do a thorough and a good job in handling Government expenditures.

TAXES

This is what the Republicans' preelection Statement of Principles, Policies, and Objectives said on taxation:

Taxes must be so imposed as to stimulate creative enterprise, not destroy it, and to afford the individual adequate purchasing power. Tax reforms and taxpaying must be simplified. There must be an incentive for business to expand production and employment for the individual to invest his savings in such expansion.

We have kept that pledge.

Three times President Truman vetoed tax-reduction bills passed by Congress, but the third time we passed it over his veto and our people today are receiving that tax relief.

Excessive taxes are a drag upon production. They stifle initiative. They are a major factor in the cost of living, because they enter into the cost of everything from a haircut to an automobile.

Taxes consume more than 25 cents out of every dollar that the housewife spends on groceries. For the American working men and women, the Republican Congress through tax reduction is providing more take-home pay, and by restoring sanity to the tax structure we are replenishing the wells of investment capital so there may be new plants, plant expansion, jobs and more production of the goods we need to adjust prices.

Under way is a complete overhauling of the entire tax code, which the New Deal administrations in their zeal to use taxation as a weapon for social and economic change have scrambled into confusing rules and regulations.

The United States Constitution is explicit in lodging the taxing power in Congress. The founding fathers never intended that one man—the President—shall decide how taxes shall be levied, though he may make recommendations.

Only one President before President Truman invaded the taxing power of Congress by abuse of the Presidential veto. President Franklin D. Roosevelt did it, and Congress swiftly overrode his veto as an affront to representative government.

TREASURY ESTIMATES UNDEPENDABLE

President Truman said the Federal Treasury could not stand a tax reduction and the Treasury Department backed him by grossly underestimating revenues. All through the battle over tax reduction, the Treasury Department grossly erred in its estimates. However, Congress relied upon its own judgment and the dependable estimates of its Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

The Treasury Department predicted a deficit of $4,500,000,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1947, and when that date arrived there was a surplus of $754,000,000. First estimates by the Treasury Department on probable revenue during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948, were $5,946,000,000 below the final result, but in August 1947, a few days after the first two tax bills had been killed by vetoes, the Treasury Department began to make public estimates closer to the mark.

When the third and successful tax-reduction bill was passed by the Republican Congress, the Treasury surplus could not be concealed and fiscal year 1948 ended with a surplus of $8,419,469,843, seven times larger than the previous high established 21 years ago.

The people have a right to candor from public officials. In widely missing the mark in revenue estimates, the Treasury Department, as President Truman's agent, did so either deliberately to deceive the Congress and the people or through sheer incompetence. Either is inexcusable.

TAX CUT FAVORS SMALL WAGE EARNER

The Republican Congress gave its verdict on behalf of tax relief by overriding President Truman's third veto in the Senate 77 to 10 and in the House by a vote of 311 to 88.

Thwarted in his tax and tax policy, the President in campaign speeches has misrepresented the Tax Reduction Act, using the New Dealers' technique of misrepresentation in a demagogic effort to catch votes.

The cold fact is that 71 percent of the $4,800,000,000 in tax relief provided is going to persons with incomes of less than $5,000 a year. About 7,400,000 taxpayers in the lowest brackets no longer have to pay any Federal income tax. Percentage tax reductions range from 12.6 in the lower brackets down to 5 percent in the top brackets.

Husbands and wives are permitted to split their income for tax purposes, thereby lightening the family tax burden, and eliminating discrimination against citizens of many States. An additional $600 tax exemption is granted to taxpayers who are over 65 years of age and for the blind there is an additional $600 exemption. That is practical social-security legislation.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

We Republicans, in our preelection Statement of Principles, Policies, and Objectives, said:

We reaffirm our belief in the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively with employers as one of the cornerstones of competitive enterprise. The processes of such bargaining must be protected and strengthened if we are to have real jobs and prosperity for all.

For that purpose we believe that Government decisions should not be substituted for free agreement, but governmental machinery to promote peaceful settlement of disputes should be improved.

Demands of either side must be kept within the bounds of reason and fairness and both sides must recognize the rights of the general public.

We have kept those pledges.

Those principles and policies are embodied in the Labor-Management Act passed by the Eightieth Congress. The new labor law is proving beneficial to labor, management, and the public.

Congress passed the act over President Truman's indefensible veto. Nearly four-fifths of all the Members of Congress joined in overriding the veto, whereas only a two-thirds majority was necessary to do so. In the final vote on the bill a majority of the participating Democrats joined the well-nigh unanimous Republican membership in support of the measure.

The House of Representatives overrode the President's veto 331 to 83, only 1 short of 4 to 1. The Senate vote was 68 to 25, or 6 more than a two-thirds majority of the 93 Senators who voted.

Voting in the House of Representatives to override the veto were 225 Republicans and 106 Democrats. Voting to sustain the veto were 11 Republicans, 71 Democrats, and 1 American-Laborite. In the Senate the division by parties was: Republicans for overriding the veto, 48; Democrats, 20. In favor of sustaining the veto were 3 Republicans and 22 Democrats.

For the story on how well the new labor law is operating, it seems well to cover the entire postwar period dating back to VJ-day, August 15, 1945, thereby obtaining a comparison before and after the new law became effective August 22, 1947. From the regular reports of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, it is evident the new law is doing the job of improving labor-management relations as intended by Congress, and as demanded by the people.

Since the Labor-Management Relations Act became effective strikes in manufacturing industries, bituminous coal mining and the private building industry, have decreased substantially. Work stoppages under the old law averaged 395 a month. They have been cut to an average of 201 under the new law. This represents a reduction in strikes of 49 percent.

The number of workers involved in new strikes each month from VJ-day until the new labor act was 337,000 each month. The average number of workers so involved since the act is 131,000. This is a reduction of 61 percent under the new law.

From VJ-day until the new act the average number of man-days of idleness caused by work stoppages was 7,213,000 per month. Under the new law this figure has been cut to 2,613,000 per month.

The record shows that under the new law wages have continued to rise, more leisure time has been made available through a shorter workweek and average hourly earnings also have increased.

The vital point is that labor is making these gains under the new law through peaceful, collective bargaining, whereas before the new labor act gains were more frequently made through costly strikes. Wage increases through peaceful negotiation are vastly more important to all concerned than wage increases obtained at the expense of lost wages and lost production. Thus, the new labor act is providing a better annual wage for workers and a more constant and increasing supply of things urgently needed as a solvent for high prices.

During 1946, the blackest year in work stoppages, workers lost 116,000,000 man-days, while at present the annual rate is running about a fourth as much. On the basis of higher wage rates, the savings to workers would be in excess of a billion dollars a year.

Under the new labor act's sound principles our country is building a rule of reason for cooperation between employers and employees for their mutual benefit and for the good of all our people.

WORKERS' RIGHTS DEFINED

In the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A3345, I analyzed the provisions of the new labor law in detail. I shall refer here only to its more important clauses.

It preserves in the same language that appears in the Wagner Act, the rights of workers to organize and to bargain collectively, and just as the old act did, it forbids employers to interfere with the employees, or to threaten or coerce them when they exercise these rights.

It forbids unions to beat up workers, or to threaten or coerce workers to force them into a union, or force them to choose one union when they wish to choose another.

It guarantees free speech to both employers and union, allowing them to talk to workers as long as they do not threaten workers or try to bribe them to join or not to join a union.

It forbids employers and unions, by agreement between themselves, to force workers to join the union and to pay dues to it unless the majority of the workers by secret ballot, have voted in favor of the agreement, and even then it forbids depriving a man of his job by denying union membership to him as long as he is willing to pay initiation fees and dues.

It forbids employers to check off union dues unless the worker has voluntarily authorized the employer to do so.

When employers and unions establish funds for the welfare of workers and their families, it requires them to do so under arrangements that will make certain that the money will be used for these purposes and not for other purposes of the union leaders.

It requires unions and employers, when labor contracts come to an end, to negotiate for 60 days before engaging in a strike or lock-out.

It forbids unions, by jurisdictional strikes and boycotts, to try to get control over employees who have not chosen the union as their bargaining agent, or who have chosen another union as their bargaining agent.

It requires unions, in order to be recognized as labor organizations under the Wagner Act, to tell their members how much money they take in, where they get it and what they spend it for, and to disclose what they pay their officers, how much they charge for dues, the grounds on which they suspend or expel members, and other matters that the members are entitled to know.

It exempts foremen and other supervisors from the provisions of the Wagner Act, requires the Board to regard them as employers, not as employees.

It forbids the Labor Board, which administers the Wagner Act, to compel skilled workers to bargain through an industrial union when they wish to bargain through a craft union.

It requires unions, in order to be recognized as labor organizations under the Wagner Act, to file affidavits of their officers saying the officers are not Communists or fellow travelers.

It forbids corporations to use stockholders' money for political purposes and forbids unions to use members' money for political purposes.

It makes unions subject to suits for damages, the same as corporations and other organizations, when they break their contracts or engage in unlawful activities.

It enables the President again to delay for a time strikes that imperil the public health or safety, as he did in the great coal strike early this year.

It makes the Conciliation Service an independent agency, directs it to try to prevent strikes—it cannot forbid strikes—and authorizes it to take a secret ballot of employees before a strike if the union is willing.

It requires unions, as well as employers, to bargain in good faith when employees choose the union as their bargaining agent.

It requires the Labor Board to use fair procedures and to render fair decisions whether the cases involve charges against employers or charges against unions.

It sets up a joint committee of Congress to study labor-management relations. If defects in the law appear, we will change the law. We will not stubbornly resist change as the New Dealers did for so long.

Now these are fair provisions. The law is a good law. The law will not prevent all strikes, but it has been proven to be fair and just, and with honest administration it will bring a greater measure of peace to the industrial scene than we have known for many years.

COMMUNISM

In our statement of principles we declared emphatically for "the protection of the American way of life against either Fascist or Communist trends."

We have kept that pledge.

The Republican Party has been relentlessly battling communism, fascism, and other alien "isms" through the years. Our united Republican Party is not the haven or refuge of these alien-minded forces that seek to destroy our Republic. Ours is not the party in which they have been successful borers.

Ten years ago the House of Representatives created a Special Committee on Un-American Activities. Seven years later it was made one of the standing committees of the House of Representatives. Throughout the New Deal era that committee has exposed Communists and other subversives in and out of the Government.

With the Republican Party in control of the Eightieth Congress we have continued to aid and encourage this committee. President Truman, while declaiming against Communists' aggression abroad, has given little more than lip-service to elimination of Communists from his own administration. This vital job has been bogged down by a confusion of committees and checkers in the executive branch.

Each time the Congress revealed groups of disloyal persons on the Federal pay roll, fumbling and bungling followed in the executive branch, with apparently no determined efforts by those in top authority to purge them from the Government household.

All subversive, un-American groups have been spotlighted by the House of Representatives committee without fear and without favor.

Agents of the Fascist countries, our enemies in the war, were exposed and dealt with swiftly. Since the war, when communism, the totalitarianism of the extreme left, has replaced nazism as the supreme threat to human freedom, the House of Representatives committee has redoubled its efforts to expose agents of that movement.

Gerhart Eisler, described as the No. 1 agent of the Communist International in the United States, was exposed by the committee, found in contempt of Congress, convicted in court of passport fraud, and sentenced to prison.

Activities of foreign-directed agents in our schools, colleges, industries, and civic life have been exposed by the congressional committee. Depredations of Communists in the Hollywood film industry were exposed and some of those Communists have been sentenced to prison for defying the constitutional authority of Congress to investigate subversive movements.

Advanced during the Republican Congress was comprehensive legislation to require registration of Communists under alien control so that they and their shabby propaganda may be exposed to the purifying antidote of Americanism. The Mundt-Nixon bill to effect those purposes was overwhelmingly passed by the House of Representatives—319 to 58—and is now being considered by the Senate.

As in so many other fields of government, cooperation between the President and Congress in eliminating Communists and other subversives from the Government is necessary if completely satisfactory results are to be obtained.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

On national defense, this is what we said in our Statement of Principles, Policies, and Objectives:

> We stand for a well-trained and fully equipped Army, Navy, and Air Force adequate to meet any emergency under future conditions of warfare. It must be supported by the most scientific research, a strong industrial system, and adequate reserves of trained men with the best weapons and equipment.

We have kept that pledge.

National defense was one of the major problems inherited by the Republican Congress from the tired hands of the incompetent Democratic administration. The armed services were in the throes of transition from the wartime basis to a peacetime establishment. There was much confusion in plans and purposes, no coordinated effective program, and the President oblivious to our disintegrating defenses.

We acted swiftly and thoroughly to correct that deplorable condition and to give our country an effective national defense establishment in these times of uneasy peace.

First, we passed a bill providing for unification of the armed services, with departments for Air, Ground, and Naval Forces, each headed by a Secretary, and a Secretary of Defense over all, but under the President as Commander in Chief.

Not many months passed before we discovered that instead of getting unification the country was getting more triplification. We created a Joint Congressional Aviation Policy Committee to study the needs in air power.

That committee reported on March 1, 1948, that the armed services were in such conflict over missions to be performed by each that any appropriations by Congress for the armed forces would be unrealistic until the Joint Chiefs of Staff were agreed upon a unified plan of action. The President, in January 1948, submitted to Congress a budget for the armed forces, but our investigations revealed his recommendations had been based on very superficial study.

After the congressional committee made its report exposing the serious disintegration of our national defense because of President Truman's incompetence, there was a meeting of the top admirals and generals at Key West, Fla., with the Secretary of Defense. Simultaneously, Congress was rationalizing the Military Establishment budget, though it was not until June 1, 1948, that the President submitted his final estimate to Congress for the Navy.

For the national defense establishment to spend during fiscal year 1949, which began July 1, 1948, Congress appropriated $11,754,814,613, divided as follows: Military, $6,705,418,163; Navy, $3,800,396,450; to launch 70-group Air Force, $949,000,000; for stocking of strategic and critical materials, $300,000,000.

In addition, Congress gave the Air Force and Navy authority to make contracts in the 70-group Air Force program totaling $2,275,000,000; gave the Army contract authority up to $220,000,000; authorized contracts for strategic and critical materials up to $300,000,000, and gave the Navy construction contract authority up to $50,000,000. These make a total in contract authorizations of $2,845,000,000.

Thus, cash appropriations and contract authorizations made by Congress for the Military Establishment during fiscal 1949 totaled $14,599,814,613.

During the first session there was appropriated $8,751,295,733 in cash and there were contract authorizations amounting to $777,000,000, making $9,528,295,733 in cash and contract authorizations available for fiscal year 1948.

All of these cash appropriations and contract authorizations during the first and second sessions of the Republican Congress for the Military Establishment totaled $24,128,110,346.

CONGRESS ENACTS OVER-ALL PLAN

Throughout the battle for defense controversy raged over proposals for universal military training and selective service. Congress resolved these issues in line with the over-all plan of action and balanced defenses which was our paramount objective.

We passed a temporary Selective Service Act to provide the personnel necessary to the armed services. Under this act all men 18 through 25 must register, but only those 19 through 25 are subject to induction. Eighteen-year-old youths may obtain exemption from a later draft call by volunteering for 1 year's active service in the United States, six additional years in the Reserves.

There are other grounds for deferment from the draft in the act. Under the act the authorized strength of the Military Establishment was expanded to 2,166,882 officers and enlisted men—the Army to a maximum of 947,000 from the 548,000 strength at mid-June 1948; Navy and Marine Corps to 702,882 from 469,000; and Air Force to 517,000 from the June actual strength of 382,000.

Those in direct charge of the defense of the Nation have vigorously asserted the absolute need for these additional men in the armed services and they have also insisted they could not be obtained by voluntary enlistment.

Hence, the passage of the temporary Selective Service Act, but we Republicans confidently assert that with a Republican President cooperating with a Republican Congress in handling the foreign and domestic affairs of the Nation, the need for a long-continued peacetime draft will be eliminated.

However, the Republican Congress, intent as Republicans always are upon the Nation's security and unwilling to gamble with the national defense, has moved decisively and energetically to provide an adequate and efficient force properly equipped for the protection of our country.

WAR VETERANS

In our Republican Statement of Principles, Policies, and Objectives, we made this pledge:

> A grateful Nation demands that those who fought in its defense, their widows, and orphans must never be forgotten. The best medical care and rehabilitation, education, and training for all desiring it, and efficient assistance in securing homes, farms, businesses, and real jobs must be provided for the veteran.

We kept that pledge.

The Republican Congress, comprising many war veterans, recognizes its patriotic responsibility in seeing that the millions of men and women who served under the colors are treated fairly and generously as our grateful Nation demands.

This Congress enacted 188 laws directly benefiting war veterans and meeting a wide range of needs. Proper treatment of war veterans, the disabled, the widows, and the orphans is a sacred trust of the Republican Party that it has faithfully kept down through the years from its founding 92 years ago.

All of the laws enacted by the Republican Congress for the benefit of war veterans were passed after President Truman stated in a message to Congress on January 6, 1947, that "except for minor adjustments, I believe our program of benefits for the veterans is now complete." The Director of the Veterans' Administration has filed reports against scores of measures introduced into Congress affecting veterans. In these reports the Director has stated that the proposed legislation was not in accord with the President's program.

But notwithstanding the position taken by President Truman, as expressed in his message and as represented by the Director of the Veterans' Administration in his reports to Congress on veterans' bills, the Republican Congress found that the program for veterans' benefits was far from completed. We acted in the interest of the veterans.

Veterans are chief beneficiaries of the comprehensive legislation enacted by this Congress which has resulted in the biggest housing boom in the history of our Nation. War veterans are receiving priority in all construction financed in part by the Government.

CASHED TERMINAL-LEAVE BONDS

Passed by Congress was a measure authorizing financial assistance to disabled veterans in the construction of specially designed homes for veterans paralyzed from the waist down. Fifty percent of the construction costs will be borne by the Government.

Funds were provided by Congress to supply special-type automobiles for amputees in need of them.

We corrected an injustice to the enlisted men of the last war, when we passed a bill to cash immediately the GI's terminal-leave bonds. That we did over the protest of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

More than 9,000,000 of the terminal-leave bonds had been issued, and it was estimated that about 12,000,000 veterans would receive their pay in cash instead of bonds at a cost of $2,500,000,000. By redeeming the bonds we not only corrected an injustice to the veterans, we also cut the national debt and interest charges.

Among the measures passed by the Republican Congress was one raising the ceilings on wages and allowances payable to veterans in on-the-job training. It sets ceilings at $210 a month for a veteran without dependents; $270 for a veteran with one dependent, and $290 for a veteran with two or more dependents.

These replaced ceilings of $175 for a single veteran and $200 for a veteran with dependents. A proportional increase of the difference between the subsistence allowances for part-time trainees and the increased subsistence allowances for full-time trainees is provided for those attending school on a part-time basis and trainees in institutional on-the-farm training.

Another act increases compensation for dependent survivors of war dead. Increases range from $15 a month for a widow with no children to $21.40 for a widow with two children. Covered also by the increase are orphans and dependent parents.

A bill passed by this Congress provides additional compensation for a veteran who has dependents and is entitled to compensation at wartime schedules for service-connected disabilities rated at not less than 60 percent. The additional compensation ranges from $21 a month for a veteran with a wife only to $56 for a veteran with a wife and three children. A $17.50 provision also is made for each dependent parent.

AID COVERS WIDE RANGE

Among the measures enacted by the Republican Congress on behalf of the veterans were the following:

Established the Women's Army Corps (WAC's) in the Regular Army and authorized the enlistment and appointment of women in the Regular Navy and Marine Corps Reserves.

Extended until February 3, 1950, the time limit for applying for mustering-out pay from the armed services.

Provided medical care for reservists who are injured or contract diseases while engaged in military training.

Provided for a second 5-year renewal of level-premium term insurance for veterans.

Passed a bill to allow compensation for American citizens and military personnel for injuries sustained as a result of wartime internment.

Authorized medical care for Philippine veterans serving in the armed forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the armed services of the United States.

Increased from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000 the revolving fund for loans to World War II veterans engaged in vocational training.

Extended the time for bringing alien fiancées to the United States.

Provided for refund of income taxes paid for year in which servicemen died while in the service.

Increased amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States from $300 to $500 until June 30, 1951, and $300 a year thereafter.

Amended civil-service code to prevent discrimination against physically handicapped veterans in Government positions.

Exempted hospitalized servicemen from the Federal tax on admissions to baseball games, theaters, and other entertainments.

Authorized travel expenses for veterans receiving vocational rehabilitation under regulations of the Veterans' Administration.

Allowed presumption of service connection for chronic and tropical diseases in applying for disability benefits.

Authorized a subsistence allowance to World War II veterans of $1 a day for each day spent as prisoners of the Japanese. This would not affect claims for property loss and personal abuse sustained while in a prisoner-of-war status.

Allowed service credit for enlisted men of the Coast Guard who acted as policemen and guards at Ivigtut cryolite mine, Greenland, during 1940 and 1941.

Equalized retirement benefits among members of the Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy.

Authorized $1,000,000 annual appropriation to the Veterans' Administration for prosthetic-appliance research.

Preserved seniority rights of 10-point-preference eligibles in postal service transferring from position of letter carrier to clerk, or vice versa.

Authorized sale of permanent war housing to veterans for not more than construction cost.

Amended act of July 31, 1947, to provide further benefits for employees of the United States who are veterans of World War II and have lost opportunity for probational civil-service appointments by reason of service in the armed forces and who, due to service-connected disabilities, are unable to perform the duties of the positions for which examinations were taken.

Increased peacetime service-connected disability compensation rates from 75 to 80 percent of wartime rates.

GOVERNMENT CONTROLS, VETERANS' HOUSING

This is what we pledged:

Wartime limitations, restrictions, and controls must be removed. The instant a right or liberty can be returned to the people it shall be returned. Neither the war nor any other excuse shall be justification for fastening regimentation upon the American people.

We have kept that pledge.

The Republican Congress has reversed the trend toward a planned economy, where the Government determines what shall be produced and in what amounts, what the people can buy and when they can buy it.

We forced elimination of 76,000 Government rules, regulations, directives, and orders that were blocking our transition from a wartime controlled economy to a peacetime free economy.

With the elimination of the numerous Government restrictions and controls on our peoples, American production is now moving forward, output is at an all-time high and wages have reached their highest peak. This is the American way. Under it our people will be able to purchase the things they need and want at prices they can afford. They will enjoy the highest standard of living in all history. That is our objective. Free men will attain that objective.

We extended temporarily authority of the President to control exports and channel them according to our Nation's foreign policy of helping those countries that help us.

Consumer credit controls—regulation W—were eliminated after November 1, 1947. These controls were a barrier to normal buying and selling customs of a vast segment of the public and in effect gave a purchase priority for items in short supply to persons best able to make large down payments.

CONGRESS GENERATES BUILDING BOOM

Incompetence of the Truman administration is tragically revealed in its fumbling and bungling on the housing problem. When the Emergency Housing Act was under consideration in 1946, the Administration claimed it would mean construction of 1,200,000 dwelling units in 1946, and 1,500,000 in 1947.

The Truman administration's approach was to create overlapping housing agencies with a fanfare of trumpets and glowing promises. The bureaucrats were loath to release their withering grip on the building industry. They clung to their power to shove people around, but we freed the people and the result is the biggest building boom in our country's history.

During 1946, when the Truman administration had the power to control every inch of board and every nail, only 435,800 new permanent dwelling units were completed. In 1947, after the Republican Congress freed the people of Government rationing and other controls, 835,100 units were completed.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that expenditures for new construction in June 1948, totaled $1,605,000,000. Compared with June 1947, the total was greater by $443,000,000 or 33 percent.

The Bureau reported that construction employment in June 1948, increased by 133,000 to reach 2,182,000—the highest level since November 1942. The number of workers was 225,000 more than June 1947, and 75,000 above the previous postwar peak of last September.

By the end of June, the Bureau reported, $7,700,000,000 had been spent for new construction in 1948, or 35 percent more than in the corresponding 6 months of 1947. More than half the increase went for home building.

That is construction, not Truman blueprints.

To generate the building boom, the Republican Congress has provided many financial aids for prospective home owners, especially the war veterans, by guaranteeing repayment of substantial parts of loans and by easing credit channels all along the line. Many billions in Government credit is going into home construction, chiefly for war veterans.

TOP PRIORITY FOR VETERANS

We provided that veterans shall have preference in the purchase or rental of all newly constructed sale or rental housing. This priority will remain in effect until April 1, 1949.

We continued rent control and brought effective administration to local communities where local authorities may deal with situations among their neighbors.

We extended for 2 years provisions of the National Housing Act so that the FHA may continue to insure home modernization and improvement loans.

Under our Housing for Veterans Act, approved July 1, 1948, financing of GI home mortgage loans is being facilitated by providing a secondary market for GI mortgage loans in the Federal National Mortgage Association. This legislation makes it possible for veterans to obtain 100 percent Government guaranteed or insured financing which is all eligible for purchase by the Government secondary market.

Further assistance is provided by this bill to the veterans' housing program by making veterans' housing cooperatives and nonprofit housing corporations eligible for Government insured financing up to 95 percent of the value of the project.

Emphasis is placed upon construction of homes within the ability of veterans generally to pay. For instance, the average sized veteran home mortgage guaranteed by the GI bill is $5,756, and over 1,000,000 veterans have secured mortgage loans aggregating more than $7,000,000,000.

According to findings of the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics on construction costs for the second quarter of 1947—latest analysis available—some 58 percent of all new housing construction had a cost, excluding land, of less than $6,250 per dwelling unit.

We are licking the housing shortage in the American way. The American people see the proof in new construction all over the country.

AGRICULTURE, RECLAMATION, FLOOD CONTROL

Our Republican declaration of principles said:

We have pledged stability of farm prices during the reconversion and readjustment periods. We will carry out those pledges. We will support sound, permanent proposals to give farmers expanding markets and their fair share of the national income. We reaffirm our long-standing support of soil-and-water conservation. We shall support measures designed to protect better rural living.

We have kept those pledges.

Accomplishments of the Republican Congress for agriculture and thereby strengthening our whole national economy are unsurpassed by any previous Congress.

Instead of the collapse in commodity prices that President Truman forecast in a message to Congress in 1945, there has been and continues to be a tremendous world demand for food. The American farmers gave all-out production during the war.

The Republican Congress has kept faith with the farmers by continuing reasonable Government support of prices in return for maximum production of food. As a result of the actions of the Republican Congress, farmers now have confidence and assurance as they toil and sweat.

For the happiness and contentment of the farmers, and the protection of the consumers, the Republican Congress has contributed in many ways. Here, briefly, are our major accomplishments:

Enacted farm price support legislation geared to the present emergency demand for food exports and to the long-range welfare of both consumers and producers, with these highlights:

First. The basic commodities are supported at 90 percent of parity through June 30, 1950.

Second. The major nonbasic commodities are supported at 60 to 90 percent of parity through December 31, 1949, except that milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs are supported at 90 percent of parity for that period.

Third. Beginning January 1, 1950, the provisions of the long-range price support program will go into effect. These include a general revision of the parity formula to take into consideration the varying costs of agricultural production, changes in the pattern of consumption and other factors.

"Parity" is a formula approved by Congress to equalize prices for what the farmer sells and prices of things he buys.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION EXPANDED

Authorized $800,000,000 in loans for rural electrification, twice as much as any previous Congress and only $275,000,000 less than the total amount provided for REA work prior to the Eightieth Congress.

REA electricity was extended during fiscal year 1948 to 400,000 farm homes—more than twice as many as in any prewar year—and an even larger number of farm homes are scheduled to receive electricity during the 1949 fiscal year.

SOIL CONSERVATION EXTENDED

Appropriated more than $500,000,000 for soil conservation activities on American farms.

Authorized $262,500,000 for soil conservation payments for 1949.

We began extensive studies with a view to adoption of a long-range comprehensive governmental policy for restoration and conservation of the Nation's agricultural resources. Pending enactment of such a program, we extended the authority for AAA soil conservation payments through 1951.

RECORD ROAD-BUILDING PROGRAM

Launched the greatest rural road building program ever undertaken cooperatively by the Federal and State Governments.

Appropriated almost twice as much money for Federal participation in secondary road construction as was spent by the Federal Government for that purpose in the 10 years prior to 1948.

Compared with Federal expenditures for secondary roads in the 10 fiscal years 1938–47 totaling $112,000,000, the Republican Congress appropriated $74,000,000 for that purpose in fiscal 1948 and $128,000,000 for fiscal 1949. This will make possible a Federal-State secondary road program more than five times as great as in any single previous year.

Authorized $450,000,000 for Federal participation in road building during 1950 and the same amount for 1951. Funds are to be divided 45 percent for primary roads, 25 percent for city thoroughfares, and 30 percent for secondary rural roads.

In addition, the Republican Congress enacted an entirely new crop insurance act, providing a sound and businesslike program of insurance for a great many agricultural commodities; strengthened the farmers' marketing act; chartered the Commodity Credit Corporation; stabilized the sugar market in the interests of consumers and producers; rescued wool growers by extending the price support program, after the Secretary of Agriculture's April 15, 1947 order terminating the price-support program had plunged the wool producers into disaster; and the Republican Congress provided liberally for campaigns against the livestock foot-and-mouth disease, cattle grub, weeds, insects, and other pests.

GOP CONGRESS FOSTERED RECLAMATION

One of the most brazen attempts of the Truman administration to convert a sound, nonpartisan national program into a political football and vehicle for radical New Deal planners is its treatment of the reclamation program that is so vital to the West.

Panicky and at wit's end over the problems of conversion from war to peace, President Truman in August 1946, issued his infamous order freezing one-half of the money Congress had appropriated for the Reclamation Service's construction fund. Urgently needed irrigation and power projects were slowed down, contract negotiations were canceled, and the whole program was thrown out of gear.

The reclamation program had been furthered through the years by nonpartisan support. Party lines had been dropped as whole communities battled unitedly for water and power primarily essential to take care of the growth of the West.

When the Republican Congress convened we rescued the reclamation program, which, incidentally, was fathered by the Republican Party back in President Theodore Roosevelt's administration.

We investigated the Reclamation Service in the Department of the Interior and found scandalous conditions. In an effort to discredit the Republican Congress orders were given to spend appropriations faster than the prudent schedules provided by Congress, so that funds would be exhausted prematurely and thereby foment dissatisfaction among the people.

Evidence was obtained in support of charges that the Reclamation Service had misled Congress on the amount of unused funds in the construction program.

Much, very much, remains to be done before the reclamation program is reestablished in the interests of the people, but the Republican Congress has made progress in that purpose.

This Congress has appropriated more money for reclamation than any previous Congress—$389,804,000—and we intend that it shall be spent wisely.

We have provided more money for river and harbor improvement than any previous Congress—$285,500,000. For flood control we exceeded all previous congressional outlays in making $712,063,000 available. These are expenditures that come under the category of must, and the Republican Congress fully recognizes its responsibility in fostering reclamation, river and harbor improvement, and flood control.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

On foreign affairs this is what our Republican Declaration, in part, said:

We support the United Nations Organization for international peace. * * * We support the indispensable inter-American system as a regional part of the international organization. * * * We will engage in essential international relief as a humanitarian obligation and to prevent chaos through misery. * * * We will seek to find common policies with the other great powers. * * * We consider that the maintenance of a strong, solvent, free America is the basis of our greatest contribution to world order.

We have kept those pledges.

In foreign affairs, the Republican Congress has complied with all its constitutional responsibilities. We have striven for an enduring world peace.

We have kept all congressional commitments to the United Nations, acted to strengthen solidarity of the Western Hemisphere, provided generously for relief and recovery of foreign nations wracked by the war, and insisted upon the American way in our dealings with all nations.

Our Federal Constitution divides responsibility and duties in foreign relations between the President and the Congress. In the President is lodged the prerogative of negotiating with foreign countries, and in the Congress, or the Senate as the case may be, is vested the duty of approving, amending, or rejecting treaties that the President negotiates.

Implicit in the Constitution is teamwork, cooperation between the President and the Congress. The founding fathers never intended that foreign policy should be made by only one man—the President. The people reserved that right for themselves, acting through their representatives in the Congress and their President.

New Deal Democrat Presidents, past and present, have stretched their constitutional right to make agreements with foreign governments. They have caused situations repugnant to our Republic. In the creation of these tragic situations the Republican Congress has had no part.

When the Republican Congress convened in January 1947, the seeds for many of the ills that now confront our country and which have threatened lasting peace had already been planted. The Republican Party had no part in the planting.

Neither the Republican leaders in Congress nor the American people were consulted when the secret deals were made at Quebec, Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam—deals designed to remap much of the world, deals to "freeze" the future of our war enemies, and deals that bypass Congress and the American people in the peacemaking.

OPPOSED APPEASEMENT OF RUSSIA

President Truman has consulted Republican congressional leaders on some foreign affairs policies, but on many vital matters he has not consulted them. When he has consulted our leaders they advised him to steer a consistent course in keeping with American traditions, to be reasonable and firm, and above all not to coddle and appease Soviet Russia.

Instead, the Truman administration's record in foreign affairs is a series of reversals, vacillation, fumbling, and bungling which cannot be escaped or tossed into the lap of the Republican Party as the results of a "bipartisan" foreign policy.

In recognizing its responsibility as the policy-making branch of the Government, the Republican Congress sent special committees abroad to gather firsthand information. Sadly lacking, it was found, was an over-all plan and global thinking on the ravages of communistic aggression. Through piecemeal doses, the Government had distributed more than $20,000,000,000 among foreign nations since the war's end in its customary loose methods.

VOTED $9,579,657,128 IN FOREIGN AID

During the first session of the Eightieth Congress, we appropriated $2,377,573,900 for foreign aid, including $400,000,000 for assistance to Greece and Turkey and for administration and relief in occupied countries.

During the second session, we appropriated $7,202,083,228 for those purposes, with $1,000,000,000 earmarked for reconstruction and rehabilitation loans.

Thus, the Republican Congress appropriated $9,579,657,123 in an effort to help foreign countries get well and preserve their independence against the threat of communism.

ORDERED EFFICIENCY IN FOREIGN AID

We established the Economic Cooperation Administration, with directions for administering the foreign aid in a business-like, efficient way to the end that there shall be happiness and security in the afflicted countries, redounding to our own national security, prosperity, and happiness.

The Republican Party is mindful of the importance of solidarity among the nations of the Western Hemisphere. To that end our Party was represented in the successful inter-American conference at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, last year.

The Rio treaty was ratified on December 8, 1947, by the Senate. Under the treaty the American Republics are pledged to strengthen their friendship, to submit controversies between them to peaceful settlement, and to prevent aggression through effective reciprocal assistance.

We reestablished as a single Government corporation the Institute of Inter-American affairs and the Inter-American Educational Foundation, Inc. The Institute is directed to improve social and economic conditions by concrete programs in the fields of public health, sanitation, agriculture, and education.

Under agreement with the United Nations the Pacific Islands formerly held by Japan under League of Nations mandate were brought by the Senate into United States trusteeship, the islands to be known as the Territory of the Pacific Islands. They embrace the Marshalls, Carolines, and Marianas which our gallant troops captured during the war.

We joined the International Refugee Organization and gave it $71,073,900 for its humanitarian work. We passed a bill to admit 205,000 displaced persons into the United States and allow 15,000 war refugees already here to remain.

The Senate ratified treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Hungary, and Bulgaria.

AMERICA IS GOING FORWARD

The Republican Congress has delivered on its pledges to the people.

The united Republican Party, through its constructive, forward-looking program has accomplished much during less than 2 years of its control of the Eightieth Congress for the welfare of all the land.

This progress has been made despite obstruction every step of the way by an administration whose philosophy of government revolves around radicalism, regimentation, all-powerful bureaucracy, class exploitation, Government extravagance, stifling and destructive taxation, centralization of power and authority in Washington, coddling of Communists, and corrupt big city politics.

We Republicans in Congress know that the people stand with us in our fight for sound, forward-looking, good government. They are not going back to the sort of bad government of which they have had enough, much too much.

That is why they are going to elect a Republican President who will cooperate with a Republican Congress in carrying forward the cause of good government thus far so well advanced by the Eightieth Congress, a Republican Congress.

America is going forward!

America is going Republican!

Mike Mansfield Reports on Veterans' Legislation in the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MIKE MANSFIELD

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, during the Eightieth Congress 31 bills have been passed for the benefit of veterans of both World Wars I and II. These bills have been signed by the President and are now public laws. The veterans of Montana will recall that 2 years ago I corrected and brought up to date the veterans' handbook, which I distributed to the best of my ability to the veterans living in my congressional district. As an addition to that handbook, I have compiled a list of veteran laws which have been passed by the Eightieth Congress and which I think forms a necessary supplement to the handbook for veterans which I sent out 2 years ago.

As a former enlisted man in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, I have been very much interested in veterans' legislation, and it has been my pleasure and privilege to support and vote for all good veterans' legislation. Since my own service in the armed forces it has been my belief that America owes a debt which can never be fully paid to the veterans who have preserved this Nation. It is my intention to continue to fight in behalf of all our veterans to improve the service of hospitalization, vocational and academic education, life insurance, disability determination, and pension payments. If the veterans of my district have any questions on this or any other kind of legislation, I wish they would feel free to call on me at any time.

The list of veteran bills which were passed by the Eightieth Congress is as follows:

Public Law 5: Repeals time limit (now extended administratively to January 1, 1948) for reinstatement of national service life insurance (level-premium term) on comparative health basis, to provide for automatic conversion to ordinary-life plan for total disability at end of term, and to provide for original application on any permanent plan.

Public Law 34: Extends for an additional 5-year period the privilege of renewing 5-year level-premium term United States Government life insurance for World War I veterans.

Public Law 82: To permit husband and wife to combine their armed services credit for homestead purposes.

Public Law 85: Authorizing $35,500,000 to complete temporary reuse housing for veterans.

Public Law 94: To extend for 1 year (until June 30, 1948) certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, as amended, relating to authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years.

Public Law 115: Authorizes an increase in appropriation for revolving fund from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000 for purpose of making advancements by the Veterans' Administration not to exceed $100 in any case to disabled veterans of World War II taking vocational training.

Public Law 126: Extending until January 1, 1948, the time during which alien fiancées of veterans may enter the United States without being subject to immigration quotas or visa regulations.

Public Law 161: To extend for another year the authority to purchase automobiles for World War II veterans who are leg amputees or have suffered the loss or the use of a leg.

Public Law 213: To permit the admission to the United States of racially inadmissable alien spouses of veterans.

Public Law 254: To provide for the cash payment of terminal-leave bonds any time after September 1, 1947.

Public Law 270: Provides increase of 20 percent in rates of service pension for veterans of the Spanish-American War and Civil War and their dependents.

Public Law 310: To restore the tax-exemption status of those members of the armed services removed from former American possessions during captivity by the Japanese.

Public Law 314: To authorize the acceptance by officers and enlisted men of the armed services of medals and decorations tendered them by cobelligerent and neutral nations of World War II.

Public Law 316: Permits recognition of officers and enlisted men retired from the military and naval forces of the United States as representatives of certain organizations in the presentation of claims to the Veterans' Administration.

Public Law 325: To make mandatory on Federal agencies the rulings of the Civil Service Commission on appeals by veterans for reinstatement.

Public Law 338. Increases the minimum monthly subsistence allowance payable to disabled World War II veterans who are taking vocational training and who have a service-connected disability, disabling to a degree of 30 percent or more, to the following sums: Without dependents, $115 (formerly $105); with one dependent, $135 (formerly $115); plus the following amounts for additional dependents: $20 (formerly $10) for one child, and $15 (formerly $7) for each additional child, and $15 (formerly $15) for a dependent parent.

Public Law 350: To provide cash in lieu of terminal leave for veterans.

Public Law 367: To refund income tax so paid by any member of the armed services who died on active duty for the year in which death occurred and for the years during which he was in the armed services.

Public Law 377: Includes by statute institutional on-farm training among types of full-time training afforded World War II veterans under title II of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act and to set up certain standards relative thereto.

Public Law 396: To extend veterans preference benefits (civil service) to widowed mothers of certain servicemen and ex-servicewomen.

Public Law 411: Increases subsistence allowances for World War II veterans pursuing full-time institutional training to $75 per month, if without a dependent, or $105 per month if he has one dependent, or $120 per month if he has more than one dependent.

Public Law 429: Amends the National Service Life Insurance Act to extend for 2 years the time within which eligible persons may apply for payment of automatic (gratuitous) insurance death benefits.

Public Law 512: Raises the ceilings on wages and subsistence allowances payable to veterans undergoing institutional or on-the-job training as follows: $250 monthly for veteran without dependent (formerly $175), $325 for veteran with one dependent (formerly $200), $350 for veteran with two or more dependents (formerly $200). Adds 2 years to the customary training period.

Public Law 702: Authorizes assistance to spinal-cord case World War II veterans in acquiring specially adapted housing which they require by reason of the nature of their service-connected disabilities.

Public Law 748: Establishes by statute a presumption of service connection for certain enumerated chronic and tropical diseases which are shown to exist within 1 year from discharge from active service, or within the incubation period of such tropical diseases.

Public Law 762: Grants pension to unremarried widows of Spanish-American War veterans, 60 years of age, who married veteran 10 years prior to his death.

Public Law 838: Authorizes additional period of 5 years for all level-premium term insurance on all policies issued prior to January 1, 1948.

Public Law 864: Creating second market for housing loans made under title III of Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended.

Public Law 868: Increases service-connected death rates of compensation for widows and dependents to: Widow, no child, $75; widow, one child, $100; with $15 for each additional child; no widow but one child, $58; no widow, two children $82; no widow three children $106; $20 for each additional child; $60 for a dependent mother or father (or both, $35 each); rates for peacetime veterans' widows and dependents set at 80 percent of above.

Public Law 876: Increases compensation rates for disability incurred in peacetime service to 80 percent of rates payable for similar disability incurred during wartime service.

Public Law 877: To increase compensation for veterans 60 percent or more disabled and who have dependents.

Address of Hon. Frances P. Bolton, of Ohio, Before the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCES P. BOLTON
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission extended me by unanimous consent of the House, I am inserting herewith the address I made before the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia on June 22, 1948:

Fellow delegates, all Republicans in this great hall and out across the country and every citizen within the frontiers of this wonderful America.

We Republicans meet here in the historic city of Philadelphia to nominate one man for the Presidency, the highest, most responsible elective office in the world, and one for the equally important office of Vice President. Witness our plight during the past 3 years. It would be impossible at this moment for us who have declared to all the world that it is in "God we trust"—not to ask that we be used by the creative and constructive forces of His being to bring wisdom to a place of leadership here in these United States, and so to all the anguished world. I am certain that it is the feeling of every man and woman in this convention hall that the results of our considerations may be such that it can be truly said in the language of the psalmist, "Here we will set up a standard to our God."

I am asked to direct my remarks especially to the women of the country. This I am particularly happy to do because yesterday, June 21, 1948, will stand as a milestone to all American women. It marks the nomination to the Senate of the United States of a charming, capable, experienced woman, with 8 years of magnificent service in the House of Representatives to her credit. Deeply respected by every Member of the House and Senate, and in all the departments of Government as a careful, fair, tolerant, and determined Member of the Congress, MARGARET CHASE SMITH brings to her Senate job an amazing preparation. Without financial backing, on the sheer strength of her hard work, her fine record, and her personality, MARGARET SMITH polled many more votes than her three opponents together, twice as many as her strongest opponent.

With quiet serenity she went into every city and village in Maine, letting the people see her, talk with her, question her that they might know her caliber, and judge her for themselves. Her overwhelming victory should give to every man and woman across the country a fresh assurance that once the people know, their judgment can be relied upon. With all our hearts we Republican women should be grateful to this woman, grateful for her hard work, for her comprehension of the people of this country, for her understanding of the methods and procedure of the Congress, and her position in the world of men.

For myself, I want to thank the people of Maine for the proof they have once again given the whole world that they will be true to the finest standards and the highest ideals that are America. All hail! Margaret, we women rejoice that your judgments will be a part of Senate consideration of the great problems of the future. You have been the finest type of Congresswoman. We know from your demonstrated abilities that you will carry the same quiet strength into what we in the House call the other body. This is the time when men and women must work shoulder to shoulder if the dreams in the hearts of all real Americans are to be brought into actuality. Thanks, Congresswoman, and good luck in the other body.

Is it not of peculiar significance that we gather here in the city that cradled a formula of liberty under law as yet unrivaled, at a moment when the people of America must reexamine, reappraise, reevaluate, and restore the virility of their liberty? Out of these days must come certainty that government in this representative Republic is to be wisely administered, to the end that it may once again rest in the hands of the people.

It has been said that "* * * power and liberty are like heat and moisture: where they are well mixed everything prospers; where they are single, they are destructive." It is the task of the Republican Party to see to it that the spirit be restirred, requickened, rededicated, and readjusted to the fundamentals of freedom. This task Republicans are eminently fitted to perform—not men alone, but men and women, side by side, shoulder to shoulder.

Power. Liberty. Freedom.

Power, yes. We have given the world a terrible power when we found the secret of the atom. But we have released also a far more miraculous power—that of the free human spirit. There is nothing that such a power under the great laws of the eternal universe cannot do. But it must be free.

There are no words in all our language that are more precious than liberty and freedom. Yet we have let our freedom and our liberty be jeopardized by permitting concentration of power in the executive branch of Government. This, our Government must put back in balance that freedom be once again assured. If you doubt this, go out across the world and see if you can find any who are free as we are free.

Go where the menace of communism casts its dark shadow over every hour of day and night—where fear is all that men know. Men? Yes. But women, too—women and little children, they are always the final sufferers, all of them looking across the seas to America for hope, for the assurance that America is still free—knowing that if freedom yet lives in some one spot on earth, it can reconquer the world. How their hearts must rejoice that our doors are being opened to some 200,000 of the homeless victims of tyranny by this Republican Congress.

The moment has come when we Republicans must provide the real leadership that will bring back sanity and balance to our economy, to our courts, to every area of our life, including the home, that center of our whole way of life. We who are women must assume our whole share of the burden. When have we ever refused, we who hold title to most of the land, who have control of the major holdings. But our economic powers are but a small part of our responsibilities, for it is woman who has the first responsibility for the family. It is woman who is the central force of the home, the potent influence upon the children in their earliest impressionable years. It is women who furnish the spiritual incentive for better living without which no nation can be secure.

As it is the women of America who have to make ends meet, who have to stay within budgets, it is the women of America who should rise up in November and give the country relief from the spending spree of these last long years.

This Republican Congress, in spite of the efforts of New Deal Presidents, has already moved to help increase the budget allowance of the housewife by reducing taxes. Seventy-one percent of the tax relief, nearly three-fourths, goes to people in the lower-income brackets where relief from tax burdens is most needed.

We Republican women, on farms and in cities, in factories and in every situation of our national life should shout aloud from the housetops that there is to be an end to the bureaucratic mismanagement and oppression that has choked us for so long. We should spread the good news that these tax reductions with the exemptions for the aged, those beyond the age of gainful occupation, and for the blind, are signposts on a new road, the road to permanent American recovery pointing with unerring accuracy to a better day.

If we, as women, are impatient with governmental policies that are wasteful, then we must use our strength, our influence, our vote to a good purpose. We who know the relief that comes after a good house cleaning, should apply the principle to our community living and to our national responsibility. We need a complete national house cleaning.

Written on the walls of the Chicago public library are these words: "Our Republic is an act of faith which generations still in darkness hid, signed in their night in witness of the dawn."

Our Republican Party is an organization built in faith to maintain and uphold the principles of our Republic.

We know of old that "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

So in faith, we women of the Republican Party turn within to find the strength and courage to meet the growing needs of our organization and the country it serves, and we look beyond to the work our party and our Nation must do to uphold the principles once announced here in Philadelphia and projected further in the Bill of Rights. American liberty was born here, here let us do our best to preserve it.

As we consider America as she is today, hated and feared by other countries because of her demonstrated strength, the luxury of her life as compared with the poverty and hunger everywhere else in the world, we women know that she must be true to herself if she is to be light to those in darkness, hope to those who despair—whether these be within our own frontiers or out beyond the seas.

We women know even better than our men that the dream that brought our forefathers to these shores has not yet been made perfect. We long to see America a land where all men and all women, no matter what be their color, their method of worship of the Most High God, or their national background, shall have opportunity to work according to their need and education that will develop their utmost capacity. We know this will take many years and much consecrated effort: but we press forward toward the day when, because of our determinations here in this city of brotherly love, children will be born with sound bodies and keen minds into homes where happiness dwells. We who know the cost of life as no man ever can or will, know that these things will not be until war is resolved, until greed, envy, suspicion, fear give way to understanding and perfect peace comes to the world. We know that now is the turning point and that we have a vital work to do.

Because we know these things we must take up the burden of our knowledge. As American women and as Republicans we have a very vital part to play in these next months, and on into America's future. Resenting all the dark shadows of oppressive government interference with our freedom of choice, we must do our full share and more to remove every vestige of unbalance among the three separate correlated branches of government that protect us from the tyranny of any one of them.

Nor may we sit back complacently at this grave moment in man's history when the forces of unbelief are reaching out across the world. Rather must we face up squarely to this menace which is communism, fearlessly building the invisible defenses we know to be more powerful than any visible armor. That is every woman's part in this fateful hour, your part and my part.

Let me tell you my fellow delegates of this convention and all Republicans of this great representative Republic that the women of America do care, and they will show that they care when we elect a Republican President on November 2.

Women of America, here in this great convention hall, and out across the Nation: The hour of consecration is upon us. Our priceless heritage of freedom needs what only we can give. The clouds that have been gathering around the torch of our liberties will be dispelled with ease when once, with clear eyes and strong hearts, in conquering faith we go forward.

So, with a deep and abiding humility let us take hold upon our duty that we will continue in the tradition of the great Republican Party by giving our country leaders who will be strong in faith and understanding, unswerving in their determination to return this to the people, whose servant it must always be if liberty and freedom shall reign upon the earth. A government of, by, for the people.

Reports of the Proposed Libby Dam

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the newspaper publicity given to the activities of the United States Corps of Engineers in carrying out investigations in western Montana, I have received many communications from Montanans, covering the proposal for a dam at the Libby site, 1½ miles below Jennings, Mont. I have written to Gen. R. C. Crawford, Acting Chief of Engineers, for information on this proposed project and I am including with my remarks his reply. I have already sent out reports on the proposed Paradise and Glacier View Dams and the arguments about the Libby Dam apply to them as well.

The following points, in connection with the Libby proposal, are pertinent and should be kept in mind.

First. The United States Corps of Engineers has neither the authority nor the funds for the construction of this project.

Second. Under specific authority granted by Congress, the United States Corps of Engineers has been given the authority to make detailed investigations in the entire Columbia River Basin.

Third. The Libby project is not being proposed for construction at this time.

Fourth. Public hearings have been held to consider the views of the people of Montana on this proposed project.

Fifth. A complete report covering the Libby project must be made to Congress.

Sixth. After the report has been made to Congress—and only then—will authorization for this and similar projects be considered.

Mr. Speaker, the reply of General Crawford to my letter follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: Reference is made to your letter in which you ask for information on a proposal for a hydroelectric power and flood-control project on the Kootenai River concerning which, it is your understanding, a hearing has been scheduled for 7 July 1948 at Libby, Mont.

It appears that the proposal to which you refer is that for a dam on the Kootenai River at the Libby site, about 1.5 miles downstream from Jennings, Mont. As you may already know, at this time we do not have the necessary authority from Congress nor funds for the construction of a dam at the Libby site. Pursuant to specific authority from Congress, however, we now have under way a detailed investigation of the entire Columbia River Basin, including the Kootenai River. The necessary field studies and the preparation of reports in connection with that investigation are being accomplished under the supervision of Col. Theron D. Weaver, our division engineer of the North Pacific Division, with the study of that portion of the Columbia River Basin lying within Montana being carried out under the immediate direction of Col. Leland H. Hewitt, our district engineer at Seattle, Wash.

A project on the Kootenai River at the Libby site is included among a large number of prospective improvements for the development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin that are being studied in connection with the current investigation of that river basin. At the present time, therefore, this project is not being proposed by the Corps of Engineers for construction but is rather one of the subjects of discussion at hearings being held in the area concerned in order that the views of interested persons and organizations may be obtained and considered in formulating plans for the development of the Columbia River and its tributaries. As mentioned in your letter, Colonel Hewitt has scheduled a public hearing to be held in the Theater Building at Libby at 2 p. m. on July 7, 1948, to consider the Libby Dam proposal, as well as a proposal for a levee project to protect Bonners Ferry, Idaho. I am pleased to inclose for your further information a copy of the notice of that public hearing issued by Colonel Hewitt's office under date of June 24, 1948. The inclosed notice presents detailed information on the improvement at the Libby site which is now under consideration.

The views of interested persons and organizations relative to prospective improvements in the Columbia River Basin as expressed at public hearings and by other means will, of course, be carefully considered by the reporting officers and will exert a considerable influence in the formulation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Division and District Engineers when their report is submitted to this office. Since the investigation of the Columbia River Basin is still under way in the field, however, this office is not apprised at this time of the recommendations to be made by the reporting officers relative to the Libby Dam project and other prospective improvements in the Columbia River Basin now under consideration.

The Division and District Engineers' report on the Columbia River Basin investigation is scheduled to be completed and submitted to this office in the fall of this year. When that report is received, at which time you will be notified, it will be referred to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for review as required by law. Upon completion of the Board's action on that report, the proposed report of the Chief of Engineers thereon will be furnished to the Governors of the affected States and to interested Federal agencies for their views and comments, and the written comments of the Governors and interested Federal agencies will accompany the complete report to Congress with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers regarding improvements considered feasible and economically justified at that time. After the report has been transmitted to Congress, further action toward the construction of any projects that may be recommended therein will depend upon the authorization of those projects by Congress and the appropriation of the necessary funds for the work proposed.

Sincerely yours,

R. C. CRAWFORD,
Major General,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

The Federal Power Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM J. MILLER

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, on the 7th day of April 1947, I introduced two bills known as H. R. 2972 and H. R. 2973. These bills contained proposed amendments to parts 2 and 1 respectively of the Federal Power Act.

A subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, to whom the bills were referred, held extensive hearings on the proposed amendments during June 1947. More than a score of witnesses appeared in support of the bills. Witnesses came from all over the United States. The National Association of Railroad and Public Utility Commissioners appeared in support of the measures. The only opponents were members and employees of the Federal Power Commission and they were given 4 days in which to express their opposition. These hearings attracted Nationwide attention but did not bring out any known opposition.

During the hearings numerous changes were proposed in the language of the two bills. Based on a careful study of these hearings I have had a substitute bill prepared which I will introduce at the opening of the next session of Congress.

Due to the large number of bills referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce it was impossible for the subcommittee to complete its study of this legislation in time to submit a report to the full committee or to the House.

A copy of the bill as it will be introduced next January follows. I have also prepared a description of the bill along with a summary of the hearing and other pertinent comment.

A bill to amend the Federal Power Act

PART I

Be it enacted, etc., That in connection with the administration of part I of the Federal Power Act it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to recognize the interests and rights of the States in determining the development of the watersheds and water resources within their borders and likewise their interests and rights in water utilization and control, and for that purpose to limit the authority and jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission in the administration of part I of the Federal Power Act, as hereinafter provided. All of the provisions of part I of the Federal Power Act, as herein amended, shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy.

SEC. 1. Subsection (8) of section 3 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(8) 'navigable waters' means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which at the time of the inquiry are generally and commonly used for commerce of a substantial character consisting of the transportation of persons or property by boat in interstate or foreign commerce, or have a reasonable probability of being so used either in their natural condition or by navigation improvements recommended to Congress within the preceding 3 years by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War after examination and survey pursuant to specific authorization by Congress provided that such recommendation has not theretofore been rejected or abandoned by Congress and that as of the time of inquiry the estimated annual commercial benefits to be derived therefrom exceed the estimated annual costs of said improvements sufficiently to make the improvement economically justifiable, or by navigation improvements which have been authorized by Congress within not more than 3 years prior to the date of inquiry or for which, if earlier authorized there are specific and currently effective appropriations for the purpose of furthering navigation in interstate or foreign commerce, including all falls, shallows, or rapids compelling land carriage."

SEC. 2. Subsection (g) of section 4 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) Upon its own motion to order an investigation of any occupancy of, or evidenced intention to occupy, for the purpose of developing electric power, public lands, reservations, or streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States by any person, corporation, State, or municipality and to issue such order within its jurisdiction under section 23 (b) of this act as it may find appropriate, expedient, and in the public interest to conserve and utilize the navigation and water-power resources of the region."

SEC. 3. Section 6 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Licenses under this part shall be issued for a period of 50 years from the date of issuance thereof, except in the event application is made for a shorter period and the Commission agrees to such shorter period. Each such license shall be conditioned upon acceptance by the licensee of all terms and conditions of this act and such further conditions, if any, as the Commission shall prescribe in conformity with this act, which said terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof shall be expressed in said license. Licenses may be revoked only for the reasons and in the manner prescribed under the provisions of this act and may be altered or surrendered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the Commission after 30 days' public notice. Copies of all licenses issued under the provisions of this part and calling for the payment of annual charges shall be deposited with the General Accounting Office, in compliance with section 3743, Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C. title 41, sec. 20)."

SEC. 4. Subsection (i) of section 10 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(i) In issuing licenses in cases of (a) projects of not more than 2,000 horsepower installed capacity or (b) projects for more than 2,000 horsepower installed capacity or (c) projects for more than 2,000 horsepower installed capacity where applicable for license shall have been made by reason of the occupancy or proposed occupancy of public lands aggregating not more than 15 percent of the lands occupied or proposed to be occupied by the project, the Commission shall waive all conditions, provisions, and requirements of this part, except the provisions of subparagraph (c) of this section 10 and the license period of 50 years: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to annual charges for use of lands within Indian reservations."

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 23 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) The provisions of this part shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right-of-way granted prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to applicable State, Territorial or Federal laws, or as confirming or otherwise affecting any claim, or authority given prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to such laws, or as being applicable to any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works incidental thereto, lawfully constructed under a permit, right-of-way, right to construct, or authority granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to such laws or as affecting the right to transfer, cancel, revoke, or terminate any permit or right-of-way, and every permit or right-of-way shall be valid and existing until canceled or terminated in appropriate proceedings for that purpose but any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality holding or possessing a permit, right-of-way, right to construct, or authority granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to such laws may apply for a license hereunder, and upon such application the Commission may issue to any such applicant a license in accordance with the provisions of this part and in such case the provisions of this act shall apply to such applicant as a license hereunder: Provided, That when application is made for a license under this section for a project or projects already constructed the fair value of said project or projects determined as provided in this section, shall for the purposes of this part and of said license be deemed to be the amount to be allowed as the net investment of the applicant in such project or projects as of the date of such license, or as of the date of such determination, if license has not been issued. Such fair value shall be determined by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearings."

SEC. 6. Subsection (b) of said section 23 of the Federal Power Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, State, or municipality for the purpose of developing electric power to construct, operate, or maintain any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works, incidental thereto across, along, or in any of the navigable waters, as herein defined, or upon any part of the public lands or reservations of the United States, including the Territories, or utilize the surplus water or water power at any Government dam, except under and in accordance with the terms of a permit or valid existing right-of-way, or right to construct, granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to applicable State, Territorial, or Federal laws, or a license granted pursuant to this act: Provided, That no such license shall be required with respect to the repair, reconstruction, operation, or continued maintenance of any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works incidental thereto lawfully constructed under any permit, right-of-way, right to construct, or authority granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to applicable State, Territorial, or Federal laws. Any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality intending for like purpose to construct or maintain a dam or other project works across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof, other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States shall before such construction, and in the case of a project heretofore constructed, may file declaration of such intention with the Commission, whereupon the Commission shall cause an immediate investigation of such proposed construction or previously constructed project to be made, and if upon investigation it shall find that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected by such proposed construction or the continued maintenance of such previously constructed project, such person, association, corporation, State, or municipality shall not construct, maintain, or operate such dam or other project works until it shall have applied for and shall have received a license hereinafter denominated a limited license, which the Commission shall issue upon application and which shall be for 50 years from the date of issuance thereof, except in the event application is made for a shorter period and the Commission agrees to such shorter period, shall not contain any condition or option permitting the United States to take over the project except by eminent domain, and shall contain only such conditions as are reasonably necessary or appropriate for the protection of the navigable capacity of navigable waters as herein defined, and to reimburse the United States for the cost of administering the act in relation to the project. If no public lands or reservations are affected, and unless the Commission in the case of a new project finds that said project is not appropriate for the protection of the navigable capacity of the navigable waters affected and for the improvement and utilization of water power, permission is hereby granted to construct and maintain or to maintain such dam or other project works in such streams upon compliance with State or Territorial laws: Provided further, That in those cases where the Commission finds that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be not affected by such proposed construction or the maintenance of such previously constructed project, the declarant, whether the owner of an existing project or proposing to construct a new project, may apply for, and upon such application the Commission shall issue such a limited license for such project upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore prescribed for such a license: And provided further, That unless the United States acquires the project for or in connection with a navigation improvement, such a limited license shall, upon the application of the original licensee or its assignee, be renewed for the same term and upon the same conditions as provided in the expiring license except insofar as a different term or different conditions may be appropriate under, or required by, then existing law or for the protection of then existing navigable capacity of navigable waters as herein defined.

No license shall be required with respect to the repair, reconstruction, operation, or continued maintenance of any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works incidental thereto lawfully constructed across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States under any permit, right-of-way, right to construct, or authority granted or existing prior to August 26, 1935, pursuant to applicable State, Territorial, or Federal laws: Provided, further, That any person, State, or municipality constructing, operating, or maintaining any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works incidental thereto, across, along, or in any navigable waters, as herein defined, or across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States shall conform to the lawful requirements of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, with respect to navigation or the effect of any such dam or other works on navigation: Provided, further, That insofar as the Commission in its administration of the act prior to this amendment has required the acceptance of licenses for projects or of licenses with conditions, which licenses or conditions are not authorized or required by the act as hereby amended, the Commission, upon application of a licensee, shall cancel such licenses and eliminate such conditions as would not have been authorized or required had these amendments to the act been in effect at the times when such licenses were issued; and upon cancellation of any such license as aforesaid, permission is hereby granted to maintain such project in compliance with State or Territorial laws.

SEC. 7. Nothing in this part shall be construed as in any way affirming, disaffirming, or otherwise affecting the compensable or noncompensable character of the water rights of any owner of property across, along, or in any navigable waters, as herein defined, or waters other than those defined herein as navigable and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, in the event of the taking of such property by virtue of the authority of the United States.

PART II

Subsection (b) of section 201 of the Federal Power Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) The provisions of this part shall apply to the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and to the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, but shall not apply to any other sale of electric energy or deprive a State or State commission of its lawful authority now exercised over the exportation of hydroelectric energy which is transmitted across a State line. The Commission shall have jurisdiction over all facilities for such transmission or sale of electric energy, but shall not have jurisdiction, except as specifically provided in this part and the part next following, over facilities used for the generation of electric energy or over facilities used in local distribution, or only for the transmission or sale of electric energy in intrastate commerce, or over facilities of a person, whose facilities are located wholly within one State and who is engaged in local distribution, which facilities are used for the transmission or for the sale at wholesale within the State in which it is consumed of electric energy generated in another State, or over facilities for the transmission of electric energy consumed wholly by the transmitter."

SEC. 2. Subsection (c) of said section 201 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) For the purpose of this part, electric energy shall be held to be transmitted in interstate commerce if transmitted from a State and consumed at any point outside thereof; but only insofar as such transmission takes place within the United States: Provided, however, That the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce shall not be deemed to include transmission by facilities of a person whose facilities are located wholly within one State and who is engaged in local distribution even though some of the facilities of such person are used for the transmission or for the sale at wholesale within the State in which it is consumed, of electric energy generated in another State: Provided, further, That transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce shall not be deemed to include transmission within a State of electric energy all of which (exclusive of energy received under the proviso next following) is generated in the same State which is sold to a person engaged in the transmission of electric energy from such State even though a part of the energy so sold is transmitted to another State unless the amount of electric energy so sold is more than the amount of electric energy customarily distributed locally in such State by means of facilities interconnected directly or indirectly between the point of delivery of such energy to such purchaser and the State line. Provided further, That transmission of electric energy from the lines of one person to those of another in pursuance of a contract or arrangement between such persons for emergency service, or in pursuance of a contract or arrangement for an exchange of electric energy, according to the terms of which settlement for any variation in delivery is made upon the basis of the cost of production or of purchase of such energy, or a division of the savings resulting from such exchange, or because of a slop-over of electric energy between connecting lines or systems, shall not be held to be transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce."

SEC. 3. Subsection (d) of said section 201 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The term 'sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce' when used in this part means a sale of electric energy in the course of the transmission of such energy in interstate commerce as defined in subsection (c) hereof, to any person for resale."

SEC. 4. Subsection (e) of said section 201 is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The term 'public utility' when used in this part or in the part next following means any person who owns or operates facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this part: Provided, That a person who ceases to be a public utility by reason either of cessation of ownership or operation of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or any amendment of this act shall not thereafter be subject, by reason of such person formerly having been a public utility to any provision of this act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission except orders under section 205 (e) and section 206 (a) with respect to rates or refunds applicable while such person was a public utility."

SEC. 5. Subsection (f) of said section 201 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) No provision in this part shall apply to, or be deemed to include, the United States, a State of any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any corporation which is wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by any one or more of the foregoing (hereinafter in this subsection (f) called a governmental agency) or any officer, agent, or employee of any of the foregoing acting as such in the course of his official duty, unless such provision makes specific reference thereto. Any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy through facilities located wholly within one State and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission may make a temporary or permanent connection within the State in which such person conducts its operations with facilities owned and operated by a governmental agency, and such person shall not become subject to any provision of this act by reason of such connection, even though the electric energy received or delivered by such person through such connection has been or is to be transmitted across a State line by such governmental agency."

SEC. 6. Said section 201 is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(g) 'Emergency' as used in this section shall be deemed to mean failure or inadequacy of facilities for the generation or transmission of electric energy caused by break-down, weather conditions, acts of God, or other unforeseen occurrences, not reasonably within the power of the utility affected to prevent, resulting in the cutting off or curtailment of electric services, or rendering such utility unable to provide adequate services for its customers.

"(h) 'Emergency' shall be deemed to 'slop over' within the meaning of this section when it passes over the lines of one person to those of another in consequence of a sudden increase or decrease in load during the momentary period when such change causes the systems of the two utilities to be out of balance.

"(i) It is hereby declared to be in the public interest that the business of generating, transmitting, and selling electric energy, for ultimate public consumption, shall be subject to public regulation; and to the extent that such business is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this act the same is declared to be local in character, and shall be subject to regulation by State authority."

SEC. 7. In order to encourage the establishment of new interconnections and the strengthening and increased utilization of existing interconnections, section 202 of the Federal Power Act is amended by adding a new subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(f) Any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission may construct or utilize new interconnections, or utilize existing interconnections with any other person, whether or not subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and shall not by reason of the construction or use of such interconnections become subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under any provision of the Federal Power Act if the two following conditions are satisfied: (1) The electric energy passing over the interconnection must not during any calendar year exceed in aggregate amount five (5) percent of the gross annual generation and purchase of kilowatt hours of electric energy of both persons thus interconnected; and (2) any contract or arrangement for the exchange, purchase or sale of electric energy passing over the interconnection must specifically provide for interruption of deliveries at any time in the discretion of the person supplying or receiving the energy. No person, engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall become subject to its jurisdiction by reason of receipt or transmission of electric energy, directly or indirectly, which passes over an interconnection between other persons under circumstances which as to them satisfied the conditions of exemption. This subsection is not intended to remove the business of generating, transmitting and selling of electric energy, for ultimate public consumption, from public regulation; to the extent that such business is removed from the jurisdiction of the Commission by this subsection, the same is declared to be local in character and shall be subject to regulation by State authority.

DESCRIPTION

This bill amends the jurisdictional provisions of part II of the Federal Power Act relating to interstate sales and transmission of electric energy and the hydroelectric licensing requirements of part I. It clarifies and delimits the authority of the Federal Power Commission (FPC). It is based in the main on H. R. 2972 and 2973 introduced in the House of Representatives on April 7, 1947, by Mr. MILLER of Connecticut and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Twenty-six witnesses testified on June 23, 24, and 26 in support of H. R. 2972 and 2973 at hearings before a subcommittee composed of Representatives HALL, chairman (New York), HESELTON (Massachusetts), MILLER (Connecticut), HARRIS (Arkansas), and SADOWSKI (Michigan). Representatives WOLVERTON (New Jersey), chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and LEA (California) also sat during portions of the sessions. These witnesses included State officials, manufacturers, and public utility operating officials, including residents of the States of Connecticut, Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The bills were endorsed by the National Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners (NARUC), both at the hearings and at the NARUC annual meeting held in Boston on July 14–17. The only opponents consisted of the members and employees of the Federal Power Commission, who were heard on July 2, 10, 11, and 21. No member of the public felt it necessary to appear in opposition.

GENERAL PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF THE BILL

The bill should result in the accomplishment of badly needed reforms in the administration of the Federal Power Act, which has been fraught with dissensions between the Federal Power Commission and the State commissions and the Federal Power Commission and the electric and manufacturing industries. It is imperative that Congress now review the legislation it passed in 1935, which has remained unreviewed and unchanged since 1935.

The general objective of this proposed legislation is to define more accurately the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission and to limit such jurisdiction to that field of regulation in which there can be no effective State regulation. It seeks to avoid duplication of Federal and State regulation over the same subject matter and interference by Federal regulation with State regulation.

The underlying purpose of the bill is to eliminate duplication of regulation. If a public utility is subject to State regulation no Federal regulation is necessary. Since in the administration of the Federal Power Act there have been examples of duplication of regulation, this bill is offered to eliminate such duplication. Utilities cannot be subject to two masters and operate efficiently in the public interest. The proponents of the 1935 amendments to the Federal Power Act recognized this and in supporting them before Congress unequivocably declared them to be complementary to, and not in substitution of, State laws. The technique of the FPC in administering the act has resulted in duplication of regulation. This offends the purpose of the law and the congressional wish.

In general, the objective of the amendments proposed by part I of the bill is to recognize the interests and rights of the States in the development of their watersheds and water resources and their interests and rights in water utilization and control.

The bill does not attempt to eliminate supervision by the Federal Government in the fields of flood control, reclamation, navigation, and other national purposes nor to restrict the authority of the Federal Power Commission over public lands, reservations of the United States, or Government dams, nor does it surrender to utility companies water rights in which the Nation has an interest.

Specifically, the bill proposes:

1. To limit the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission over navigable waters to those waters on which, at the time of the inquiry, actual transportation of persons or property takes place in interstate or foreign commerce, or could take place by then proposed congressional improvements which are practicable and economical.

2. To restore to the States the control of waters which are not useful in interstate commerce and in which the Federal Government has no real interest justifying Federal Power Commission interference.

3. To provide that no Federal Power Commission licenses are necessary for the continued maintenance of existing projects on navigable waters lawfully authorized prior to June 10, 1920, by either Federal, Territorial, or State authority, or prior to August 26, 1935, in the case of projects on nonnavigable waters.

4. To require licenses (limited to protecting the navigable capacity of "navigable waters") for projects on nonnavigable waters only if the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected or if public lands or reservations are involved.

5. To authorize the Commission to issue limited licenses even though they may not be required and to cancel licenses for projects no longer requiring them.

6. To provide that the Commission waive all but certain conditions in cases of installed projects of less than 2,000 horsepower installed capacity. This will result in small manufacturing concerns not being required to take out a conventional standard Federal Power Commission license.

7. To require licenses to be for 50 years from date of issue rather than from 1920.

In general, the amendments proposed by part II of the bill amend the Federal Power Act so as to prevent the Federal Power Commission from exercising jurisdiction over intrastate electric utility companies subject to State regulation. The bill does not have as its objective the elimination of Federal Power Commission jurisdiction over companies having facilities which cross State lines. Nor does the bill propose to exempt any company from full and complete regulation by either State or Federal authority.

Specifically, the bill proposes to amend the Federal Power Act so that the Federal Power Commission shall not have jurisdiction over a company because:

1. Such a company, which owns no facilities crossing a State boundary, receives on its system energy from outside the State in which it operates if it is engaged in local distribution within such State, and all such energy is consumed entirely within its State.

2. Such a company, which owns no facilities crossing a State boundary, transmits or sells energy consumed outside its State if such energy is sold or transmitted to a company engaged in local distribution and the principal purpose of such sale or transmission is not the transmission of such energy cutside the State.

3. Such a company transmits or sells energy generated or consumed outside its State if such transmission or sale is pursuant to a contract for emergency service or for the exchange of energy at cost, or such transmission or sale is because of a slop-over of energy.

4. Such a company was once engaged in the sale or transmission of energy in interstate commerce, but is no longer engaged in such sale or transmission.

5. Such a company buys from, sells to, or transmits to or from a governmental agency energy which may have been transmitted across a State line.

6. Such a company maintains, within limits, interstate interconnections primarily for the purpose of strengthening the Nation's defense and improving the Nation's peacetime economy.

Following is a typical set of situations which amendments proposed by part I of the bill seek to cure.

(a) The assertion by the Federal Power Commission of jurisdiction over every stream in the country: The extent to which the Federal Power Commission asserts jurisdiction over dams or projects in, along, or upon streams is well illustrated by an examination of the facts in any of several cases involving the necessity of companies taking out licenses for projects on streams which are not used or suitable for use in their present condition for the conduct of interstate commerce. For example, a river having been used for transportation in interstate commerce many years ago will remain a navigable river of the United States within the meaning and subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission even though it is no longer used. This doctrine of "once navigable, always navigable" has been successfully maintained by the Federal Power Commission in cases brought against companies to require them to obtain a license from the Commission. In determining whether a river is navigable the Federal Power Commission is perfectly willing to apply standards of commerce in use more than a hundred years ago and to find that a river is navigable even though such standards of commerce are no longer used; for example, such things as the floating of logs, the navigation of streams by Indians and early settlers, the use of lateral floating ferries, the use of floating rafts, and such other methods of transportation no longer in modern use. Evidence of this kind was offered in the New River case and in the following cases: In the Matter of Bellows Falls Hydro-Electric Corp. and Connecticut River Power Co., Federal Power Commission Docket IT-5584; Pennsylvania Water & Power Co. v. Federal Power Commission (123 Fed. 2d, 155); Wisconsin Public Service Corp. v. Federal Power Commission (147 Fed. 2d, 743); Georgia Power Co. v. Federal Power Commission (152 2d, 908). The committee perhaps points out parenthetically that the objections to this type of evidence on which the Commission has based its jurisdiction does not come only from the particular company in question over which the Federal Power Commission is trying to assert its jurisdiction. For example, in the New River case, a large majority of the States of the Union appeared for the purpose of contending that the order involved constituted an unlawful invasion of the right of the State of Virginia to regulate the use, level, and flow of a nonnavigable stream in that State. Likewise, in the Wisconsin Public Service Corp. case, both the State of Wisconsin and its public service commission intervened in the proceeding before the Federal Power Commission for the purpose of contending that the Wisconsin River, at the point where the proposed dam was being reconstructed and for many miles above and below this point, was not "navigable waters" within the definition of that term as defined in the Federal Power Act.

Here is what Justice Roberts of the United States Supreme Court thought of the criterion used by the Federal Power Commission in determining whether a stream is navigable:

"If this test be adopted, then every creek in every State of the Union which has enough water, when conserved by dams and locks or channeled by wing dams and sluices, to float a boat drawing 2 feet of water may be pronounced navigable, because by the expenditure of some enormous sum such a project would be possible of execution. In other words, Congress can create navigability by determining to improve a nonnavigable stream.

"If this criterion be the correct one, it is not seen how any stream can be found not to be navigable nor is it seen why this Court and other Federal courts have been at pains for many years to apply the other tests mentioned when the simple solution of the problem in each case would have been to speculate as to whether, at 'reasonable' cost, the United States could render a most difficult and forbidding mountain torrent suitable for the least pretentious form of water traffic. In the light of the Court's opinion, if this test be applied to the New River, it must, of course, be admitted that by blasting out channels through reefs and shoals, by digging canals around falls and rapids, and possibly by dams and locks, the New River could be rendered fit for some sort of commercial use. What the expense would be no one knows. Obviously it would be enormous. Congress in the past has undertaken to render the river navigable and decades ago gave up the attempt. Still we are told that, at 'reasonable' cost, the thing can be done, and so the stream is navigable."

(b) Assertions by the Federal Power Commission that a project on a navigable river built pursuant to State authority prior to 1920, and built on a nonnavigable river pursuant to State authority prior to 1935, is illegal and must be licensed. In four cases brought by the Federal Power Commission against persons operating hydroelectric developments in navigable streams, as that term is now so loosely construed by the Commission, the Commission successfully contended that in passing the Federal Power Act Congress did not intend to exempt from the provisions of part I of the act the rightful occupation, prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to State law of any navigable waters of the United States. Wisconsin Public Service Corp. v. Federal Power Commission (147 Fed. 2d 743; 325 U. S. 880); Niagara Falls Co. v. Federal Power Commission (137 Fed. 2d 737; 320 U. S. 792, 815); Pennsylvania Water & Power Co. v. Federal Power Commission (123 Fed. 2d 125; 315 U. S. 806). In the Matter of Bellows Falls Hydroelectric Corp. and Connecticut River Power Co., Federal Power Commission, Docket No. IT-5584.

The Commission, for example, has recently asserted jurisdiction over the Windsor Locks Canal Co., which owns and operates a dam and canal at Windsor Locks, Conn. The authority to erect this dam can be traced to May 1824, when the predecessor of the Windsor Locks Canal Co., the Connecticut River Co., received a charter from the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut which authorized it to lock the falls at Enfield, Conn., on the Connecticut River, and to construct a canal on either bank of the river near the falls and to construct a dam. From available records, this dam and canal was completed around 1830. In 1845, when a railroad line was constructed from Hartford to Springfield, Mass., the business of the Connecticut River Co. was seriously affected and about this time the company began to lease land and water to various manufacturing industries which were then being established in Windsor Locks. The business of the Company from that time to date has consisted principally of the sale or lease of water to these industries. However, despite the fact that the Windsor Locks Canal Co. has been operating under valid State authority for more than a century, the Federal Power Commission has claimed that it is doing so unlawfully because it is not doing so pursuant to a license from the Commission. It is the position of the Commission that the existence of any form of State authority does not obviate the requirement of a Federal license.

(c) The assertion by the Federal Power Commission that a manufacturer on a navigable river must take out the same kind of a license that a public utility would be required to take out: In June of 1946 the Federal Power Commission addressed letters to five manufacturing companies stating in effect that at Windsor Locks, Conn., they were unlawfully operating hydroelectric plants without Federal authority and demanded that they take out licenses from the Federal Power Commission.

Each of these companies lease or purchase water from the Windsor Locks Canal Co. Two of these companies are manufacturers of paper, one is a manufacturer of sweaters, underwear, and yarns, one is a manufacturer of chucks, and one is a manufacturer of casters and handling equipment. All of these companies use the water which they lease or purchase from the canal company for manufacturing processes and purposes. In addition, these companies use a portion of the water to turn mechanically certain machinery and also to generate a small amount of electric energy for lighting or power purposes in their plants. The amount of electricity is small and none of it is sold by any of these companies to anyone else. In fact, the total generating capacity of all of these companies from the water purchased is approximately 1,100 horsepower. Each of these companies is a small manufacturing concern of the family ownership type, some of whom have been in business at their present location for more than 100 years.

In general, a license means just this. It means that a manufacturer who has been operating his business lawfully for some years must file an elaborate application form with the Federal Power Commission, which incidentally is not adapted to a manufacturer, since to allocate account-wise for the receipts from the use of the water power appears to be an impossible task. Representatives of the Commission then may visit his plant, make an audit of his accounts, examine and analyze his books, cost records, engineering reports, and other records pertaining to his application for a license. If a license is granted it is granted subject to conditions established by the Commission. For example, some of these conditions require that his accounts be regulated by the Commission, principally through a requirement that reserves be maintained, according to the rules of the Commission, for depreciation, repairs, etc., and for the amortization of the cost of his investment. An annual charge is levied, and finally, at the end of the license period, the Federal Government can appropriate his project, whether it is located in the State of Connecticut or any other State, not by paying the fair value thereof but by paying what the Commission chooses to call his net investment in the project, which is the original cost thereof less certain deductions. If this net investment is lower than the fair value of the project at the time of its acquisition by the Federal Government, this is just too bad for the licensee. Of course, all during the license period the licensee must battle with the usual reports and red tape which surround the administration of this particular Federal agency. For example, recently the staff of the Commission proposed rule 105 which would have required companies operating projects of more than 100-horsepower capacity to set aside all earnings above a fair return upon the net investment of the property, which earnings would have been used to reduce the original cost of the projects and thus reduce the net investment in them and thus reduce the amount the Government would pay to the owner when it recaptured these plants at the end of the license period. The Commission rejected the rule, but the mere fact of its promotion indicates the nature of the Commission's views. If the Commission can in 1970, which is the time most of the licenses granted by the Commission expire because of its policy of issuing them from 1920, obtain all these licensed projects the groundwork is beautifully laid for the nationalization of the power business; these properties can be picked up on bargain terms.

(d) The assertion of the Commission that any activity on a nonnavigable river affects navigable rivers: In most of the cases brought before the Federal Power Commission to require a license of a project on a nonnavigable stream the Commission has been willing to rely on evidence that actions on the nonnavigable tributary affect the main navigable river into which the tributary flowed, even though it could not be shown with any certainty that there was such an effect.

The following are specific cases which amendments proposed by part II of the bill seek to cure.

(a) The issuance to a utility of an order by the FPC which contradicts an order issued to it by the local commission: For example, Jersey Central Power & Light Company case (319 U. S. 61), wherein the Public Service Commission issued an order authorizing the company to issue securities and the Federal Power Commission issued an order forbidding the issuing of securities; Connecticut Power case wherein the Connecticut commission ordered one method of operation and the Federal Power Commission ordered another, the FPC withdrawing their order, only after insistence by the Connecticut commission.

(b) Keeping of duplicate sets of accounts: For example, some State commissions require accounting treatment on certain matters to be handled in one way, which is diametrically opposed to the system proposed by the uniform system of accounts promulgated by the Federal Power Commission.

(c) The supervision of two regulatory bodies: For example, the necessity of obtaining both State and Federal permission to effect an interconnection, disposition of property, purchase of securities, consolidations, etc.

(d) The subjection to Federal regulation of predominantly State companies: For example, the Connecticut Light & Power Co. case in which the Commission sought to impose its jurisdiction over the entire company because one-fifth of 1 percent of all the energy received and generated by the company throughout the State was transmitted out of the State. This despite the fact that this was a public service company of Connecticut, owning no lines crossing the Connecticut boundary, connected with no company at the boundary, doing no business other than Connecticut services, and whose purchases and sales of energy, receipts, and deliveries of power were all within Connecticut, and whose rates and fiscal accounting affairs were fully and effectively regulated by the State of Connecticut.

The United States Supreme Court said in this case that the Federal Power Commission under the law might assert this claim of jurisdiction, since when Congress passed the act it did not condition "the jurisdiction of the Commission upon any particular volume or proportion of interstate energy involved. * * * If it (Congress) thinks the Commission is overextending its attention to trivial situations it has ready means of control in its hands." It is apparent that the Federal Power Commission takes the attitude that the tail should wag the dog, and has wasted and continues to waste taxpayers' money by attention to trivia.

Although the Supreme Court in the Connecticut Light & Power case overruled the contentions of the Federal Power Commission as to the meaning of the Federal Power Act, the Commission still is unwilling to accept the opinion and to be guided by it in its subsequent administration of the act. It was 2 years, 2 months, and 2 days after the decision of the Supreme Court before the Federal Power Commission gave out its decision in which it in effect said that although it did have jurisdiction over the Connecticut company, it would dismiss the case brought by it against the company because of the company's expressed intention of discontinuing the use of certain facilities, the use of which the Commission had claimed subjected it to the jurisdiction of the FPC.

The Hartford Electric Light Co. case: In this case the Hartford Electric Light Co., completely regulated by the State commission, sold energy generated at the wall of its generating plant to a company which transmitted some of the energy to another State where it was consumed. Aside from facilities admittedly used only in local distribution within the State of Connecticut, the Hartford company owned no facilities whatsoever outside its generating plant. The Federal Power Act expressly excludes companies owning property used for the generation of electric energy. Based upon this exemption the light company challenged the jurisdiction of the FPC. The FPC paid no attention to this defense, holding that the facilities within the generating station between the generators and the wall of the station were facilities for transmission of electric energy and that the company's contracts and its books of account were facilities for sale of electric energy, and hence it had jurisdiction over the company.

Safe Harbor Corp. case: In this case the Commission stepped in to regulate the rates of the Safe Harbor Corp. on the grounds that the States had not taken any action to regulate the rates, although the Federal Power Act clearly states that the States should regulate such rates unless the Commissions of two States cannot agree. There was no evidence presented in this case that the Maryland commission and the Pennsylvania commission could not agree. Under the Commission's ruling in that case however, without any evidence from anybody or any claim from anybody that the States cannot agree, the Commission may step into a State and say, "The rates applicable to this power are claimed to be unreasonable. They have been in effect long enough so that the State commissions might have regulated them. We think they ought to be regulated; therefore, we will regulate them."

(e) Connecticut Valley Power Exchange: Here certain Connecticut companies and Massachusetts companies wished to interconnect with each other to exchange surplus power so that the lowest available increment cost could be used to supply the combined load. Any party to the exchange generating energy was credited with the increment cost. The part which received the energy was charged with the cost it would have incurred if it had generated such energy. The savings of the exchange were divided equally between the members. All arrangements were voluntary and subject to regulation by the Connecticut commission. However, to continue this arrangement would have subjected all the companies to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. There are many similar arrangements for exchanges throughout the country which could operate for the benefit of the consumer if it were not for their fear of assertion by FPC of its jurisdiction over such exchanges.

(f) Emergency exchanges: During the last war intrastate companies in one State wished to connect with intrastate companies in other States to relieve power shortages occasioned by peak-load demands. To interconnect and furnish service in such emergencies would have subjected such intrastate companies to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. Application was sought from the FPC for authority to prosecute this war effort without any of the companies becoming subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. After months of delay in most cases such permission was grudgingly granted in technical orders.

(g) Involuntary exchanges of energy: In the Jersey Central case it appeared that one company in New Jersey was connected to a company in New York, which connection was maintained primarily to guard the New York company's distribution against breakdown. The connection was used only a few times a year and was maintained simply to avoid a delay of transmission in an emergency. Because the connection was actually maintained, at times energy involuntarily flowed across the connection as a result of the lines being maintained in balance. This energy is called "slop over" energy. It is not subject to sale. The Commission was willing to use the presence of this slop-over energy of these companies as one basis for a claim for jurisdiction over the Jersey Central Co., which was connected through another company to the particular Jersey company referred to.

(h) Rewriting of accounts: In the Connecticut Light & Power Co. case the Commission took the position that the company should rewrite its accounts for several years prior to the year in which the hearing had been held, even though it was admitted by it that at the time of the hearing, because of changes in connections, the company might no longer be a public utility and subject to FPC jurisdiction. Even though such accounts would be of no use once rewritten, and even though such rewriting would involve enormous expense, and even though such rewriting was not in accordance with the Connecticut commission's rules of accounting, the FPC took the position that as a punishment the rewriting should be ordered.

(i) Government connections: Energy is available at many Government projects which can be disposed of to the benefit of the taxpayers only if transmitted and sold by a public utility. Such connection may involve the utility in the toils of the Federal Power Commission. When a Government agency asks private industry to do something, such private industry should not by acceding subject itself to the jurisdiction of another agency.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION TO CLARIFY JURISDICTION

Your committee finds that the administration of the act has since 1935 been characterized by litigation and dissension between the Federal Power Commission and the electric industry. Your committee believes that the prime cause of this has been the attempt on the part of the Commission to so construe the act that it results in the Commission grasping jurisdiction over companies that are engaged in intrastate activities and completely subject in their operation to adequate State control and regulation. Such a result was never intended by Congress either in 1920 or in 1935 when the act was first passed and last amended as can be seen by an examination of the legislative history of the act and the language of the act.

This bill deals with one of those situations in which there is concurrent Federal and State jurisdiction under our dual system of government and with respect to which the periphery of Federal jurisdiction occupies a substantial twilight zone. While Federal jurisdiction is supreme, the Congress, in dealing with such situations, has consistently avoided (1) interference with State authority which was not required by important Federal interests, and (2) unnecessarily pressing Federal authority to the utmost reach of its constitutional limits.

The Federal Power Commission recognizes that the question of what jurisdiction is to be given to the Federal Power Commission is purely a matter of congressional policy. A clarification of the jurisdiction of that agency will not result in the slightest diminution in the constitutional powers of the Federal Government insofar as other phases of governmental activity are concerned.

Extreme and forced construction has extended the Power Act far beyond the intent of Congress, and the bill will merely restore the balance between Federal and State control intended by Congress. After the establishment of a five-man Commission in 1930, effort has gradually been made greatly to extend the jurisdiction and power of the Commission by extreme and tenuous construction of the act. However, the balance between Federal and State control over water resources of the States which the Congress has embodied in the act was not seriously disturbed until the decision in United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co. (311 U. S. 377). Although professing otherwise, the Court in that decision overturned the long-settled constitutional definition of navigable waters which had been consistently followed by the Supreme Court and the Congress and adopted a new definition under which practically all water resources of the States would be brought exclusively under Federal control.

The result of the foregoing has been wholly to destroy the balance established by Congress; and the pending bill will do nothing more than restore that balance in accordance with the plain congressional intent when the Federal Water Power Act was enacted.

In passing this bill, the Congress would merely be exercising a fraction of this policy-making power to which the Court refers in the Economy Light & Power case, that is, Congress in passing this bill would not abandon control over any waters, but would merely leave those not presently or prospectively useful in interstate commerce to State control, unless and until Congress should ever find it necessary to have Federal control.

Unless corrected, this imbalance will be further accentuated, for the Federal Power Commission is progressively asserting all-inclusive and exclusive jurisdiction over substantially all water resources of the States. The representatives of the Commission have frankly stated to this committee that the Commission asserts such jurisdiction over all streams which are technically navigable at law under the greatly expanded definition of the New River case and over all nonnavigable streams which may affect navigable waters into which they ultimately flow. Naturally, in response to inquiries from members of this committee, such representatives have not been able to identify any stream or category of streams over which the Commission does not claim jurisdiction (Tr., 987-9; 993-5). The Commission asserts jurisdiction over projects on nonnavigable streams even though their effect, if any, upon navigable waters is wholly beneficial. Georgia Power Co. v. F. P. C. (152 F. (2d) 908, 913). Manifestly, this goes far beyond the intention of Congress in 1920 and, more importantly, far beyond sound public policy.

THE INTENTION OF CONGRESS IN 1920

The history of the adoption of the present definition in 1920 demonstrates conclusively that Congress intended to give the Commission authority only with respect to waters in which the Federal Government has a legitimate interest in the development of navigation. At the time the Federal Water Power Act was adopted in 1920 Congress believed, and the court decisions held, that the authority of Congress with reference to waterways under the commerce clause was limited to the protection and development of navigation. This is abundantly evident both from the history of the congressional proceedings and the statements in the Commission's report on H. R. 2973. The debates from 1918 to 1920 are replete with statements that the only jurisdiction Congress had with respect to waters was limited to the development of navigation.

The following references will suffice for present purposes: Volume 56, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 9038, 9758; volume 59, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 1100, 1104, 7723. If any additional proof were needed that Congress intended to limit the power of the Federal Power Commission, it is found in the fact that in 1918 the House struck from the bill a definition of "navigable waters," which defined them as streams over which Congress had jurisdiction under the commerce clause, for fear that it might be construed too broadly (vol. 56, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 9761); every definition proposed thereafter, including the one finally adopted, contained restrictions designed to eliminate from navigable waters the upper nonnavigable portions of streams.

The amendments passed in 1935 did not change this congressional intention with respect to the amendments proposed to part I of the act.

It will be remembered that in 1935 the Federal Water Power Act was amended by the passage of Senate bill 2796, title I of which provided for the control and limitation of public utility holding companies operating in interstate commerce and title II of which provided for the regulation of the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, for the amendment of the Federal Water Power Act and for other purposes.

In the Senate and House reports (No. 621 Senate and No. 1318 House) the bill was called and continually referred to as Public Utility Act of 1935. Title II of the bill is termed in the House report thereon "Amendments to Federal Water Power Act; Regulation of Interstate Electric Utility Companies." In both the Senate and House reports of the bill it is apparent that the problems involved were those pertaining to interstate public utilities.

Dealing specifically with title II of the bill the House report (p. 7) is as follows:

"Title II of the bill makes certain amendments to the present Federal Water Power Act and establishes for the first time regulation of electric utility companies transmitting energy in interstate commerce. The amendments to the Water Power Act appear at the beginning of the title. The present Water Power Act is made part I of the amended Federal Power Act. Two new parts are then added: Part II consisting of the substantive provisions for the regulation of interstate operating companies, and part III containing the general provisions applicable to both licenses under part I, and interstate utilities under part II."

It is obvious that when in 1935 Congress was considering Senate bill 2796 and its predecessor Senate bill 1725 it was considering a bill dealing with public utilities engaged in the sale or transmission in interstate commerce of electric energy. It was not considering a bill dealing with manufacturing companies who might generate hydroelectric energy for their own use. Nor as will be pointed out later was it considering a bill that concerned public utilities who might generate hydroelectric energy for sale within the State of generation.

Mr. DeVane, counsel for the Federal Power Commission, in making a statement to the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, with respect to those portions of title II of the Federal Utility Act which amended certain sections of the Federal Water Power Act, spoke as follows:

"Title I of this bill relates exclusively to holding companies and both title II and title III relate to the operating companies in the electric field" (p. 224).

"These amendments are perhaps I might say self-explanatory; they are the result of the experience of the Federal Power Commission in the administration of the act" (p. 232).

"It is all one subject. They all relate to the electrical industry. It, title I of the bill, deals with the holding companies' side of the bill and the second title II deals with operating companies.

"Now in that connection we should like to say that among the operating companies are those companies that now have licenses from the Federal Power Commission under the Federal Water Power Act. There are certain amendments that should be made to that act. When you begin to deal with holding companies on the one side and with operating companies on the other, and you have as part of these operating companies licensees under the Federal Water Power Act, it appeared obvious that the time to take care of the necessary amendments to the Federal Water Power Act was the same time" (pp. 233-234).

"The proposed amendments to the present provisions of the Water Power Act are all minor and are designed to meet situations which have arisen in the course of its administration." (Memorandum appearing on p. 235.)

Similar statements made by Mr. DeVane may be found in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on H. R. 5423. (See pt. I of hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, pp. 449-496.)

Likewise, in the statement of Commissioner McNinch, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, on page 383 appears the following:

"These amendments are suggested out of the experience of the Commission in its administration of the Federal Water Power Act and because of the character of these amendments, being as I have said primarily for the purpose of clarifying the act at various places, it is thought that you may not want any extended discussion of those particular amendments."

Likewise, your committee finds that the amendments to part II of the bill simply reiterate what the language and history of the 1935 amendments to the act manifest was the congressional limits on the jurisdiction of this Federal agency.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF PUBLIC UTILITY ACT OF 1935

Certainly such duplication of regulation between State and Federal agencies was never intended by Congress when it passed the amendments to the Federal Power Act in 1935. The Federal Power Act in section 201 (a) declares a congressional policy concerning the business of transmitting and selling electric energy for ultimate distribution to the public and states that regulation of "that part of such business which consists of the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce is necessary in the public interest, such Federal regulation, however, to extend only to those matters which are not subject to regulation by the States."

The debates in Congress and the reports of the congressional committees likewise show that it was the intention of Congress simply to enact legislation which would merely fill the gap in the regulation of public utilities. Such legislation was simply to be complementary to State regulation without encroaching upon it or upon the sovereign powers of the State.

The original bill amending the Federal Power Act was drafted by the counsel and aides of the Federal Power Commission. In its support Commissioner Seavey of the Federal Power Commission said to the House committee, "The new title II of the act is designed to secure coordination on a regional scale of the Nation's power resources and to fill the gap in the present State regulation of electric utilities. It is conceived entirely as a supplement to, and not as a substitution for State regulation." (Hearings on H. R. 5423, House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, 74th Cong., 1st sess., 384.) Progress of the bill through various stages showed a constant purpose to protect rather than to supervise authority of the States. In reporting a revised bill to the Senate the Committee on Interstate Commerce said, "Subsection (a) * * * declares the policy of Congress to extend that regulation to those matters which cannot be regulated by the States and to assist the States in the exercise of their regulatory powers, but not to impair or diminish the powers of any State commission." (Senate Rept. No. 621, 74th Cong., 1st sess.) The report of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in presenting the amended bill called attention to the Attleboro case and expressed the purpose to give Federal jurisdiction to regulate rates of wholesale transactions, but not to give jurisdiction over local rates. It said:

"The bill takes no authority from State commissions and contains provisions authorizing the Federal Commission to aid the State commissions in their efforts to ascertain and fix reasonable charges. * * * The new parts are so drawn as to be a complement to and in no sense a usurpation of State regulatory authority and contain throughout directions to the Federal Power Commission to receive and consider the views of State commissions. Probably no bill in recent years has so recognized the responsibilities of State regulatory commissions as does title II of this bill."

* * * * *

"Subsection (b) (201) confers jurisdiction upon the Commission over the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, but does not apply to any other sale of electric energy or deprive a State of any lawful authority now exercised over the exportation of hydroelectric energy transmitted out of the State. As in the Senate bill no jurisdiction is given over local distribution of electric energy, and the authority of States to fix local rates is not disturbed even in those cases where the energy is brought in from another State." (H. R. Rept. No. 1318, 74th Cong., 1st sess., 7, 8, 27.)

Senator Wheeler in the Senate committee report on the Senate substitute for S. 2796, spoke as follows:

"The revision has also removed every encroachment upon the authority of the State. The revised bill imposes Federal regulation only over those matters which cannot be effectively controlled by the State. The limitation on the Federal Power Commission's jurisdiction in this regard has been inserted in each section in an effort to prevent the expansion of Federal authority over State matters."

These restrictions on the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission to which the Senator referred were made more positive in the further House substitute bill which subsequently became law without substantial changes.

Notwithstanding that this was the intention on the part of Congress, as is clearly shown by the express language of the act and by the debates in the Senate and the House and committee reports, the Federal Power Commission has construed the Federal Power Act so as to give the Commission a great deal of jurisdiction overlapping that of the State commissions and to give it jurisdiction over many companies operating wholly in one State, doing an essentially local business and subject to complete State commission regulation.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

Section 1: Section 1 amends section 3 (8) of the Federal Power Act. Section 3 of title I of the Federal Power Act, approved June 10, 1920, and last amended August 26, 1935, contains the definitions of the act. The one definition which the bill seeks to amend is the definition of "navigable waters" contained in subsection (8) of section 3 of the act. The definition of navigable waters has been amended in the following particulars:

(a) The present definition includes in "navigable waters" waters which either in their natural or improved condition and notwithstanding interruption in the navigable parts by falls, shallows, or rapids are used or are suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate commerce. The proposed amendment limits the present definition by: (1) requiring that the navigability of a stream be determined at the time of the inquiry as to its navigability and not at some period in the past or not at some indefinite period in the future; (2) requiring that the waters in question be generally and commonly used or have a reasonable probability of being so used rather than being waters which are used or could be made suitable for use; (3) requiring that their use in interstate commerce be of a substantial character by boat; (4) requiring that the use be of waters in their natural condition or in an improved condition which improvement is then proposed rather than in some improved condition which in the future might possibly be proposed or made; (5) requiring that any proposed improvements to make waters navigable cost an amount commensurate with the commercial benefits to be derived from the proposed improvements rather than having no economic yardstick for the cost of improvements; (6) eliminating from navigable waters those parts of streams which someone has recommended to Congress should be improved but which Congress has not in fact authorized for improvement; (7) requiring that congressional authorization for improvement of a stream be an authorization (not over 3 years old, or the appropriation for which is still extant) to improve the stream for the purpose of furthering navigation in interstate commerce on the stream before such stream can be considered navigable, rather than an authorized improvement which has no relation to navigation.

In the opinion of the committee these amendments result in a more reasonable definition of "navigable waters" than that contained in the present act, and one which will be adequate to prevent private encroachment on the actual needs of commercial navigation on the waters subject to the jurisdiction of Congress and yet at the same time one which will prevent the extension of Federal regulation over persons developing electric power along any stream when such regulation has no substantial relation to the regulation of navigation in interstate commerce. The regulation of the development of hydroelectric power is properly a matter subject to State jurisdiction, except in those cases where such development directly interferes with existing interstate commerce of a substantial character or potential interstate commerce which could be developed on the waters in question through an expenditure of funds which would be commensurate with the commercial benefits to be derived therefrom.

Section 2: This amends section 4 (g) of the present act by limiting the right of the Commission to issue orders "within its jurisdiction under section 23 (b) of this act." It is simply a formal amendment which makes the present section 4 (g) of the act dealing with the investigating authority of the Commission conform to the scope of the amendment proposed by section 6 of the bill.

Section 3: This section amends section 6 of the act to make sure that all licenses issued under the act are issued for a period of 50 years from their date of issuance except in those cases where the applicant and the Commission agree to a shorter period. During the hearings it became apparent that the Commission had adopted a policy of issuing licenses for a period of 50 years from June 10, 1920, the date of approval of the Federal Water Power Act, on all projects constructed prior to June 10, 1920.

In the language of the act there is nothing which would justify the policy of the Commission in issuing licenses for a period shorter than 50 years, and to insure uniform treatment of all licensees, this amendment is offered.

Section 4: This section amends section 10 (1) of the act to require that the Commission waive the conditions of a license (except conditions dealing with maintenance and liability for damage) in cases of projects of not more than 2,000 horsepower or projects occupying less than 15 percent of public lands. The amendment will relieve the Commission of the administrative burdens of dealing with small projects.

Section 5: This section amends subsection (a) of section 3 of the act in three particulars. Subsection (a) at present deals with the protection of existing rights, provides for permissive application for licenses under the act and deals with valuations of constructed objects. The proposed amendments to this subsection are concerned only with the provisions concerning the protection of existing rights.

The present subsection (a) of section 23 provides that the provisions of part I of the act shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right-of-way heretofore granted or as confirming or otherwise affecting any claim or authority heretofore given pursuant to law. The phrase heretofore granted is vague and is stricken out. Supposedly it means granted prior to June 10, 1920, the date of the approval of "The Federal Water Power Act," and so this subsection is amended to state specifically that the provisions of part I shall not affect any permit, valid existing right-of-way, right to construct, claim or authority granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920. The present subsection (a) protects any such rights "given pursuant to law." Here again the term is not only vague but ambiguous and so the act is specifically amended to make it clear that any rights granted or existing prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to applicable State, Territorial, or Federal law will not be affected. Lastly this subsection is amended to make it clear that if pursuant to any State, Territorial, or Federal law, a person has prior to June 10, 1920, constructed any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, or other works incidental thereto, the provisions of part I of the act are not applicable thereto.

Section 6: Section 6 amends subsection (b) of section 23 of the present act in the following particulars:

Since section 1 of the bill defines "navigable waters" reference to this fact is made in this section by striking out in the fourth line after the words "navigable waters" the words "of the United States" and inserting "as herein defined." This amendment is purely formal. In the seventh line of subsection (b) in the phrase talking about the utilization of surplus water power at any Government dam the word "from" is substituted for the word "at" in front of the phrase "any Government dam." This change better expresses the intent of Congress, which was simply to require a license for a plant which was installed at or uses power at a Government dam. It is not believed that Congress intended to require a license for a plant lower down the stream from the Government dam, which plant happens to use water which is spilled over the Government dam.

The present subsection (b) of section 23 of the act does not prohibit the construction, operation, or maintenance of any project in accordance with the terms of a permit or valid existing right-of-way granted prior to June 10, 1920. Therefore, after the date in the ninth line there has been inserted the phrase "pursuant to applicable State, Territorial, or Federal laws," to make it clear that a State, Territorial, or Federal permit or right-of-way or right to construct protects one from the necessity of becoming licensed under the Federal Power Act. This is in conformity with a similar amendment to subsection (a) of section 23 contained in section 5 of the bill.

A proviso is inserted after the first sentence of the present subsection (b) of section 23 to make it clear that if any person constructed prior to June 10, 1920, pursuant to Federal, Territorial or State law any project, such person can, without license of the Federal Power Commission, continue to repair, reconstruct, operate or maintain such project. Section 5 of the bill similarly amended subsection (a) of section 23.

The present subsection (b) of section 23 requires anyone intending to construct a project on a nonnavigable tributary of a navigable stream to file a declaration with the Commission. If the Commission finds that the interests of interstate commerce would be affected by the project, it is unlawful to proceed without having secured a license from the Commission. The proposed amendment to this portion of the subsection provides that the type of license which the Commission shall issue in this case is a limited license, which shall be for 50 years from the date of the issuance thereof except in the event application is made for a shorter period and the Commission agrees to such a shorter period, and which shall contain only such conditions as are reasonably necessary or appropriate for the protection of the navigable capacity of navigable waters, as defined in the bill, and to reimburse the United States for costs of administering the act in relation to the proposed project. The only legitimate interest of the Federal Government in projects on nonnavigable waters is to see that such projects are not operated in such a way as to cause unreasonable interference with navigation on those navigable waters into which the nonnavigable waters flow. The committee does not feel that the United States can impose any regulations by way of license on those building projects on nonnavigable streams other than those regulations which are reasonably necessary and appropriate to prevent unreasonable interference of navigable waters elsewhere. The only license conditions which are necessary or appropriate to safeguard this limited interest of the United States are those embodied in the language proposed, see 1936 Opinions, Attorney General, 355. Certainly the United States, even though it constitutionally might have the power, should not make this limited interest the vehicle for depriving the states of control over and of tax revenue from such projects on nonnavigable streams, and for discouraging the development of such state resources by the States or their peoples in such ways as the States or their peoples may decide. The Commission is given the authority before granting such a limited license to determine that the new project is best adapted for the navigable capacity of any navigable waters affected and for the improvement and utilization of water power. Hence, the Commission is well able to insure the comprehensive development of the navigable streams affected.

In those cases where the Commission finds that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would not be affected by any project on a nonnavigable water, the Commission may still issue a limited license if the project owner so seeks.

No license is required for the repair, reconstruction, operation, or continued maintenance of a project on a nonnavigable tributary constructed prior to August 26, 1935, under a Federal, Territorial, or State permit.

Next, this section would require any person to conform to the lawful requirements of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War with respect to navigation. This will insure that all matters concerning navigation are referred to the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, which is expert in handling navigation matters.

Lastly, this section provides for the cancellation of licenses not required under the law as amended. Prior administration of the act has resulted in the imposition of licenses for which no license, or only a limited license, would be required under the present bill or if the present act had been construed according to the congressional intent. This situation should be corrected both as a matter of equity among the several States and their peoples and as a foundation for the establishment of the proper balance between Federal and State control over the water resources of the State which is envisioned and declared by this bill.

Section 7: Section 7 is a new section which is inserted to make it clear that the bill will not result in any additional cost to the Government in the event it has to condemn riparian properties. The bill does not affect the compensatory or noncompensatory character of water rights in the event that they are taken by eminent domain.

Part II

Section 1: Section 1, part II, of the bill amends subsection (b) of section 201 to make it clear that a purely local distributing company operating within a single State can purchase energy from an interstate company without becoming subject to Federal Power Commission regulation under the Federal Power Act. The Federal Power Commission would, of course, continue to have jurisdiction over the selling company and over the sale by it to the local distributing company, thus the principle of the Attleboro case is satisfied and nothing goes unregulated. The proposed amendment makes it clear that the Federal Power Commission would have no jurisdiction over such local distributing company. The committee believes this is in accordance with the original intention of Congress in passing the Federal Power Act. In addition it would make it possible for local distributing companies to interconnect their facilities with interstate companies thus enabling them to render better service at cheaper rates to the ultimate consumers. Local companies are reluctant to make these interconnections under existing interpretations of the Federal Power Act because of the onerous burdens of duplication of regulation. There is nothing in the amendments which would in any way change the present situation and all interstate utilities would continue to be subject to Federal regulation.

Section 2: The purpose of the amendments to subsection (c) of section 201, proposed by section 2 of the bill, is to avoid a claim of jurisdiction by the Federal Power Commission over a company operating in one State which sells energy to another company operating in the same State even though a small amount of the energy so purchased may be transmitted by the second company across a State line. The second company, since its operations extend across State lines, would, of course, continue subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission.

The second amendment to subsection (c) of section 201 would permit a local distributing company to make an interconnection for emergency service or for the exchange of energy where settlement for any variation in delivery would be made on the basis of cost of production or of purchase of such energy. This amendment also provides that a "slop-over" of electric energy between connecting lines or systems shall not be held to be the transmission of electric enegy in interstate commerce.

Section 3: The proposed amendment to section 201 (d) contained in section 3 merely complements and further clarifies the amended provisions of section 201 (c).

Section 4: The proposed amendment to section 201 (e) contained in section 4 provides that a company which ceases to be a "public utility" as defined in the act by reason either of the cessation of ownership or operation of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission or by any amendment to the act shall not thereafter be subject to the Federal Power Act or any rule or regulation or order of the Commission other than those dealing with rates, by reason of its having formerly been a public utility subject to the act.

Section 5: Under the proposed amendment to section 201 (f) contained in section 5 any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy through facilities located wholly within one State and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission may make a temporary or permanent connection within the State in which its operations are conducted with facilities owned and operated by a governmental agency and such person shall not become subject to the provisions of the act by reason of such connection even though the electric energy received or delivered by such person through such connections is to be or has been delivered across a State line by such governmental agency.

Section 6: Section 6 adds three new subsections to the present act. The phrase "emergency" and "slop-over" used in section 2 are defined as suggested by the Commission. Lastly a subsection is added to make clear that any transmission or sale of electric energy which is not subject to Federal regulation under the Federal Power Act shall be subject to regulation by State authority. This subsection is inserted to eliminate any claimed possibility of any transmission or sale of energy going unregulated.

Section 7: Section 7 is a new section to the act which has been inserted to facilitate interconnections made with a view to strengthening the national defense. Coordination of electric-power facilities during World War II, accomplished through the strengthening of existing connections and the establishment of new connections between utility systems, was a major factor in assuring an abundant supply of electric energy for war production and civilian requirements. In order that the country may at all times enjoy the full benefit of available electric resources and be prepared for any future emergency, the public interest requires that coordination of electric facilities should be continued and increased during peacetime. The Federal Power Commission, in a statement of November 22, 1947, recognizing the importance of securing the maximum possible utilization of existing electric capacity on a coordinated basis regardless of ownership, has declared that there are important further opportunities for promoting the public interest through the establishment of new connections or the strengthening of existing connections. It is accordingly the purpose of this act to promote the maximum use of electric facilities in the public interest by providing limited exemptions from Commission jurisdiction in appropriate circumstances.

Report on Project Developments in Western Montana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to include with my remarks a summary of appropriations approved by the Congress for specific reclamation, Rural Electrification Administration, and Indian projects in my district. The time covered by these appropriations is from the period during my service as Representative from the First District of Montana:

Reclamation projects

I. HUNGRY HORSE PROJECT

1946	$1,700,000
1947	867,210
1948	2,500,000
1949	14,611,650
Total	19,678,860

II. CANYON FERRY PROJECT

1946	$236,270
1947	106,205
1948	775,000
1949	2,950,000
Total	4,067,475

III. HELENA VALLEY PROJECT

1946	----------
1947	----------
1948	$29,000
1949	21,000
Total	50,000

IV. JEFFERSON RIVER PROJECT

1946	----------
1947	$25,945
1948	80,000
1949	82,500
Total	188,445

V. THREE FORKS PROJECT

1946	----------
1947	----------
1948	$151,000
1949	299,600
Total	450,600

VI. BITTERROOT PROJECT

1946	----------
1947	$89,238
1948	----------
1949	40,000
Total	129,238

VII. MISSOULA VALLEY PROJECT

1945–47 (completed)	$269,355

Rural electrification projects, 1943–48

I. RAVALLI COUNTY ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC., CORVALLIS, MONT.

1943–46	$272,800
1946	----------
1947	73,000
1948	150,000
Total	495,800

II. VIGILANTE ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC., TWIN BRIDGES AND DILLON, MONT.

1943–46	$960,000
1947	405,000
1948	100,000
Total	1,465,000

III. MISSOULA ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC., MISSOULA, MONT.

1943–46	$505,000
1947	----------
1948	450,000
Total	955,000

Committee on Public Works Chairman Praises Cooperation of Members

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I enclose a statement setting forth the spirit of cooperation of the members of the Committee on Public Works of which I am chairman and especially setting forth the helpfulness and cooperation of the chairmen of the subcommittees thereof.

The Committee on Public Works has made a fine record in the Eightieth Congress. We have contributed substantially to the Nation's welfare. We reported to the House three bills of major importance, which were accepted by the Congress. Our river and harbor and flood control omnibus bill was the first of its kind in 32 years (two titles in one bill), and it carried the lowest authorization in over 25 years.

Our stream-pollution bill will be the first of its kind since this matter was called to the attention of Congress in 1897—51 years ago. It will also be the first bill dealing with the stream-pollution problem to become law.

The passage of the 1948 highway bill assures reasonable betterment of our national highway system. The American people are automobile and good roads conscious. We have 37,500,000 registered cars which require adequate highways for efficient and economical operation. The highway bill is but one of the contributions our committee has made to our country's high standard of living.

In addition to the three important bills mentioned above, over 400 other bills were assigned to our committee for consideration. We held hearings, passed judgment on, and recommended many of these measures to the Eightieth Congress and they have become law.

This commendable record could not have been accomplished without the splendid cooperation, diligence, and attention to duty and general efficiency of the individual members of the committee. It is in appreciation of the contribution made by each of the members of the committee that I extend my sincere thanks, as chairman of the committee, for their courtesy, cooperation, and interest in the noteworthy program of public works we have completed.

I want to express my special thanks to Congressmen HOMER ANGELL, GEORGE BENDER, HARRY MCGREGOR, PAUL CUNNINGHAM, EARL WILSON, and KINGSLAND MACY, who have served as chairmen of the subcommittees during the session. On them rested much of the responsibility and to them goes much of the credit for perfecting the legislation which the committee offered to Congress.

Investigation of the Paroles of Four Federal Prisoners by the Federal Board of Parole

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PORTER HARDY, JR.
OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following items in connection with the investigation of the paroles of four Federal prisoners by the Federal Board of Parole. The facts surrounding this investigation has been so distorted by the Chicago Tribune that I believe these items should be made a part of the RECORD.

The first item is a copy of the official transcript of a hearing on June 9, 1948, before the Parole Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The next two items are clippings from the Chicago Tribune on June 10 and June 13, 1948, which are clearly contrary to the facts in the case as shown by the official transcript of the record of the subcommittee hearings. The fourth item is a letter of June 15, 1948, from the Attorney General to Chairman HOFFMAN, setting forth additional facts and commenting on the foregoing items.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1948, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that Mr. Snyder and Mr. Hardy are also present, with this statement, that Attorney General Clark is here; also Assistant Attorney General Peyton Ford, and Mr. Otto Kerner, district attorney, from Chicago.

We have been discussing the matter before the committee. Mr. BUSBEY was here and was requested by the chairman to put his request for further information in writing, that he made the statement he will do so and return himself. He has not yet returned.

I might say this, Mr. Clark, that when you were at a meeting of the committee you announced your willingness to let the committee have the names of witnesses who had been interviewed by the FBI; that since that time we have not received them—I do not know whether you have had a call or not—but be that as it may, Mr. BUSBEY now wants to check over that list so that he may ascertain whether it contains the names of some witnesses whom he thinks have relevant information and who have been interviewed by the FBI.

I understand from Mr. Kerner's statement the list is in Chicago and that he is willing when he returns—and Mr. BUSBEY said he was going to Chicago today—to let Mr. BUSBEY look over that list. Am I correct?

Mr. CLARK. On a confidential basis, with the understanding that none of the names on the list be copied down and made public——

The CHAIRMAN. Pardon me; what was that last statement?

Mr. CLARK. That none of the names on the list be copied down or be made public through him or through someone else to whom he may give the names; Mr. Kerner will be happy, in his presence, to let Mr. BUSBEY go over the list of names of each person interrogated by the FBI.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that satisfactory to everybody?

Mr. CLARK. That is a concession, Mr. Chairman, that I am making as Attorney General.

I would like for the record to show that the activities of Mr. BUSBEY in giving publicity and the unfounded charges in the so-called investigation has been most harmful to the Department and the grand jury investigation of this matter. And in the presence of Mr. Kerner, in charge of this investigation in Chicago, I want to say both for him and for myself that I do hope that the committee will take whatever action it can to try to put a stop to these continual charges that are made in the press in Chicago that are causing so much trouble and delay in the investigation, and eventually, perhaps, may cause us to be unable to——

(The statement of Mr. Clark was interrupted by the telephone, answered by the chairman, in which conversation with Mr. BUSBEY he stated:)

The CHAIRMAN. I just said to Mr. Clark and Mr. Kerner that before you left you said that if they would produce the list of witnesses so that you could read them that would be sufficient for the present.

Now, they have said, Mr. Clark has said that Mr. Kerner is going to Chicago and that you may see the list tomorrow.

Make it Friday? Then you can see them in Chicago Friday—you can contact Mr. Kerner's office in Chicago.

And with the understanding that you will not make a copy of the list or divulge the names. You do not know anything about that. You just want to see if there are certain names. All right. They say you may do that. Is that satisfactory to you? Would that be Saturday? You can talk to me Friday. All right. But he would like—

We have had Mr. Clark up here. We pulled him down from a meeting he was attending of the railroad situation. He is here and has been waiting a half hour.

I cannot get Mr. Clark and Mr. Hoover together at a committee meeting unless we can give them some notice. I want to put it all in one package. They can't bother to come Friday. All right, I will submit your letter to the full committee if you want to.

(End of telephone conversation.)

The CHAIRMAN. That is the situation, gentlemen.

Mr. CLARK. The trouble is in getting the list he wants from us or Mr. Hoover——

The CHAIRMAN. He said he wants Mr. Hoover up here with you.

Mr. CLARK. That is just a publicity stunt, and Mr. Hoover has a pretty tough job; and I have a pretty rough job myself. We have given you everything we can. In fact, we have gone further than the people who are in charge of the investigation think we should.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the committee and the subcommittee thinks this matter is very important and should receive consideration, but I do not believe the committee—I know the chairman does not think that all of the Federal business should be suspended and that the time of everybody in the service should be taken up with this one thing.

Mr. CLARK. We want to cooperate with you. We think it is important too, and that we should cooperate, but we cannot solve it with one of us pulling one way and the other the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you ever so much for coming.

Mr. HARDY. I think added to the request should be a request that Mr. BUSBEY furnish you or Mr. Kerner with the names that he has in this matter.

Mr. CLARK. I think that is most important if we are going to conduct the investigation, and after all if he has the names he should give them to the district attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, yesterday, in talking with Mr. BUSBEY with reference to another phase of this matter he asked us to authorize him to be sent to Chicago, but we simply asked him to tell me—give me the names of the witnesses he wanted to interview in the light of the testimony which he expected to develop. He declined to do so.

I want to call attention to the fact, as I understand grand jury procedure—and I know nothing about the Federal procedure—but in the State grand juries you have, and the Attorney General or his assistants can call all the witnesses they want to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. BUSBEY'S asking for the names of the witnesses, or list of the names of witnesses which he says he wants to check is not going to solve it.

The CHAIRMAN. My answer to that is you still have full authority to call Mr. BUSBEY.

Mr. CLARK. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to this stenographic record being made public?

Mr. CLARK. I might add that I waited for half an hour for Mr. BUSBEY to show up; I left a very important conference on the railroad strike case which was coming up Friday in the courts of the District of Columbia in order to come here at Mr. BUSBEY'S request.

(Whereupon the proceeding was adjourned.)

CLARK QUIZZED ON PAROLES AT SECRET SESSION

(By James Doherty)

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Attorney General Clark, his first assistant, Peyton Ford, and United States Attorney Otto Kerner, Jr., of Chicago were witnesses today at a secret session of the House subcommittee investigating the paroles of four Chicago gangsters, and were reported to have given the Congressmen no information. Clark and J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, had been asked to appear before the committee in open session, but declined to do so.

Clark's appearance, while voluntary, was not made until after the departure for Chicago of Representative BUSBEY, Republican, Illinois, who said he wanted to ask Clark about the connection of some of Clark's friends with the paroles given the four Chicagoans, Paul Ricca, Louis Campagna, Charles Gioe, and Phil D'Andrea. BUSBEY said he wanted to ask Clark, too, why he refused to allow the FBI to tell Congress the result of its hunt for proof that "a large amount of cash was paid for the paroles."

ATTENDING FUNERAL

BUSBEY was assigned by Speaker MARTIN to attend the funeral tomorrow of Representative Owens in Chicago. He had objected to any arrangement whereby Clark and Hoover would send "deputies" to appear before the committee which, he said, has the legal right to question them about their official conduct.

Representative SNYDER, Republican, West Virginia, and Representative HARDY, Democrat, Virginia, had been delegated to ask Clark and Hoover to appear without being subpenaed. They reported that Clark was standing on his rights to refuse to testify before Congress, under the directive recently issued by President Truman.

HOFFMAN OBJECTS

As a favor to the congressional committee, HARDY and SNYDER reported, Clark would send his assistant, Ford, and Kerner, who is in charge of a grand jury in Chicago that has had the paroles of the gangsters under advisement for 7 months. Chairman HOFFMAN, Republican, Michigan, and BUSBEY held out for the top men themselves, Clark and Hoover.

After BUSBEY left the committee room this morning, Ford left and 10 minutes later returned with Clark. When the session ended a short while later, all who would do any talking agreed that Clark, Ford, and Kerner had contributed nothing to the committee.

[From the Chicago Sunday Tribune of June 13, 1948]

BUSBEY CHARGES CLARK IS GIVING HIM RUN-AROUND—DEMANDS WITNESS LIST IN PAROLE PROBE

(By James Doherty)

WASHINGTON, June 12.—Representative BUSBEY, Republican, Illinois, today charged that Attorney General Tom C. Clark is giving him the run-around on his request for information considered vital to the search for the payoff man in the investigation of the Federal paroles given four notorious Chicago members of the Capone gang. BUSBEY said he intends to find out why Clark fears to let the public know the facts about the release of the gangsters—a release he said was effected by friends of Clark and of President Truman.

The Congressman who represents the Third District on Chicago's southwest side, returned here to Washington from a funeral detail in his home city. He said he had been promised a look at a list of 275 names of witnesses interviewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation which had been asked to act on reports that there was a huge cash payment—$500,000 or more according to estimates—made by the Capone gang for the release of Paul Ricca, Louis Campagna, Charles Gioe, and Phil D'Andrea.

BEING COMPILED

"I was told United States Attorney Otto Kerner Jr., at Chicago, would show me the list when I went there as a Member of the congressional detail at the funeral of Representative Tom Owens," BUSBEY said.

"Instead of showing it to me, I was advised it was being compiled." That's at least an illustration of the inefficiency or worse of the Department of Justice.

Before leaving Washington for the funeral, BUSBEY had asked that Clark and Director J.

Edgar Hoover of the FBI be subpenaed before the investigating committee of which Representative HOFFMAN, Republican, Michigan, is chairman. They had refused to appear, he was advised, unless the meeting was closed to the public, as the Government's chief law enforcement officer didn't want the newspapers to know what he had done in the parole matter.

"Clark appeared at an executive session of the committee as soon as he knew I had left it," Busbey stated. "However, he didn't tell my colleagues anything, I am informed.

"I do not want Clark at any executive session. I want him to appear at an open meeting and answer questions about what he knows concerning several of his friends whose names have been connected with the paroles. I want him to tell us what, if anything, Nash Adams, Howard Dailey, and Mae Belcher, all of his home city of Dallas, Tex., had to do with the dismissal of a Federal indictment against the four gangsters, an indictment that would have blocked their paroles."

OBTAINED $15,000

"Maury Hughes, an intimate of Clark, admitted to the congressional committee that he obtained $15,000 for helping the Chicago gangsters get paroled. That fact, alone, should be enough to bring Clark before us ready and willing to answer all questions.

"Instead, he takes refuge in a directive of President Truman which he thinks gives him permission to defy the power of Congress to compel testimony under oath from him or anyone else.

"I want to say right now that if Truman and Clark are successful at this time in suppressing vital data concerning the release of these four gangsters, they'll answer to the Government under a new President and a new Attorney General.

"Why is Clark afraid to let the world know what persons his agents interviewed concerning the paroles? The answer to that might be startling."

PUBLIC ENEMY NO. 1

"Why wasn't Nash Adams called before the Federal grand jury in Chicago? Mr. Kerner, the representative of the Department of Justice in Chicago, knows something we don't know about Maury Hughes' deal with a gangster shielded with the false name of Mike Ryan.

"I don't know why Murray Humphries, once called Public Enemy No. 1, was not questioned before the Federal grand jury.

"The list of persons interviewed in this search for evidence of corruption might be enlightening.

"As far as I am concerned, the offer to let me peek at a list in Chicago was a subterfuge. I want that list made public so the world will know who was and who was not questioned about this parole outrage."

JUNE 15, 1948.

Hon. CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your letter of June 9, 1948, regarding the investigation conducted by your Subcommittee into the paroles granted by the Board of Parole to Phil D'Andrea, Charles Gioe, Louis Campagna and Paul D'Lucia. You enclose a copy of a letter of the same date written to you by Congressman FRED E. BUSBEY, a member of your subcommittee. Mr. BUSBEY asks that J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and I be called before your subcommittee, bringing any and all subordinates familiar with the paroles, and all files pertaining to the investigation. Mr. BUSBEY also asks that you subpena seven persons named in his letter. You asked me to designate the date and time when it will be convenient to comply with Mr. BUSBEY's request.

Yesterday, I received a letter dated June 12th, from Mr. BUSBEY, in which he lists the same seven names of those mentioned in his letter to you, and suggests that these seven people be interviewed immediately by the FBI. I am advised that five of these persons have either been interviewed or had been included within the investigation prior to Mr. BUSBEY's request. The United States attorney, upon his return to Chicago last week, has now included the remaining two in the investigation. As soon as these reports are received by the United States attorney in Chicago, he will, of course, if the material justifies, immediately present it to the grand jury.

I have appeared twice previously before your Committee in this matter. My first appearance was at a public hearing on March 3, 1948, at which time I advised the Committee of everything I knew concerning this matter. Nothing has occurred since that time that would add anything to my testimony. Although the FBI has been carrying on a continuous inquiry since my appearance, no information has been brought to my attention which indicates any official corruption in the granting of these paroles.

My second appearance was on June 9, the same date as your letter. Mr. Peyton Ford, the Assistant to the Attorney General, telephoned me and advised that Mr. BUSBEY and yourself wished me to appear before your committee, which was then in session. Although I was then engaged in a conference in my office on an important matter, I immediately went to your committee's office, arriving a few minutes after 11 a. m. Mr. BUSBEY was not present and you advised me he was in the next room, but upon inquiry you found he had gone to his own office across the street. We waited, you will remember, along with the members of your subcommittee, for some 30 minutes. Mr. BUSBEY first advised you that he would come over, but later he said he had to leave the city. Meanwhile, although I was there at his request, he kept the members of the subcommittee, as well as Mr. Ford, Mr. Kerner, and myself, waiting all this time. On your last telephone call he told you he could not come over and he did not. After this last conversation with Mr. BUSBEY on the telephone you told me he wanted to see a list of persons questioned by the FBI, and that he wished to look at the list in Chicago on Friday of that week. I agreed to this provided that the list was kept entirely confidential, so as to protect our current investigation. I was advised later that Mr. BUSBEY called the United States attorney in Chicago on Thursday, when Mr. Kerner was en route to Chicago, and not on Friday, as we had agreed.

In spite of this situation the Chicago Tribune printed a story on Sunday, June 13, in which Mr. BUSBEY, who left the committee rooms after requesting that I appear, in effect, charged that I was giving him the "run around." The exact opposite is true. The article of June 13, a photostatic copy of which is enclosed, was written by James Doherty, Chicago Tribune reporter, who has been conducting a smear campaign against me, and who has been attempting to use the committee to further that sinister campaign. You heard the statement of the United States Attorney that the articles previously published by the Chicago Tribune had seriously handicapped the investigation conducted by the FBI and the Federal grand jury in Chicago, and this article is part of the same pattern.

You and the other members of your committee, including Mr. BUSBEY, and even this Chicago Tribune reporter, are aware of the fact that all power, authority, and duties with respect to the parole of Federal prisoners were transferred from the Attorney General and former Boards of Parole, to the Board of Parole by the act of Congress of May 13, 1930 (18 U. S. C. 723 (b)). It is unnecessary for me to say that I have never controlled or attempted to control the granting of paroles and I have no personal knowledge whatever, as you have been told, concerning the granting of the paroles under investigation by your committee. You have had the members of the Board of Parole before your subcommittee several times, both here and in Chicago. You also have had testimony of members of the Department of Justice who are familiar with the case and with your investigation. You are also familiar with the fact that this same matter is under investigation by a Federal grand jury in Chicago.

Although the continued appearance of distorted stories in the Chicago Tribune is most detrimental to our investigation, I want it distinctly understood that I am ready to answer, as I have always been, any questions relevant to any proper inquiry in this matter by your committee.

Sincerely,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

Work of Committee on Public Works, Eighteth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD as granted by the House, I include a statement of the accomplishments of the Public Works Committee in the Eightieth Congress.

The Committee on Public Works was created under the provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and is a consolidation of the former Committees on Rivers and Harbors, Flood Control, Public Buildings and Grounds, and Roads.

Under rule XI, House of Representatives, as amended by Public Law 601, Seventy-Ninth Congress, all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subjects listed below are referred to the Committee on Public Works:

Flood control and improvement of rivers and harbors.

Public works for the benefit of navigation, including bridges and dams—other than international bridges and dams.

Water power.

Oil and other pollution of navigable waters.

Public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States generally.

Measures relating to the purchase of sites and construction of post offices, customhouses, Federal courthouses, and Government buildings within the District of Columbia.

Measures relating to the Capitol Building and the Senate and House Office Buildings.

Measures relating to the construction, or reconstruction, maintenance, and care of the buildings and grounds of the Botanic Gardens, the Library of Congress, and the Smithsonian Institution.

Public reservations and parks within the District of Columbia, including Rock Creek Park and the Zoological Park.

Measures relating to the construction or maintenance of roads and post roads.

Also, under House Resolution 403, Eightieth Congress, the Committee on Public Works has authority to investigate questionable trade practices, popularly termed "black market" operations.

SURVEYS AND REVIEWS

A new policy was established by the committee with respect to requests for review resolutions and preliminary examinations and surveys for river and harbor improvements and flood control.

An interval of 3 years must elapse after the submission of an unfavorable report by the Chief of Engineers before any resolution for a review may be considered, unless facts are presented which could not have been foreseen when the unfavorable report was submitted to Congress and which the committee deems sufficient to warrant earlier action.

Each request for the adoption of a committee resolution and each request for a preliminary examination and survey must be supported by a statement giving sufficient information to enable the committee to determine the question of desirability and need.

This policy has saved the taxpayers a substantial sum of money through the elimination of requests not sustained by the investigations made by the committee.

During the Eightieth Congress, the Committee on Public Works took action on a wide range of legislation, among the measures being the following which were enacted into law:

S. 64, granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a dam across Dan River, N. C.; approved May 16, 1947; Public Law No. 68.

House Joint Resolution 193, to grant authority for the erection of a permanent building for the American National Red Cross, District of Columbia Chapter; approved June 26, 1947; Public Law No. 156.

H. R. 310, authorizing the extension of service of the District of Columbia water system to Falls Church, Va., and other nearby systems; approved June 26, 1947; Public Law No. 118.

S. 418, to provide for water pollution control activities in the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and in the Federal Works Agency; approved June 30, 1948; Public Law No. 845.

S. 723, to authorize the preparation of plans for additional office building for the use of the United States Senate; approved July 11, 1947; Public Law No. 169.

S. 980, amendment of the act relating to the United States Capitol grounds and regulations of the Capitol Police Board; approved July 11, 1947; Public Law No. 170.

S. 1305, to amend section 24 of the Federal Power Act so as to provide that the States may apply for reservation of portions of power sites released for entry, location, or selection to the States for highway purposes; approved May 28, 1948; Public Law No. 559.

S. 1306, to ratify action taken by various departments and agencies of the Federal Government in the construction and disposition of the San Jacinto-San Vicente aqueduct; approved April 15, 1948; Public Law No. 482.

H. R. 1412, to grant a reversionary interest in lands to the Arthur Alexander Post, No. 68, the American Legion, Belzoni, Miss.; approved June 21, 1947; Public Law No. 99.

S. 1545, to authorize a bridge and roads upon lands of the Colonial National Historical Park, Yorktown, Va.; approved May 12, 1948; Public Law No. 524.

H. R. 1610, to authorize the Cairo, Ill., Bridge Commission to issue refunding bonds; approved July 11, 1947; Public Law No. 174.

S. 1611, to extend the time for construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Sauk Rapids, Minn.; approved May 11, 1948; Public Law No. 520.

H. R. 1628, to transfer to the State of Illinois rights in land comprising the right-of-way of the Illinois and Michigan Canal; approved July 1, 1947; Public Law No. 152.

S. 1651, to amend the General Bridge Act of 1946 by extending the maximum period of amortization of toll bridge costs from 20 to 30 years; approved May 25, 1948; Public Law No. 550.

H. R. 1874, to amend the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1944 to extend the period during which funds are available for expenditure under the act; approved June 21, 1947; Public Law No. 100.

S. 516—H. R. 2086—to authorize the furnishing of steam to the property of the Daughters of the American Revolution at rates to be fixed by the Federal Works Agency; approved April 15, 1947; Public Law No. 33.

S. 2288, authorizing the sale of permanent war housing to veterans at cost; approved June 8, 1948; Public Law No. 689.

H. R. 3029, authorizing plans for a new Federal courthouse for the District of Columbia; approved May 29, 1947; Public Law No. 80. Personal investigation by members of the Committee on Public Works revealed the urgent need for an adequate structure to House the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

H. R. 3072, to authorize preparation of plans for an addition to the House Office Buildings; approved July 11, 1947; Public Law No. 176.

H. R. 3146, to amend the Flood Control Act of 1937 relative to surveys and reviews by the Department of Agriculture; approved January 19, 1948; Public Law No. 397. This act gives the Committee on Public Works the authority to authorize by resolution reviews of reports on watersheds submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture; similar authority exists for reviews of reports on rivers and harbor projects and flood-control projects submitted to Congress by the Corps of Engineers.

H. R. 3219, authorizing appointment by the Federal Works Agency of special policemen for duty upon Federal property; approved June 1, 1948; Public Law No. 566.

H. R. 3334, granting the consent of Congress to the construction of a dam in the Susquehanna River; approved July 30, 1947; Public Law No. 285.

H. R. 3402, to extend the maturity date of bonds to be issued to refund the acquisition cost of the bridge across the Missouri River at Rulo, Nebr.; approved June 19, 1948; Public Law No. 698.

H. R. 3506, to authorize the acquisition of a site for a new Federal building in Huntington, W. Va.; approved March 25, 1948; Public Law No. 455.

H. R. 3792, to authorize the appropriation of funds for emergency flood-control work; approved June 23, 1947; Public Law No. 102.

H. R. 3862, to authorize a grant of land to Montgomery County, Pa., for erecting an annex to the courthouse; approved August 4, 1947; Public Law No. 352.

H. R. 3875, granting the approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the reduction of pollution of waters of the New England States; approved July 31, 1947; Public Law No. 292.

H. R. 3915, to increase the membership of the Arkansas-Mississippi River Bridge Commission; approved June 19, 1948; Public Law No. 701.

H. R. 4068, authorizing the construction of a building for the General Accounting Office in the District of Columbia; approved May 18, 1948; Public Law No. 533. Investigation by the Committee on Public Works revealed that the work and records of the General Accounting Office are scattered in more than 20 buildings resulting in curtailment of efficiency and that this situation justifies early construction of an adequate and proper building.

H. R. 4111, authorizing the construction of flood-control works on the Little Sioux River, Iowa; approved August 4, 1947; Public Law No. 341.

H. R. 4115, to quiet title to certain land in Cheverly, Prince Georges County, Md.; approved February 18, 1948; Private Law No. 178.

H. R. 4140, granting the consent of Congress to a compact between Pennsylvania and New Jersey concerning the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission; approved August 4, 1947; Public Law No. 355.

H. R. 4836, authorizing the purchase of a new post office site at Omaha, Nebr.; approved March 25, 1948; Public Law No. 456.

H. R. 4967, providing for the acquisition of a site and the preparation of plans for a new postal building and for the remodeling of the existing post office building at Portland, Oreg.; approved March 25, 1948; Public Law No. 457.

H. R. 5543, granting the consent of Congress to Carolina Power & Light Co. to construct a dam in the Lumber River, N. C.; approved May 21, 1948; Public Law No. 546.

H. R. 5710, authorizing the transfer of temporary war housing to educational institutions, and the transfer of Slowe and Carver Halls to Howard University, Washington, D. C.; approved June 28, 1948; Public Law No. 796.

H. R. 5750, providing for the improvement of post-office facilities at Los Angeles, Calif.; approved June 29, 1948; Public Law No. 823.

H. R. 5888, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1948, providing authorization of $450,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1950 and 1951 to aid the States in the construction of highways; approved June 29, 1948; Public Law No. 834.

H. R. 5963, authorizing the construction of a courthouse in the District of Columbia; approved May 14, 1948; Public Law No. 527.

H. R. 6188, to confer jurisdiction over the Fort Des Moines Veterans Village to the State of Iowa; approved June 24, 1948; Public Law No. 751.

H. R. 6228, authorizing the construction of shore protective works at Nome, Alaska; approved June 16, 1948; Public Law No. 649. S. 1025 passed in lieu.

H. R. 6419, authorization of certain river and harbor projects and flood control; title I, River and Harbor Act of 1948; title II, Flood Control Act of 1948; approved June 30, 1948; Public Law No. 858.

H. R. 6465, authorizing the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission to charge tolls over certain bridges crossing the Delaware River and to group the revenues from such toll bridges in the determination of the amount of tolls to be charged; approved July 1, 1948; Public Law No. 859.

Senate Joint Resolution 231, authorizing emergency housing funds for Vanport, Oreg.; approved June 11, 1948: Public Law No. 624.

It was the policy of the Committee on Public Works to limit authorizations for public works to those most urgently needed. This was accomplished by carefully screening all river and harbor and flood control matters and resulted in a substantial reduction in the number of reviews and the enactment of the lowest project authorization law in a quarter of a century. For the first time in more than 30 years both river and harbor and flood control projects were combined in one law.

Among the public buildings authorized, two major structures were authorized—a building to house the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and a building for the General Accounting Office. The need for these buildings was thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Public Works. Present quarters for the Federal Courts in the District of Columbia are so inadequate as seriously to interfere with the proper administration of justice. Prompt action was taken because of this situation. Efficiency of the General Accounting Office is adversely affected by the fact that its work and records are now housed in more than 20 different buildings, many of them ill-suited to the needs of the General Accounting Office. Only one conclusion could be reached in this matter and that was the prompt authorization of a proper and adequate building.

The Committee on Public Works responded to all emergency situations brought about by floods. In 1947 funds were quickly authorized for emergency flood-control work and in 1948 the committee included in H. R. 6419 an authorization of $25,000,000 for emergency flood-control work so that the Corps of Engineers can promptly swing into action in the event of flood disaster. In addition, the committee approved a special authorization of $10,000,000, to be added to funds already available, for aid in the Vanport, Oreg., flood disaster.

More than 50 years ago, 1897, legislation for stream-pollution control was introduced in Congress, and throughout the ensuing years continuous effort has been made to secure the enactment of water-pollution-control legislation. In 1938 the Congress passed such a law, but it was vetoed by President Roosevelt. S. 418, substantially amended by the Committee on Public Works, has now been approved by the President, and a program of water-pollution-control work will be undertaken by the United States Public Health Service and the Federal Works Agency.

Six subcommittees function under the administration of the Committee on Public Works: Rivers and Harbors, Flood Control, Public Buildings and Grounds, Roads, Beach Erosion, and Subcommittee Investigating Questionable Trade Practices.

The last-mentioned subcommittee has been making a very thorough study and investigation of the vast network of gray-market operations in the United States and has succeeded in exposing racketeering transactions that have been a potent factor in unwarranted price boosts that have been passed on to the consumer. These investigations already have stopped price manipulations and thereby protected the public interest. Further accomplishments may be expected from the work of this subcommittee.

Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration Returns Funds to Committee on House Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH A. GAMBLE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted by the House, I insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter which I have written to the Honorable KARL M. LECOMPTE, chairman of the Committee on House Administration, inviting his attention to the fact that the Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration of which I am chairman, had not expended a $5,000 appropriation made available by the House for use in connection with election contests and the sum has reverted intact to the House contingent fund:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1948.

The Honorable KARL M. LECOMPTE,
Chairman, Committee on House Administration,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As chairman of the Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration having jurisdiction over election contests, you will recall that at the close of the first session of the Eightieth Congress, there were three active election contests and it was thought at that time that hearings might have to be held in the districts in question.

The Committee on House Administration authorized and the House approved House Resolution 339 appropriating for the use of the said subcommittee the sum of $5,000 to cover expenses which would probably be incurred by the committee in connection with said contests.

I am very glad to advise you that the subcommittee did not expend any part of the $5,000 and that the same reverts intact to the contingent fund of the House. This is another evidence of the efforts of the Republican members to effect savings and economy in Government.

Very sincerely yours,
RALPH A. GAMBLE.

Accomplishments of the Committee on Public Lands During the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD J. WELCH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, during the Eightieth Congress the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am chairman, carefully considered and favorably reported to the House of Representatives 274 bills and resolutions at a minimum of cost to the Federal Government and at an amount far below that which is authorized by the Congressional Reorganization Act. The House passed 252 of these bills, 223 of which have become law. This is a record of which the members of the committee can be justly proud.

The name of the committee is a misnomer, because it is no longer limited to public lands legislation, but under the Congressional Reorganization Act is a consolidation of six former legislative committes of the House, viz, Territories, Indian Affairs, Irrigation and Reclamation, Public Lands, Insular Affairs, and Mines and Mining. Thus, it will be seen that the Committee on Public Lands has legislative jurisdiction involving nearly all of the Nation's natural resources, and it includes a wider range of legislation than almost any other committee in the House.

In the interest of expediency I appointed five subcommittees as follows: Public Lands, chairman, Congressman BARRETT, of Wyoming: Irrigation and Reclamation, chairman, Congressman ROCKWELL, of Colorado; Territorial and Insular Possessions, chairman, Congressman CRAWFORD, of Michigan; Mines and Mining, chairman, Congressman LEMKE, of North Dakota; and Indian Affairs, chairman, Congressman D'EWART, of Montana.

The Congressional Reorganization Act authorized the appointment of four professional staff members in addition to six clerical staff members. The basic salary of each professional staff member could have been $8,000 annually. Except in special instances such professional staff members would be of no possible use to the committee unless they made field investigations, which would have cost an additional amount equivalent to their salaries. In the interest of economy the committee has given a temporary appointment only to one professional staff member and has not filled the full quota of clerks, with the resultant saving of much more than $100,000 during the Eightieth Congress.

It was decided that instead of employing a full staff, members of the committee would go into the field and make personal studies of the most important problems under the committee's jurisdiction. To carry out this program I requested, and the House authorized, $25,000 to be expended by the committee for field studies.

During the recess after the first session of the Eightieth Congress, 20 hearings were held by the full committee and the subcommittees in California, Colorado, Washington, Wyoming, Montana, Nevada, and Alaska. A further investigation was made under this authorization during the second session. Notwithstanding the allowance of $25,000, the committee has expended only $13,711.75 up to July 1, 1948, just slightly more than one-half of the amount authorized and appropriated for the payment of all costs, including stenographic transcripts of hearings and members' traveling expenses.

Report to the People of the Second Congressional District of Tennessee by Hon. John Jennings, Jr., of Tennessee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN JENNINGS, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following report:

To the people of the Second Congressional District of Tennessee:

I take pleasure, as your Representative in Congress, in submitting to you my official action on many of the questions in which I believe you are most interested.

You elected me to Congress in a special election on December 30, 1939. The question of the greatest concern to the Republicans and to the entire people of this district at this time is:

Who can best serve you in the Congress? The interest of the people of this district in the selection of a Member of the Congress transcends any one man's ambition to go to Congress.

When I was elected and took my seat in January 1940, the Biggs machine of Polk County, and its satellites, the Cantrell machine in McMinn and the Brakebill machine in Monroe, by a long series of election-law violations, had abolished free elections and stolen virtually all county offices in Polk, McMinn, and Monroe Counties. These violations of the law continued until in 1946, when the more than 6,000 veterans who served in the last war returned to their homes, and in August 1946 overthrew the Cantrell machine in McMinn and the Brakebill machine in Monroe. In November 1946 the returned veterans and their relatives overthrew the Biggs machine in Polk County.

Immediately upon my election to Congress, and without compensation from any source, I joined hands with the brave men and women of these three counties in a continuous war on these bullies of the ballot box and thieves of elections. We could obtain no indictments in the State criminal courts against these despoilers of the ballot box who were denying to people of these counties the right to vote and have their votes counted as cast.

After 3 years of effort, I succeeded in inducing Francis Biddle, Attorney General of the United States, to obtain indictments against the violators of the Federal election laws in McMinn and Monroe Counties. Federal Judge Leslie Darr nullified the conviction obtained in the Federal court in Chattanooga by sentencing one violator, William C. Moses, who submitted to the charge of taking money from WPA workers for use in the election of December 30, 1939, to remain in the custody of the United States marshal for 1 hour and pay a fine of 1 cent. Under the law, Judge Darr could have fined Moses not more than $1,000, or imprisoned him for not more than 1 year, or both.

In the November 1940 election at the Claxton precinct in McMinn County, six armed Biggs-Cantrell thugs slugged a citizen who came to vote and by armed force drove voters from the polls, broke up the election, carried the ballot box 12 miles to Etowah and robbed 400 citizens of their right to vote. After 2 years of effort on my part these violators were indicted and convicted before Judge Darr and a jury in the Federal court at Chattanooga.

Judge Darr disregarded the law, and fined them 1 cent each, and did not collect even this disgracefully small sum.

Later, I obtained the indictment of William Rucker, chief of police in Etowah, for stealing votes in the November 1942 congressional election. He was tried before Federal Judge MacSwinford, from Kentucky, convicted, sentenced to 30 days in jail and fined $500.

I brought suit for Tom R. Watson, of Monroe County, against W. C. Brakebill, sheriff of Monroe County, who had long spearheaded election stealing in that county and forced him to resign the sheriff's office for bribery of voters in the August 1942 election.

By an ouster suit against the Democratic election commissioners in McMinn County, I forced their resignation.

In 1944, as a result of the fight we made against the Biggs machine in the Sixth Senatorial District the late James G. Crumbliss defeated the Biggs candidate for the State senate.

In August 1946, armed thugs, commissioned as deputy sheriffs, aided habitual election thieves of the Cantrell machine in McMinn County in seizing and carrying the ballot boxes in Athens to the county jail and the ballot boxes in Etowah to the Cantrell banking houses. A veteran who had lost an arm in Africa and one who had been wounded twice in action were assaulted and their lives threatened. In the battle of Athens, the thieves, including the sheriff, who was also one of the Democratic election commissioners, and a Democratic State senator, who was the Democratic candidate for sheriff, and both of whom were responsible for repeated election thefts were put to flight. Honest elections were restored in McMinn County, and the entire citizens ticket was elected.

In Monroe County, for the first time in years, the entire Republican county ticket was elected.

In Polk County, in November 1946, the anti-Biggs candidates for the legislature were elected.

In May of this year, the Biggs machine, which had issued poll-tax receipts to its members, refused to permit the Democrats and Republicans who composed the good government coalition anti-Biggs organization to pay their poll taxes. On my advice, these good citizens went by the hundreds to the office of the trustee and tendered the amount of their poll tax. When their money was refused, they then obtained a mandatory injunction and forced the trustee to accept payment for and to issue to them their poll tax receipts. They thus became qualified to vote in both the August and November elections of this year.

After the November election, 1942, I along with Dewey Cate, Republican election commissioner, Jack Dance, Bob Mynatt, Howard F. Jarvis, J. Rector Weaver, and Lloyd Cruze, investigator from the office of Attorney General Hal Clements, and Judge William C. Burton, then Assistant Attorney General, by more than 3 days and nights of tireless effort, demonstrated that the November election at the Skaggston Precinct, in Knox County, had been stolen from the Republican candidates. As a result of these investigations and the resulting prosecution, honest elections have been restored at that precinct.

While I was thus engaged in waging this winning fight for honest elections, the head and front of my opposition was accepting money from and defending some of these thieves.

I never defended an election thief in my life.

MY SUPPORT OF THE TVA

Ten days after I took my seat as a Member of the House of Representatives, in January 1940, the proposal to authorize an appropriation of $40,000,000 for the construction of Fort Loudoun Dam at Lenoir City and to appropriate $1,000,000 to commence work on it came before the House of Representatives. In talking to my good friend, the able and distinguished Representative FRANCIS CASE, Representative from South Dakota, about the measure, he said to me: "You should make the argument you have made to me on the floor of the House. I will see Representative Clifton Woodrum, of Virginia, and arrange for you to answer Representative DIRKSEN, of Illinois, who will offer an amendment to cut out the Lenoir City Dam project. Mr. CASE conferred with Representative Woodrum. He came back to me and said: "Woodrum has agreed to permit you to answer DIRKSEN. You go down and sit on the front seat, others will arise to speak, but Speaker Bankhead will recognize you. You are a new man and if you request it the Speaker will give you five additional minutes." I did as I was told. Speaker Bankhead recognized me and I made my first speech on the floor of the House of Representatives.

I had previously contacted Representative Oliver, of Maine, Representative Thorkelson, of Montana, Usher L. Burdick, of South Dakota, and William Lemke, of North Dakota, and learned that these gentlemen favored the proposal. In the argument of the matter, I obtained the votes of Representatives

FRANK KEEFE, of Wisconsin, and DICK WELCH, of California.

DIRKSEN's motion to strike out the authorization and appropriation for the Lenoir City Dam was defeated by three votes. My vote and the votes of these six other Republicans carried the measure.

I COME HOME TO HELP MY PEOPLE

I have been criticized by a few persons for coming back to this district from time to time. One month after I was elected to Congress, I returned to Lenoir City to a celebration, attended by more than 5,000 people, to rejoice over the fact that the Lenoir City Dam was to be built, and that we were to have not only that great structure for the production of electric power and for flood control, but that the century-old dream of the people of the Tennessee River Valley of a navigable river from Knoxville to the Gulf of Mexico was about to be realized. This celebration was attended by myself and by Senator MCKELLAR. In addressing the great audience which attended the celebration, Senator MCKELLAR generously gave me credit for being responsible for the victory in the House of Representatives, which gave to this section the great benefits flowing from the dam.

In 1941, when war threatened and when the little children of the country were gathering aluminum cooking utensils to aid in the war effort, I returned to this district and spent a day going through the great aluminum plant at Alcoa, in Blount County, to familiarize myself with the manufacture of aluminum. When I returned to Washington for the debate on the proposal pending before the House to authorize the appropriation of $62,000,000 for the construction of the Cherokee Dam, near Jefferson City, and the steam generating plant at Watts Bar, I was able to detail how aluminum is produced and to demonstrate the necessity for this appropriation. It carried by a majority of 45 votes.

When again during the war, it became necessary to further expand the production of aluminum, I supported the $40,000,000 appropriation for the construction of Douglas Dam. This measure passed the House unanimously.

By reason of the electric current available from the hydroelectric plants of the Aluminum Co. of America and the great system of flood control, navigation, and power-producing dams of the TVA, the Aluminum Co. of America increased its output of aluminum for war purposes 700 percent, and today thousands of American boys are alive who would have been killed in this world war but for the fact that the Aluminum Co. of America at its plant in Alcoa was able to turn out all of the aluminum needed for the production of war planes. The atomic plant at Oak Ridge was located in our midst because we had the TVA and its vast amount of electricity.

I saw in the great Blount County plant at Alcoa 13,000 men and women, boys and girls, making aluminum 50 times as fast as Hitler and Hirohito could make it. I saw these loyal, patriotic, skilled workers, many of whom had boys in the service, extend their mighty effort above every battlefield, above the seven seas, around the world.

The establishment by Congress of the TVA as the sole source of electric power obtainable by the 5,000,000 people who live within the 80,000 square-mile area in Tennessee and six other States creates a moral and legal duty on the part of the Federal Government to expand its power facilities to keep step with the normal development and power demand of these people. Especially is this true when to do so will not only increase the income of the people dependent on the TVA for power but will increase the income of the Federal Government from the sale of such power.

I favor the proposal to build a $54,000,000 steam generating power plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn. This plant when completed will produce 375,000 kilowatts of power.

The power which will be produced by this plant is absolutely essential to meet the ever-increasing demand for electric current due to the economic growth of our section of the country.

Our greatest defense against foreign aggression is an air power so strong that it can raise an umbrella of air power above this country and carry war to any nation that dares attack us.

You cannot build planes without aluminum. You cannot make aluminum without electric current.

The TVA was created in the interest of national defense, to develop the agricultural and industrial resources of the Tennessee Valley, to improve navigation on the Tennessee River, to control destructive waters of the Tennessee River, its tributaries and the Mississippi. This great development could not have been undertaken by private companies.

The Federal Government from time to time has spent billions of dollars along the eastern and western seacoasts of this country, on the Gulf of Mexico, on the Great Lakes, and on the rivers of our country to improve navigation and to prevent floods. The first extensive expenditure of money by the Federal Government for these purposes on the Tennessee River and its tributaries began with the establishment of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Those who seek to stop the growth and halt the development of our people, are the enemies of our people. The people of this area have poured out their treasure like sand and their blood like water in the defense of this country.

Those who propose to deny our people the right to prosper and to grow might as well try to crowd a full grown eagle back into the shell from which it was hatched.

There is no more favored region in this land than eastern Tennessee. Our section is endowed with great natural resources. Our people are energetic, industrious, and they are the equal in intelligence, character, and patriotism of any other people in the land. To deprive them of their right to grow, to develop, to prosper, and to enjoy in their homes, schools, and churches the modern conveniences which can only be had by the use of electric current, would be a crime against the people of this section.

The Second Congressional District today has a population of 460,000.

In 1933, there were 219 manufacturing plants in the district. In 1946, there were 421, including the atomic energy plants at Oak Ridge, an increase, excluding Oak Ridge, of 118—39.2 percent.

In 1933, 20,694 persons were employed in manufacturing; in 1946, 58,252 persons were so employed.

In 1939, 35,404 persons were employed in trade and service; in 1946, 50,362 were so employed—an increase of 14,858—42.2 percent.

In 1939, retail sales were $79,657,000; in 1946, they were $189,732,000—an increase of $110,076,000—138.2 percent.

In 1940, the people of the district had a spendable income of $117,065,000; in 1946, they had a spendable income of $341,313,000—an increase of $24,238,000—191.6 percent.

In 1941, they had total bank deposits of $55,138,000; in 1946, they had bank deposits of $224,530,000—an increase of $169,392,000—307.2 percent.

TVA TAX REPLACEMENT

Immediately after I went to Congress, I joined hands with Senator MCKELLAR in an effort to authorize the TVA by act of Congress to refund, not only to the States, but also to the counties of each and every State affected, a just share of the income of the TVA from the sale of power, to take the place of the taxes which these States and counties had lost by reason of the Government having bought and withdrawn from taxation lands and power facilities within them, and on June 24, 1940, in the House of Representatives, I made a speech and voted in favor of giving to the counties of this district, tax replacements for the taxes that they had lost by reason of the Federal Government's purchase of property within their boundaries, and I now quote from my speech made on that occasion, which is a part of the permanent record of the Congress.

"Mr. Speaker, this bill does not make an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury for the relief of these counties in Tennessee or for any of the counties in other States where the Tennessee Valley Authority is operating which have lost taxes by virtue of the TVA purchases of reservoir lands and utility properties therein.

"This amendment simply provides that from the gross receipts from the sale of electricity made by the Tennessee Valley Authority and which is thereby withdrawn from taxation a certain amount in lieu of the taxes these States and counties have lost. The money this amendment proposes to pay to these States and counties is included within the wholesale rates at which the Tennessee Valley Authority sells this power."

In the year ending June 30, of this year, the TVA made payments in lieu of taxes to the States and counties in which this agency owns property, of $1,219,354. More than one-half of this sum—$609,677—was paid to the State of Tennessee and to counties of Tennessee in which the TVA owns property. Each and every county in the Second Congressional District received its share of this sum.

MY AID TO THE BURLEY TOBACCO GROWERS OF THE SECOND DISTRICT

Five thousand farmers in the Second Congressional District grow burley tobacco. Their yearly income from this crop is $3,000,000. When I went to Congress many of them had an allotment of only two-tenths of an acre, four-tenths of an acre and other allotments of less than 1 acre. I aided in the enactment of a law giving to each grower an allotment of not less than 1 acre. Yearly, it is necessary, in order to protect the burley growers and to continue profitable prices to obtain an appropriation, to see that the program is properly carried out, that the tobacco of the growers is properly graded, and that they are protected from imposition by the great tobacco companies.

The tobacco growers of this country receive $1,000,000,000 yearly for their crop. The Federal Government collects in taxes from the manufactured products more than $1,000,000,000.

On the last night the Congress was in session, I led the fight against an effort made by certain Congressmen to defeat a provision providing for the sale and export of tobacco during the next year in the amount of $110,000,000. I also defeated an effort that was being made to permit exports to foreign countries of American tobacco seed and tobacco plants. To do this would destroy the prosperity of the tobacco growers of our country.

THE GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

I assisted public-spirited citizens of Knox and Blount Counties in obtaining an appropriation of $110,000 to put in bridges on the road leading into Cades Cove, a section of unparalleled beauty, suitable for tourist camps and picnic grounds.

CROSSER AMENDMENT TO THE RAILWAY EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT AND PENSION ACT AND THE WOLVERTON AMENDMENT TO SAID ACT

During the Seventy-ninth Congress, I supported and helped to enact into law provisions liberalizing the Railway Retirement and Pension Act. I did this at the request of the railroad brotherhoods and other railway organizations.

On July 8, the House passed a measure introduced by Representative WOLVERTON, one of the best friends to the railway employees of this country in Congress. This amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act increases the amount payable by the provisions of section 1, together with the provisions of section 3 of retirements, annuities, and pensions payable under the Railroad Retirement Act 20 percent. The act also makes certain that the funds from which these benefits are payable shall be kept solvent.

SCHOOL LUNCHES

On March 26, 1947, an amendment was offered to the appropriation bill, appropriating $6,000,000 to supplement the school-lunch program. This was opposed by my good friend, JOHN TABER, of New York. In my support of this measure, I stated on the floor of the House: "Mr. Chairman, I have profound respect for the good judgment and integrity of my good friend from New York, but I do not subscribe to the doctrine of being penny-wise and pound-foolish. If I economize, and I am for economy, I will never economize at the expense of a hungry child. * * * If we appropriate this $6,000,000 to supplement the lunch program, it will cost each and every person in this country the stupendous sum of four mills. If there is any Member of this House who feels that he or she cannot afford to invest four mills in the minds and bodies and souls and welfare of the school children of this country, while I am not a wealthy man, I will reimburse him or her the four mills that he or she is out as a result of the adoption of this amendment." The amendment carried.

In the closing days of this Congress, I voted in favor of an appropriation for the coming year of $75,000,000 to make the school-lunch program of this country a success. I also voted in favor of adequate appropriations to carry out the soil-conservation program in which our farmers are so vitally interested.

FEDERAL AID AND EDUCATION

Since I have been in Congress, I have supported Federal aid to education. We were unable to obtain it while the Democrats were in control of both branches of Congress, and we were unable to pass the measure after the Republicans came into power. The necessity of passing this measure has been demonstrated and it is gathering strength each year in Congress. When the new Congress convenes I shall continue my fight for the investment of money in the bodies, the minds and the souls of the children of this country.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE

I have supported all appropriations carrying out the great work of the University of Tennessee. It is the head of our educational system and I have been especially active in favor of veterans' housing at the University in connection with the veterans' program being carried out by the University.

I supported and helped to pass an appropriation of $35,000,000 for this purpose.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

I have supported each and every measure passed by the Congress for the benefit of the veterans, their widows and dependents.

RELIEF FOR THE AGED

I have supported and voted in favor of all appropriations to supplement old-age assistance, aid to the blind and for increased aid for crippled and dependent children. I voted to increase assistance to needy old people $5 per month, without it being matched by the States, and also to increase monthly allotments by $3 to dependent children and to increase the monthly allotments to the blind.

TAX RELIEF

I voted in favor of and helped to pass over the President's veto the tax-reduction measure which removed more than 6,000,000 low-income-tax payers from Federal income-tax rolls. This measure will save the taxpayers of this country more than $4,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year. There are millions of people in this country who believe that the power to tax is the power to destroy. The average person who earns money has a better idea what he or she ought to do with it than President Truman.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EXPENSES

There will never be an adequate reduction of Federal expenses until we have a Republican in the White House. The savings made by this Congress would have run into billions but for the necessity for foreign relief and national defense, which will amount to more than $16,000,000,000 this year.

FIGHTS COMMUNISM

I have supported every measure to suppress the illegal and dangerous activities of Communists. I voted to deport Harry Bridges, to carry on the fight against un-American activities, to purge the Government pay rolls of Communists, and favored the measure to drag the Communist Party and all Communist organizations out into the open. I voted to make it a felony for any man or set of men to conspire to set up a communistic dictatorship in this country, controlled by Russia, and to force the members of disloyal organizations to register and disclose the names of the members and their officers, the source of their money, and what they do with it.

MY VISITS TO THE DISTRICT

Certain irresponsible persons from time to time seek to create the impression that I have never really been in Washington as a Member of Congress. There is a complete record of each and every day on which the House of Representatives has been in session since I have been a Member of it, commencing with January 3, 1940, down to Sunday morning, June 30, 1948, at 6 a. m. It is a significant fact that the people of this district will not overlook, that no one of my critics has ever been able to put his finger upon a single occasion when I was absent from Congress when a measure affecting the welfare of this country or of interest to the people of this district was considered by the House. I have never been a pole sitter. I have been active all the days of my life. I do come back to the Second Congressional District whenever I can be of service to my people back at home. How else could a Member of Congress know what the people back home are thinking and what they desire at his hands on measures affecting their interests?

I came back to Tennessee and spent days and weeks in developing the facts and preparing the cases against the election thieves, in order to have them indicted, prosecuted, tried, convicted, and removed from public office. I shall do so again if they start stealing again.

When the Federal Government filed condemnation proceedings against the hundreds of Anderson and Roane County farmers who lived in the Oak Ridge area, and sent land appraisers from Ohio and Indiana down to Tennessee to appraise Tennessee lands, and sought to take these farm lands for less than half what they were worth, I again came home at my own expense, met with these home-owners who were being forced to give up their homes, and then I went back to Washington and had a congressional committtee appointed to investigate the mistreatment handed our people by the Federal Government. I came back to Tennessee at my own expense and personally, before this investigating committee, put on witnesses in an all-day hearing at Clinton and in another all-day hearing at Kingston, and as result of the facts developed at these hearings and the report made by the committee, these farmers were paid by the Government more than $400,000 more than the Government at first offered them for their homes. This was all done at my expense, without the cost of a penny to any one of the men and women I aided.

On other occasions, I have come back to Tennessee and talked with people who did not understand how to fully explain to me in a letter their needs and their problems and who were not financially able to come to the city of Washington.

During the war an aged father and mother who had only two sons, and who had lost one during the First World War, and the other during the second while in the Air Forces in this country, came to me for assistance. The grief of this heartbroken father and mother was dry-eyed; they had shed all their tears. They explained to me their problem, which involved not only the benefits due them by the Federal Government on account of the services and death of their son, but also the adjustment of his life insurance due him by a private life-insurance company. I saw that they obtained all that was coming to them. The little mother said to me, when the work was done, "How much do I owe you?" I said to her, as I have said to many others who thought perhaps they might owe me for some of my services, "God bless you, you don't owe me 1 cent. If you had $1,000,000 you could not pay me anything."

Not so many days ago, I came back to Tennessee to speak to the graduating class at Norma, in Scott County, and on my way to the train for Washington a man who had lost a foot and been otherwise severely injured in an accident, stopped me and said that he and a friend wished to talk to me about his injury. He was undertaking to make a settlement without employing an attorney. I fully investigated the law and the facts of his case, talked to the splendid lawyers who represented the agency from whom he was seeking to collect damages, and as a result of the conference and the able assistance of his friend, this man who had been crippled for life obtained a splendid settlement of more than $16,000.

On occasions like this I have repeatedly visited my people, and as long as I represent them in Congress I expect to keep in close touch with them.

I HAVE KEPT FAITH WITH THE PEOPLE

When I first announced for Congress in 1939, I promised the people in this district that I would do all in my power to advance the material, the educational, the moral, and the spiritual development of the great people of this magnificent district. This pledge, to the extent by my ability, I have kept. I am fully conscious of the tremendous and fateful problems that confront the people of this country and it is with a sense of responsibility and humility that I offer my services to my people. I come back again to what I first said, that is, Who can best serve the people of this district in the Congress? I take pride in stating to you that I do not have an enemy in the House of Representatives, among either Republican or Democratic colleagues. I know them all and have rendered services to the great majority of them. I know personally and have supported for the past 8 years Governor Thomas E. Dewey who will be the next President of the United States. I know the able men who have contributed to his success as the Governor of New York, and who have supported and assisted him in becoming the nominee of the Republican Party for the most powerful office on this earth. Republican victory in November is assured, and I profoundly believe that such a victory will enable the American people to preserve our constitutional form of government and our system of free enterprise which is the envy and admiration of the world.

Under our system of constitutional government, the American people have enjoyed greater freedom than any other people have attained in all the 5,000 years of recorded history preceding the founding of this Republic.

Under our system of free enterprise, by free men and free women in a free country, the people of this land have made greater material progress, have achieved the highest standard of living, are better housed, better clothed, better fed, and have more of the good things of life than any other people on earth.

Our people are happy and prosperous, they face a future stored with unsurpassed opportunities and possibilities.

It is my belief that with the establishment of a firm and wise foreign policy, administered by competent men, a just and permanent peace will be established, and that the pathway of this country's progress, like the path of the just, will grow "brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

The Way to Peace and Justice

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT CROSSER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, early in life, human beings realize that, to be happy, they must be in harmony with the laws of creation, the laws of life. In his desire to preserve and continue his existence, almost the first effort of the individual is to develop the skill and ability to enable him to "make a living." For some time then, the individual engages almost exclusively in the business of caring for himself. This confining of his attention mainly to what he regards as the immediate needs of the so-called personal self delays the individual's awakening to more active consciousness of his being and of the unity of creation. When, however, the individual does begin to realize that persistence in his limited consciousness of being prevents him from experiencing the possible activities and joys of life, he then gradually arouses himself to a more complete realization of the true nature of life and of the oneness of all life. His duty to others then becomes clearer to him.

In the practical affairs of life, therefore, people begin to realize that they can enjoy harmonious existence only by helping to promote the welfare of their fellow beings, by conducting themselves in harmony with the universal law of action governing all. In other words, harmonious existence requires the individual to regard scrupulously the welfare of those whom he regards as other and separate persons.

This means, from the standpoint of human government, that there must prevail absolute justice in the control of the earth, which is the source of all material things used by mankind.

How, then, can we assure justice in the distribution of the wealth derived from the earth? The answer, in brief, should be as follows: "Discover the natural law and in harmony with it enact and administer the laws of human governments."

CONCEITED NOTIONS

The earth exists and is governed in accord with universal law which is altogether just. That law is not in any way dependent on the vain conceited notions of any human being, or group of human beings whose egotism craves the official power to direct the lives of all other people.

A proper understanding of the principles of political economy, and their correct application to the problems which distress the people, would soon bring about the reign of economic justice. The adjustment of men's conduct and actions, in harmony with the true laws of life, would thus be assured, and soon we would have the glorious rule of right with all of its joys.

Let us consider, then, the principles, which, if properly obeyed, will assure all men their rights, banish hate, and establish universal brotherhood.

HOW WEALTH IS PRODUCED

There are three factors engaged in the production of all goods. They are labor, capital, and what may be named as either natural resources, land or the earth. To assure, by law, to each of these factors its just share in what may be produced by the united action of the three factors, just named, must be the chief aim of true statesmanship.

Now, everything which people use or consume must be derived from the earth. Our first task, therefore, in our effort to find out what is the fair share of each of the three factors is to understand, first of all, what are men's rights in regard to the control of the land, called also natural resources or the earth.

First let us note that rightful ownership of anything whatsoever exists because the person claiming such ownership either has made what he claims to own or has given for it, something of equal value to someone who had rightfully acquired ownership of it.

ONE POWER CREATED ALL

One power is the sole cause of the existence of the earth's population. It is clear, too, that the power which produced the earth's inhabitants created also the earth itself. Certainly no human being ever created or could create a single particle of the earth. Reason requires us also to regard the one Power as the Father of the earth's inhabitants. If, however, the Creator is parent of the earth's beings, then we cannot reasonably believe that that power, the Father, would or could be unfair or unjust to any of His creatures. On the contrary, instead of being unfair, He has provided equal rights for all His creatures in the bounty which He has supplied.

NO ONE OWNS THE EARTH

What then, with due regard for justice to all, is the true nature of man's rights in the earth?

Surely no person could be given exclusive ownership of the earth, or any part of it, without injustice to all other beings. No; on the other hand, the natural resources, the land, is the common heritage of all mankind and must be used on the basis of equal rights to all and special privilege to none.

In order to illustrate the true nature of man's rights in the bounty called the earth, furnished by the Creator, let us suppose that we are at the beginning of history, when we find but one man on the earth. Whether you call that first man John or Adam, we may be sure that he will try to satisfy his desires with the least effort necessary. That is natural. He would, therefore, choose, for his use that part of the earth which, because of location or natural richness, will produce the largest amount of goods as the result of his labor. In other words, he would take the most productive part of the earth, and his labor would produce more from that part of the earth than it would secure from any other part of equal size.

After the first man, however, had taken possession of the best tract of land, the second man comes along and demands possession of the same tract of land.

WHEN REASON PREVAILS

The first man, of course, says that he will not give up possession because he, the first man, is the owner of the choice land. The second man then asks the first man for what reason the first man claims to be the owner, the exclusive owner, of the very best tract of land. The first man then answers: "It is mine because I saw it first." The second man then asks the first man: "Do you mean to say, because of the mere fact that the light was first reflected from this tract of land to your eyes instead of to my eyes that, therefore, you have the exclusive right and title to the best of all tracts of land?" The first man, being a reasonable person then answers: "Well, I must admit that the reason I gave you is not logical but, nevertheless, my right to this land is as good as yours." The second man also admits that to be true. In order, therefore, to assure justice to both men, it is agreed by them that whatever amount of goods may be produced from the first tract of land, more than from the next best tract of land, by the same amount and quality of labor, is clearly due to the natural advantage in the first tract of land, such as its better location, its chemical elements, or because of some other natural advantage possessed by the first tract of land.

BASIS FOR FAIR DECISION

In other words, the first tract of land has greater productive power because of its location, its natural richness, or because of some other quality given to it by the creative power. Certainly, then, the greater production from the first tract of ground is not due to either the mental effort or physical labor of any human being. Such being the case, both men are entitled to equal shares in what is produced from the first tract of land, more than what is produced by like effort from the second best tract.

It is agreed, therefore, that the first man will finish his year's work on tract No. 1, and that the second man, for the same length of time, will apply the same amount and quality of labor to the next best tract of land of like area. They agree also that whatever is produced then from the first tract of land more than what is produced from the second tract, by the same amount and quality of labor by the second man, is due to the better advantages in tract No. 1, and therefore is to be divided between the two men at the end of the year.

PRINCIPLE ALWAYS THE SAME

This assures each person of the full value of his labor and also assures him of his fair share of what is altogether due to the better advantage afforded by nature in the first tract of land.

Now, whether the number of persons on the earth is 2 or 2,000,000,000, the principle just explained applies in the same way. Whatever part of production, from any part of the natural resources, called also land, is due to better natural advantage, such part of production surely belongs rightly to all the people in common, called society. Every person, of course, must be assured of possession of the land occupied by him, for the period of time for which he pays to society, or its government, the value of the amount by which the reasonably possible production from the land, occupied by him, exceeds the reasonably possible production, from a like area of the least productive land, occupied by any person.

WHAT BELONGS TO ALL OF US

The value per year, of this difference in productive power, is what is called economic rent. Whether it be industrial land, city land, or farm land the economic rent of such land is the value of what, by a certain amount and quality of labor, it will produce more than will be produced by the same amount of labor from a like area of the least productive land occupied by anyone.

Economic rent is the amount which is justly due to society, to all the people in common, for the right granted by society for the possession of natural resources. Economic rent is, therefore, the only proper source from which Government should collect the money necessary to pay its expenses.

Instead, however, of using this just method, the method which would reward men for their industry and enterprise, resulting in better and increased production, the expense of Government has been wrongly taken by taxation, from what, by their own efforts, people have produced. This method of securing revenue to pay the expense of Government has discouraged enterprise and retarded business.

EFFECT OF UNJUST TAXES

The cost of Government has been paid from taxes unjustly collected from values created in goods produced by labor and capital. It certainly should be clear to anyone that all taxes put upon goods are penalties which hold back production. Surely, everyone can see also that such taxes increase the price of goods. They, therefore, lessen sales, because the higher becomes the price of goods the fewer are the persons who can afford to buy them and, therefore, the smaller is the amount of goods that can be sold. The demand for goods lessens, as the price of the same rises. That means less profit for the seller and less wages for employees.

The injustice and harm which results from such unjust system of taxation may be seen on every side and continue during every minute of our lives. All things men produce are taxed. The owner is taxed—in effect, fined—on account of every improvement he may make on his house, barn, garage, fence, or any other of the changes made by him, which may improve the living conditions of himself, his family, and in fact, of the whole community.

FINED FOR DOING GOOD

Instead of being encouraged to make progress and to improve the standard of life, and instead of being commended for doing so, men are taxed—fined—punished because they improve conditions. Some governments even tax the householder on account of every pane of glass he puts in windows to allow the daylight to enter his house to brighten it. Practically all of the different kinds of goods needed by the people for their welfare are taxed many, many times—in fact taxes are collected on account of the sale of everything used or consumed by people during their entire lives.

Now all taxes on building improvements and on all goods which increase people's comfort and health, must surely, unavoidably lower the standards of living and retard the progress of civilization.

All taxes on things produced by labor and capital reduce the sales of such goods. This is so because the taxes included in their cost price, increase the sale price of such goods. That, of course, makes it harder for people to buy the goods. The wages paid workers are then less, because less goods are sold, and so, of course, fewer workers are needed to produce the smaller supply of goods manufactured. That results in unemployment for many people. The unemployed compete with each other in seeking the same jobs and offer to work for less than the regular wages in order to have a means of earning a living. Prosperity and progress are delayed, because governments, to pay expenses, take by taxation a big part of what is produced by labor and capital. Men are thereby punished for their industry and discouraged in their efforts to be enterprising.

Yes, every excise tax, sales tax, and every other like tax on the sale of goods, certainly, holds back business constantly.

Nevertheless, men are taxed more and more as they become more industrious and enterprising in the production of the comforts needed for a better general standard of living. Indefensible as is the taxing of men, as they become more industrious, more enterprising, and produce more goods—there results a yet greater evil. Because of the failure to collect government expenses, from the economic rent of natural resources, it is not expensive for the holders of the same to keep the resources out of use. This results in monopoly and deprives the people of the benefit of competition.

The failure to collect the expenses of government from the economic rent of natural resources, controlled by monopolists, causes the loss of vast amounts of revenue which would provide abundantly for the very best quality of government. Instead of doing this, however, people are taxed, punished, because they have been industrious in making useful goods and in improving property to make it more comfortable, more attractive, more sanitary, and better in every way for everybody.

HANDICAPPING "FREE ENTERPRISE"

Much has been said about the importance of free enterprise and individual initiative, and yet when people earnestly try to be industrious and enterprising, they are taxed—that is, fined—punished for their intelligent effort to be enterprising and for attempting to be industrious instead of lazy.

The true principle may be stated as follows: Justice requires that men be taxed according to the value of the privilege they enjoy at the hands of society, of government, and that they should not be taxed—fined—according to the effort they make to live decently and to be better citizens, and should not be punished by a fine—called taxes—because they use their understanding and ability to be enterprising.

FAIR AND SCIENTIFIC TAXES

The collection of the cost of government, from economic rent, is the fairest and the most scientific method of securing abundant revenue for the best quality of government. The value of land, and income derived from land, results from the presence and activity of society, of the community.

The market value of the land or natural resources exists because of the presence of population. In 1626 Manhattan Island, upon which New York City is located, was bought by a group of Hollanders from Indians for $24. On December 31, 1934, the official value of the land, exclusive of improvements, was $4,600,000,000. The land in and about the Cleveland Public Square originally had so little market value that it was used for pasture. Now the value of the land within a few hundred yards of the square is measured in millions of dollars. We could give an unlimited number of examples of like experiences involving great increases in the market value of land in all parts of the country. All of such increases in value are due to the same cause, namely, the increase in population. The increase in population results in the construction of more buildings, and the erection of new buildings requires much material and the employment of many workers. All this, of course, results in better business.

The improvement and increase in business raises the market value of the ground where such business is carried on. The presence of the greater population, the larger community, increases business, and the improved business increases the market value of the land. The value of the land was not created by the person who by chance may have had title to the land. Instead, the presence of the larger population, the larger community caused the increase in the value of the land.

COMMUNITY RIGHTS STRESSED

The yearly income paid to the owner of land was not in any sense earned by the owner but was due altogether to the presence of a greater number of people whose activity and enterprise helped to improve business in general. Certainly, then, the community which has caused the increased income from the land is entitled to collect from that income the cost of the community government.

It will now be admitted, I am sure, that serious injustice and great wrong have been suffered by the people because of the unjust and the unwise methods of taxation commonly used by governments to secure money to pay their expenses.

We have shown that land values and the income or interest on the values created by the presence of a larger population, the larger community, have not been paid to society, to the people as a whole, whose presence, industry, and enterprise created the land values and the income or interest paid on them.

PRIVATE PERSONS PROFIT

No; on the contrary, the increased land values and the income on the same have been handed over to private persons who were neither the cause of nor the creators of the land values or the interest or income paid on same.

The community's loss of the income on these increased land values, handed over to privileged private persons, is bad enough and violates every principle of justice. To add insult to injury, however, after giving the economic rent to private persons, we next find that such governments, in order to pay their expenses, rob the people, legally, of course, of what they produce by their labors. If the family improves the home then it is taxed—fined. If people erect buildings and increase the value of the land in the neighborhood, they are taxed for putting up the buildings which improve the community.

LOW TAX ON IDLE LAND

On the other hand, the persons who hold their land idle—while it increases in value because of their neighbor's work, enterprise, improvements, and building—are not taxed, or are taxed but little on their increased land values. Taxes are put upon everything people make or buy from other makers to improve their standard of living, and improve community life. Business is retarded, the progress of civilization is slackened and halted because men are taxed—punished—for producing, to sell, things needed for the health, comfort, and refinement of the people in general.

There is a wrong, however, far greater even and much more harmful to the people than the loss of money caused by the failure to collect revenue from the land values created by the public; a wrong even greater than the taking by taxation, from the people, of a part of the value of what they produce by their labor to supply the needs of society and to make life more wholesome and pleasant.

OPENS THE WAY FOR MONOPOLIES

That evil consists of the monopolies, the power given to a few persons, as a result of the failure to collect from such persons the expenses of government from the values created, added to the land, by the presence and activity of the people, the community.

This failure to collect the cost of government from the income, created by the community's presence and activity, makes it possible and easy for the monopolists to hold out of use, or to use but inefficiently, the land or resources, in their possession. They can and do hold out of use, the land, the resources, because their refusal or failure to use them costs them little or nothing. While the land is held idle they are relieved of the necessity of exerting any effort. They need not use funds they may have, to carry on any business. The greatest wrong of all, however, consists of the fact that they can and do prevent other people from using the land.

WOULD SOLVE THE WAGE PROBLEM

Collecting the expenses of government, from economic rent, would make it impossible for anybody to monopolize the natural resources and to hold them for speculative purposes. The holders of land would be compelled, then, to make good use of the land or natural resources, in order to have the money to pay their taxes. Because the monopolizers would be compelled to use the natural resources, in order to have money to pay their taxes, they would need workers and there would thus be created a demand for labor. The owners of land, of natural resources, throughout the country, would be influenced and act in the same way and all industry, commerce, and agriculture would therefore flourish. Unwilling idleness would soon be unknown, and the so-called wage problem would settle itself. The wage problem would no longer exist because, if men were not paid fair wages and given good working conditions, they could go to fairminded employers who would be glad to hire them on just terms.

STRIKING EXAMPLE GIVEN

To illustrate what has just been said, let us suppose, for example, that all the known oil lands were located in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, and one or a few men were to have title to the full and unlimited ownership and control of the same, and could hold it out of use by paying trifling taxes amounting to not much more than the taxes on poor farm land, this is what would likely happen: The holders of such oil lands would use such part of the lands as might be required to supply kerosene—coal oil—to the people burning the same to make what was, at the time, a new kind of light. The oil landholders could then raise the price of coal oil as high as they might please, unless they should make the price so high as to cause people to stop using coal oil and to begin again to burn candles for light. Moreover, since the owners would be the only employers of expert oil workers, the monopolists could constantly reduce the wages paid the expert oil workers, unless they should reduce such wages to or below the level of unskilled workers' wages, and thus drive the oil workers to accept employment at work requiring no special skill.

GREAT RICHES NOT EARNED

We have here noted, and explained the injustice which was the sure result of permitting the private monopoly of oil lands. Like injustice would result from permitting the private monopoly of other natural resources such as iron-ore land, copper-ore land, zinc-ore land, lead-ore land, other kinds of ore land and land underlaid with coal, or land which, because of the presence of a large population, is valuable for factory or business purposes.

Private monopoly of natural resources, of any part of the earth, makes it possible for the few who are given such monopoly to accumulate great wealth, which they do not earn by either manual labor or mental effort. A far worse evil than the possession, by monopolists, of their unearned wealth, however, is the power which enables monopolists to keep others from using the land, the resources. Because monopolists are required to pay so little in taxes that they need not use the land to earn the taxes, the land remains idle without any risk to the holder, while it increases in value.

DEVELOP OR PERISH

The collection of the expenses of government from economic rent would put an end to the dog-in-the-manger monopoly control of the natural resources, and in no other way can monopoly be prevented. If even the larger part of the economic rent of land, of the natural resources, possessed by him, were collected from the owner to pay the expense of government, it would be necessary for him either to make good use of it himself or to allow someone else to use it. If he were to hold it without making good use of it, he could not afford to pay the tax, because he would be making no income with which to pay the taxes or rent. If he did not pay the taxes, someone else would do so and would have, then, the right to use the land. To make use of the land, however, it would be necessary for its new possessor to employ workmen and that would improve employment conditions, increase wages, and increase business in general.

COMPETITION NEVER TESTED

Whether or not the possessor may have properly used the land, the expenses of government should be collected, of course, from economic rent. The economic rent exists because of the presence and activity of society, that is, of all the people, and the failure of the holders of land to use it is no excuse for not paying what they owe to the people, to the community. Moreover, its proper use, as required by justice to all the people, would produce the money to pay the taxes, and would also provide fair compensation for the user.

By the champions of that kind of government, which is planned to be administered according to the personal discretion and direction of official agents, we have been told that competition has been tried and has failed. On the contrary, the fact is that, in modern times, there has been no opportunity for true competition. Competition in the fundamental sense has not had a real trial.

FEW COULD NOT ROB THE MANY

Control of the great bulk of natural resources is in the hands of a comparatively few persons. The possession and control, of the greater part of the valuable natural resources, commercial sites and industrial land, enables the holders of the same, however, to put into their pockets large profits created by the presence and activity of large populations.

After the monopolists have taken the unearned increment from what has been produced, the rank and file of the people are allowed to scramble with each other for a miserable existence out of what is left. Obedience to the principle, which I have discussed, would make it impossible for the few, even legally, to thus rob the many.

There has now been pointed the way to economic justice. When, in accordance with the principle just discussed, the reign of right will prevail, we shall cease to be harassed by industrial strife. The feeling of hatred and opposition will cease, and in their stead the spirit of cooperation and brotherhood will prevail.

THERE IS A PERFECT LAW

In the early part of these remarks I urged: "Discover the natural law and, in harmony with it, enact and administer the laws of human governments." Whether we call it the law of life, the law of nature, the law of creative power, there certainly exists perfect law and the adjustment of men's actions and conduct in harmony with that law will assure liberty and perfect happiness. Thomas Jefferson said: "The God who gave us life gave us liberty." We must understand, however, that human beings do not and cannot create justice. They can only discover, that is, become conscious of justice and its laws, established for the harmonious control of the universe. Men's actions and conduct and the laws of human governments should be brought into adjustment, into harmony with the law of creation.

SEE GRANDEUR OF CREATION

Often we hear the question: "Will there ever be adopted, by governments, as ruling law, the great principle, the fundamental and certain remedy, which I have just explained, for the brutal and cruel economic injustice which has caused such age-long suffering?"

For answer let me relate that many years ago, on a warm Sunday afternoon, in my room in a boarding house on Arch Street, Allegheny, in which city I was working for a few months prior to entering Cincinnati Law School, after graduating from Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, I had just finished an intense, thorough study of the subject which I have just discussed. I put down the book and lay on my back on my bed. In a few minutes, I arose and began writing the lines which were finished a little later and which indicated my feeling as to the question just stated. I quote the lines, as follows:

Poetic lore has often told
Of nature's blessings, manifold;
And humbler prose, perhaps in mirth,
Proclaims men equal on this earth.

If this be true, why do we see
The wretches men oft seem to be;
Why see the poor forsaken waif
Searching in vain for shelter safe?

One child, of God, first sees the light,
Surrounded by gold and linen white;
Another, nature's canopy sees,
The earth his cradle, e'en that not his.

With dirge and funeral rites they lay
The miser in his downy grave;
But yonder poor old tott'ring serf
Can hardly reach kind nature's berth.

How can we, suff'ring then, behold
God's blessings ruled by weight of gold,
His word construed by greedy wealth,
His off'rings filched with sneaking stealth?

Courage, then, ye men, yet strong,
Gird up your loins, go join the throng,
Battle for freedom, long sung by the muse,
Leave not a foeman, head no flag of truce.

And when the din of battle's o'er,
And selfish greed shall reign no more,
We'll hasten forth, proclaiming then,
Peace on earth, good will toward men.

These lines indicated my youthful confidence and enthusiasm for the great cause just discussed and after 50 years, the unwavering confidence of my youth is unhesitatingly confirmed by my more mature judgment. Right must and will triumph.

The unfettered operation of the principle which we have discussed would assure all men just compensation for their service and would give assurance of profitable employment at all times.

No longer then in fear of oppressors; no longer the victim of want or the fear of want, men's moral courage will be awakened and joyously will they obey their best impulses. In their spirit of freedom and with gladness, men will eagerly embrace the glorious principles of justice and they will earnestly strive to express the universal harmony of life. Then will disappear the meanness, the jealousy, the envy, and hatred which now blight the lives of men.

In the sublime cause of brotherhood, with songs of joy pealing from their hearts, with the spirit of justice shining from their eyes and in perfect unison will march the sons of men. Then will men be freemen and the grandeur of creation will be manifest throughout the land.

The Voice of America: An Adventure in International Understanding

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to avail myself of the opportunity, before the Congress adjourns, to express my personal satisfaction at the successful establishment of the permanent Voice of America program during the present session. As sponsor of the legislation authorizing the State Department to promote United States foreign policy by disseminating information abroad, I have taken a profound interest in this important work and look forward through the years to its increasing effectiveness.

It has been the bad luck, even the fate, of the Voice of America to draw down upon itself spasmodic torrents of criticism, that is domestic criticism, because of certain defects in its total output. The recent storm of protest over certain broadcasts about the American States sent to South America by the National Broadcasting Co. is certainly a case in point; and the details are so well known that there is no need to exhume them here. In my opinion, this unfortunate episode might have been sufficient to wipe out, or at least seriously curtail, the whole program a year or two ago when many people were not so convinced of the necessity of this operation as they are today.

But the interesting fact was that neither the House nor the Senate for a moment considered obliterating the Voice of America because of these scripts. The attitude of Congress—made amply clear during the hearings on the subject and demonstrated even more effectively by the passage of a $28,000,000 appropriation for the program—was simply this: How can we eliminate the possibility of further errors and make the Voice of America a better instrument of the Government? This in itself was proof that the Voice of America has progressed far beyond the pro-and-con stage. Congress and the public at large showed that they were solidly behind the program itself. The argument is now not an argument over principle but over ways and means to improve the product.

Consequently I do not believe there is any need for me to restate the case for the Voice of America, beyond recalling briefly the importance to this program of the visits which many Members of Congress paid to several European countries last summer. Our first-hand observations of Communist propaganda in action and the inadequacy of the United States information service convinced us more than anything else that America must marshal its forces in the great world battle of ideologists. The Committee to Investigate the United States Information Service in Europe, which was under the joint chairmanship of Senator SMITH of New Jersey and myself, summed up its findings in this key sentence: "The United States must take positive and aggressive steps to carry the true story of her ideals, motives, and objectives to a demoralized and groping Europe."

Through legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress—the so-called Smith-Mundt bill—the way for telling of this story has been opened. Staffs of the United States Information Service and the Voice of America are to be increased and some $6,000,000 will be spent on the expansion of relay facilities to strengthen the signal of America broadcasts to Europe and the Far East.

However, in looking toward the future let's not neglect the very real accomplishments of the Voice of America thus far. Indeed, it is about the demonstrated effectiveness of these radio broadcasts that I wish to talk for a few moments today. There is, of course, nothing in the field of international broadcasting that compares to the well-known Hooper ratings employed by our big domestic broadcasting outlets. But there are alternative methods for determining the existence of a large listening audience. Take letters, for example.

I wonder if it is generally known that the Voice of America, by official count, has received more than 220,000 letters, the great majority of them from European listeners, since January 1946, and that this figure in all probability exceeds that of any other shortwave broadcasting operation in the world, including the BBC and Moscow radio. At one point the New York headquarters of the Voice was receiving letters at the rate of 20,000 to 25,000 a month, which definitely put it far out in front of the BBC's European service. It must be remembered that the Voice of America, unlike some of our domestic radio programs, is not able to offer listeners free refrigerators or vacuum cleaners. It offers only what the listener hears. At the same time it is expensive and even inconvenient to write to the United States from abroad. And yet people, literally thousands of people, are sufficiently interested to comment on the programs. I have had the opportunity of reading some of these letters, either in English or in translation, and I am sure that a few excerpts may interest the House.

I was particularly attracted to a letter from a Mr. Jandacek, who fled to western Germany from Prague after the Communist seizure of power in Czechoslovakia and who is now in this country. He writes:

The broadcasts of the Voice of America to Czechoslovakia are daily becoming more and more popular. Increasing numbers of people are listening. People listen as if they were hearing the Gospel. The tortured people of Czechoslovakia, deprived of true democracy, are awaiting every word of yours with impatience. All the political refugees from Czechoslovakia who listen daily to every word of yours, send their hearty and sincere thanks to you and ask you to continue this good work and to expose all the Communist measures for what they are.

There was another letter from a Czechoslovak listener which stresses the value of broadcasting information into the iron-curtain countries. This one came from an engineering student in Prague whose name I am withholding for fear of getting the young man into trouble with the Communist regime there. He says:

I have been listening to the broadcasts of the Voice of America and am very satisfied. You surprised me when you said in your publication of the Soviet-German dealings that Stalin toasted Hitler. It is a pity that we never hear of such things here, but, of course, the newspapers would not publish it and even less so our radio. If your information is based on reliable sources, then this certainly does not look like honest politics.

I will go on to Poland, the Balkans, and the Soviet Union shortly, but allow me first to tell you a little about the mail from western Europe. In this part of the continent, of course, both the regimes and the people are overwhelmingly friendly toward the United States and this friendship is clearly reflected in letters sent to the Voice of America. Germany has been the largest single producer of correspondence, accounting for practically half the mail received. Now there is an interesting point to be made about the German mail which reveals certain changes in German thinking about the United States.

At first the Germans seemed to be morbidly preoccupied with their own affairs and sent in a large number of requests for personal favors such as food and clothing. More recently, however, they have exhibited a much greater interest in the United States, and especially in its scientific and technical progress. For example, here is a typical request from a German listener today:

Would it be possible to broadcast information about the American automobile industry? About its development since 1933, its sales promotion, prices, the difference between European and American car designs.

It goes without saying that the Voice honors requests for information of this kind immediately and often sends the actual script to the listener. The Voice of America naturally broadcasts a great deal of news and analysis which might be described as primarily political in nature, but I was truly amazed in reading many of these letters to discover the extraordinary thirst in Europe for talks and features on scientific and industrial subjects. The explanation for this is, of course, quite obvious. Under the Nazi occupation, Europe was cut off from new technical developments and Europeans are now endeavoring to catch up.

For example, one of the most popular programs in Italy, judging by listener mail, is the University of the Air series. Now, personally, I found some of these scripts almost too technical for my taste, and yet the fact is that Italians are particularly fond of this sort of material. The subjects vary all the way from Frequency Modulation Broadcasting in the United States to Recent Advances in Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels. In each case a recognized expert is brought in to the Voice of America studios to record his talk. It then goes out by short wave, is picked up by the Italian radio system, and relayed by standard wave all over Italy. New York has had reports that Italians not only look forward eagerly to this program but that in one Italian village all the local citizens turn out around the only radio receiver in town to hear these broadcasts.

One Sicilian wrote in to the Voice to say:

Listen, please, can I have some books for to read. Please, I'll pay for the cost. God bless to you and all American people.

Still another Italian wrote:

Now that we hear your voice we feel bound to America by a feeling of brotherhood and love.

In France the most popular program is "A Vos Ordres," which means literally "At Your Service." This particular broadcast is relayed by the French national radio at a good listening time on what we would generally call a coast-to-coast hook-up. French radio officials have stated that A Vos Ordres is as popular as their best domestic program, which means that this Voice of America presentation has a steady audience of around 1,000,000 listeners. Here again, it should be pointed out, the French have demonstrated that they share with the Germans and Italians the desire to hear talks on scientific subjects. (I might insert parenthetically here that whereas the BBC is listened to in France for its English lessons by radio, the Voice of America is considered the best authority on technical matters.) Some time ago A Vos Ordres carried a series of talks on new treatments for tuberculosis, and the Voice received literally hundreds of requests for copies of the scripts. Another 700 listeners wrote in to New York for scripts of talks dealing with deafness. Now, it may be asked why people unable to hear wanted this material. I know that this question occurred to me, but I learned that the letters came from people who were partially deaf or from the relatives and friends of deaf people.

The mail from France and Italy totals roughly 65,000 letters, which is somewhat below the volume from Germany but quite a bit above the total correspondence received from eastern Europe or the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, there is a steady trickle of mail from countries like Poland, Rumania, and Hungary, indicating that some people at least are not too afraid to write. Stanislav Mikolajczyk, the Polish Peasant Party leader, said after his escape to this country:

The Voice of America is speaking quite plainly. The Polish people are turning more and more to it, and it keeps up their morale.

Perhaps I should note here that the Voice of America broadcasts to Poland and in particular its coverage of Mr. Mikolajczyk's newspaper articles circulated in the United States drew an official protest from the Polish Government. Later on the Polish representatives at the United Nations Conference on freedom of information held in Geneva accused the Voice of America of all sorts of chicanery in its Polish service. I do not take the official reasons for these protests too seriously, but I think they do show that the Communist Government in Poland is considerably worried by the effectiveness of the Voice of America among the Polish people.

My own inclination is to rely more upon the official Communist reactions to the Voice of America as indications of a a large listening audience in the iron curtain countries than upon the actual mail received. I have read a number of attacks on our short-wave broadcasts by Moscow, Bucharest, Budapest, Sofia, and Belgrade and I am surprised at their vehemence. To tell the truth, I was shown nearly 60 Communist broadcasts which belabored the Voice of America over the past 5 months. There was one in particular which struck me as fairly transparent Soviet propaganda and one which may amuse the House. It was a long commentary in the Moscow English service to North America arguing that the taxpayers of the United States had no idea of what the Voice of America was doing in their name. Allow me to quote a few sentences from this broadcast:

The Voice of America gives a thoroughly false picture of life in America in the field of economy. If the American man on the street could see how the Voice of America, which is subsidized from the national budget, is trying to picture his life to Europeans, he would be simply enraged. The Voice of America would like to convince Europeans that since inheritance taxes were introduced in the United States property is not concentrated in the hands of one small group in the population. But who doesn't know that as a result of the Second World War, the biggest monopolies in the United States have become even wealthier and more powerful. Europeans, the Soviet people in particular, regard all this tripe as further indication of the domination of reaction in the United States.

But I think the most revealing Communist commentaries on the Voice of America are those which appear in the Soviet press or over the Soviet home radio service and which are exclusively designed for the Soviet public. In this connection, I have read Soviet newspaper articles or radio talks which attempt to refute almost point by point specific talks broadcast by the Voice of America to the U. S. S. R. Generally these Soviet replies to the Voice indicate an extraordinary sensitivity on the part of the regime to economic discussions; that is factual talks from New York on the way the American worker lives, the function of his trade-union, how many hours he has to work for a pair of shoes, a suit of clothes, and so on. Indeed, I sometimes think we could scream our heads off about Soviet tyranny or brutality and Moscow would ignore us. But let us mention ever so casually that an American worker drives to his job in a new car and the orders seem to go out at once from the Kremlin to brand the Voice of America as the tool of reactionary American capitalists.

There is plenty of evidence of this sensitivity on Moscow's part. For example, on June 4, the Moscow radio in a program for the Soviet home audience had this to say:

> The United States radio deliberately paints a rosy picture of the life of workers in the United States. The United States radio claims that the United States farmer belongs to one of the most prosperous groups of the population. The New York radio recently affirmed (although the fact is that no such statement has ever been made by the Voice of America) that 42 percent of all United States farms are in California (sic) and that over half of them have electric power at their disposal. There are, of course, farms in the United States which can avail themselves of all the benefits enumerated. They belong to big landowning capitalists. Their number, however, does not exceed one-third of the total number of farms.

This is just another demonstration that the Communist regime in Moscow realizes that our Voice of America broadcasts are having an effect upon the unhappy victims of godless communism in Russia.

The Voice of America was at a loss to explain where Moscow could have come across such a figure—it was never used in any broadcast—but the important element to note was Moscow's official disbelief in the extent of American rural electrification.

The Moscow News, an English language newspaper published in the Soviet Capital, which I used to read regularly while I was in Russia, reports that a team of Soviet correspondents held a mass interview with workers in the Lenin electrical machine-building plant in Moscow in regard to claims made by the Voice of America. The Soviet newspaper frankly acknowledged that many of the workers had heard the Voice of America and specifically a program devoted to a comparison of Soviet and American prices in terms of work published by the New York Times. The purpose of the Moscow news article, of course, was to prove that the workers had not believed what they heard. One worker said:

> That Voice of America is a good boomerang. What it does is to make us leery of that Voice.

One is forced to ask why this Soviet worker continues to listen.

It should also be said that Moscow devotes an inordinate amount of air time to undermining, or attempting to undermine the veracity of Voice of America broadcasts to the countries in the Soviet orbit. Here, for example, is Moscow broadcasting to Bulgaria:

> From time to time the Voice of America broadcasts in Bulgarian detailed surveys in which it attempts to slander the conditions under which workers are living in Bulgaria. At the same time, the Voice of America does not mince words in order to prove how well and happily the American workers and peasants live.

The Moscow broadcast then goes on to convince the Bulgarian worker that his own lot is just this side of paradise, or take Moscow broadcasting to Czechoslovakia:

> The voice of the American people is not the Voice of America broadcast from New York. The true Voice of America could recently be heard in the streets of New York which witnessed a May-day celebration never before seen in this city. More than 100,000 people, supported by the sympathies of 150,000 additional onlookers, paraded through the streets of New York under the banners and slogans expressing the will and the wishes of the American masses.

Needless to say, this was a highly exaggerated reference to the Communist May-day parade in New York. It was another attempt of the Russians to decrease the effectiveness of Voice of America broadcasts.

Unfortunately I cannot provide the House with excerpts from all or even most of these attacks on the Voice of America, which, I should add, are heartily joined in by the Communist regime in the Balkan countries. I am, however, reluctant to omit one reference to the Voice which, if accurate, would represent one of the most astounding feats of remote control in history.

I do not know if Members of the House are closely acquainted with the vicissitudes of Balkan politics, but the largest political party in Hungary used to be the small landholders, most of whom have now been absorbed by the Communists. The decision to join the Communists was made by the party leaders, although the rural faction of the party held out and decided to hold a meeting in Budapest. The report of the meeting was broadcast to Hungary by New York and 100 dissident party members did, in fact, assemble in the Hungarian Capital. "This meeting," protested the party president, a Communist collaborator, "was called by the Voice of America."

In bringing to you these clear evidences of Communist concern over the effectiveness of American broadcasts to the U. S. S. R. and to eastern Europe, I have perhaps underplayed other indications of listening. I might have mentioned the periodic reports received from foreigners who travel to distant points in the Soviet Union and who let our officials know about comments on the broadcasts by Soviet citizens.

I might also have given greater stress to the fact that Moscow is intentionally jamming our broadcasts, particularly those beamed on far-eastern Russia over our Manila relay station. This practice on the part of the U. S. S. R. has been officially protested, to no avail, by the State Department. Our Munich relay, I am happy to state, continues to throw a good to average signal into the Soviet Union, and engineering experts believe that additional relay facilities will assure that our programs will be heard in most parts of Russia.

Further, I have not touched at all the effectiveness of our broadcasts to Latin America and the Far East. Latin America, I should report is not only interested in our short-wave broadcasts but likes especially the music and dramatic-type programs recorded in New York and shipped down for local broadcasts. Several radio stations in China think enough of the Voice of America to pick up our broadcasts in the Chinese language and transmit them to the local audience. Thousands of letters from both Latin America and the Far East, of course, attest to the existence of a steady audience, in these two important areas. I have dwelt more on the European phase of the operation, however, in view of the fact that at the moment the United States is concentrating its efforts there in this so-called war of words.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I would be the last to say the Voice of America operation is today operating with perfection. It is still a new American venture and for some time it is likely to be subject to growing pains, and it will require the constructive criticism and the helpful guidance of many Americans to enable it steadily to improve its quality and effectiveness. However, it has already demonstrated its great value. It is making friends for freedom and for America all over the world. So much has been heard in criticism of its mistakes that I concluded to make this talk to give emphasis to some of its successes.

If the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System should decline and refuse to cooperate with the State Department on a workable basis whereby the State Department would specify the purpose and the content of the programs and the broadcasting companies would provide their best talent in helping to put the programs into the most acceptable form then, Mr. Speaker, I submit the State Department should develop its own talent and project its own programs because so useful a service to peace and freedom must not end. And sooner or later, I feel certain private radio companies will provide the helpful, talented, and useful cooperation this broadcasting program so richly deserves.

Properly staffed and financed and with adequately relay facilities, the Voice of America can become the greatest voice for democracy on the international air waves. The Eightieth Congress has sent it off to a good start. Let us all cooperate in making the Voice of America a success in a venture which can have unprecedented results in terms of American security and world peace.

On the Dangers of Withdrawing From Politics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WAYNE MORSE
OF OREGON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement entitled "On the Dangers of Withdrawing From Politics," sent to me by Mrs. Julius Metzger, of Springfield, Mass.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ON THE DANGERS OF WITHDRAWING FROM POLITICS

There is today a widespread and deeply permeating sense that our society, its leaders and ourselves, are repeatedly facing problems that cannot be solved. Bad temper, demands for loyalty, and threats of violence are taking the place of deliberation and agreement upon which our political order is built.

Partly in despair and horror at this breakdown in affairs, and partly by inattention and default, many individuals and groups have withdrawn from the active common efforts by which society pays attention to its common business. In the name of nonpartisanship and political neutrality the more intelligent organs of the community have ostracized themselves, have gone into political exile, or have accepted the status of proletarians, citizens who are in but are not of the political community. This is true of labor, of professionals, of teachers, of engineers and scientists, and of many businessmen. They look upon their Government as on a foreign power which at best they tolerate as a nuisance, or as at worst a corruption they cannot remedy.

The fact is that there are few things that a man ought to do that he can do without the help of his fellows. This has always been true but it is fatefully true today because a mechanical industrial society operating under clocks and bank balances has locked us together in a rapidly tightening system of collaboration. Our private wills and skills are caught in a social net so that a single shock in any particular part is felt throughout the system. A passing mood or thought in one individual may make or break the sense of security that we call human brotherhood.

In the past we have assumed that individual rights did not have collective implications, that cooperation, like charity, was a matter of temperament and good sportsmanship. In the joy of spontaneous teamwork and good feeling, we have dispensed with the effort that goes into those reasonable agreements openly arrived at, that are the essence of good laws.

We need to rediscover for ourselves that each and every man is a political animal, that his reason and his happiness depend upon his awareness of the political consequences of his every choice and act; that if he does not operate under open agreements openly arrived at, his life will be nasty, brutish, and short; that if he does not make public business his own personal business, a common and unmanageable evil will take the place of the common good, and that this evil will take the shape of a beast who thinks he is a god. The ordinary citizen's present belief that he is either above or below politics is not only the sign of the end of democracy, but of the end of reasonable human life.

When society in the past has reached this stage, it has frequently renewed and heightened its sense of political responsibility, and upon doing so, it has discovered that the insoluble problems have disappeared. In their places have appeared new and unthought of projects and with them new levels of common life and work. There have been new births of freedom under law.

In the words of Alexander Hamilton, which might have been written yesterday: "It has been frequently remarked that it seems to have been reserved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important question, whether societies of men are really capable or not of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend for their constitutions on accident and force. If there be any truth in the remark, the crisis at which we are arrived may with propriety be regarded as the era in which that decision is to be made; and a wrong election of the part we shall act may, in this view, deserve to be considered as the general misfortune of mankind."

One of the implications of these sentences from Hamilton is that this country has a political responsibility for the whole world for all mankind. The invention of a federal republic as a model of government by reflection and choice, was in part a fulfillment of our responsibility. A necessary part of that government was our Bill of Rights. This Bill of Rights is now in danger from outside and inside our country. Perhaps the first duty of every citizen today is to reexamine this cornerstone to see whether we still believe in reflection and choice now for the whole world, or whether we will trust ourselves to the accidents of war and the dictates of force.

We have already allowed the external danger to curtail our freedom of choice in many vital issues. Communism is a threat because we no longer consider it an alternative for our choice. "Force is the only thing they understand." This is the meaning of the loyalty order, the investigations of the Un-American Activities Committee, and the Mundt bill. It might be well to submit our whole Bill of Rights, together with these measures for a review, deliberation, and decision by the people.

The clear and present danger at present seems to be the loss of our civil liberties and therefore, the subversion of our Government by our own acts. If we lose them by default, there will be little point in defending ourselves by force.

Such loss of our civil liberties at the moment is threatened by a final enactment of the Mundt bill which only a few days ago was passed by the House by an amazing majority. Thank heaven it has yet to be passed by the Senate and approved by the President before it becomes law. Two articles which recently appeared in a western Massachusetts newspaper set forth the dangers to our civil liberties much more clearly, succinctly, and incisively than any original words of mine could possibly do so. I quote:

"Restrictive legislation of such drastic character could be justified only by a clear and present danger. We are unable to see that the danger of communism in this country is present, and it appears no nearer than it has been for the past decade.

"The bill, therefore, seems to us a reflection of a phobia that would be ridiculous if it were not so serious. The particularly painful aspect of the House action is that it cannot be blithely discounted as an unimportant manifestation of political hysteria. Such a reaction is stupid. It will be the cause of more hysteria and irresponsibility since hysteria, like fear, grows malignant and dangerous by feeding on itself.

"If it becomes a law, it will certainly operate to intimidate anyone who disagrees with the Government on anything and cause every critic of the administration or of Congress to preface any criticism by a protest that the critic is not a Communist. In other words, it will tend to put all Government opposition on the defensive and give a potential advantage to every standpatter, chauvinist, reactionary, self-interested flag waver and patrioteer.

"The House of Representatives has approved a piece of legislation the like of which has never been seen under the American form of government with its guaranty of freedom to speak, freedom to worship, and freedom to vote. It would give to the Attorney General of the United States powers so broad that he could regulate and coerce the thought of millions of Americans.

"They—distracted by the problems of living in a period of soaring inflation—are hardly aware of what is at stake. It is high time that they understand the issue.

"In my opinion, that bill threatens the foundation of the house of freedom. It gives a grant of almost dictatorial power that could be used not merely to check the Communist conspiracy but to end all independence of thought in this country.

"The bill in section 4 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person 'to attempt in any manner to establish in the United States a totalitarian dictatorship, the direction and control of which is vested in, or exercised by or under the domination or control of any foreign government, foreign organization, or foreign individual.' It goes on with even more specific language and provides penalties including imprisonment up to 10 years.

"As Representative JOHN CARROLL, of Colorado, pointed out in the debate, this would include the Communist Party, and therefore the bill outlaws the party even though its sponsors say it does not do so. Harold Stassen said the same thing in his debate with Governor Dewey.

"Under the bill, Communist-front organizations must register with the Attorney General and publicly make known, in a variety of ways, the fact that they are Communist-front organizations. The bill sets up four tests to determine whether a 'front' is under the control of a Communist political organization.

"The fourth test is the position taken or advanced by it (the front) from time to time on matters of policy. If it fails to pass 'some or all' of the tests, then it is reasonable to conclude that it is a front organization and therefore subject to the law. This conclusion can be reached if the Attorney General decides that the front's views and policies are in general adopted and advanced because such views or policies are those of a Communist political organization, a Communist foreign government, or the world Communist movement.

"One of the 'methods commonly used' by Communist political organizations, the bill sets forth, is 'the inciting of economic, social and racial strife, and conflict.' It is not hard to see how the power granted to the Attorney General could be stretched to cover any organization or individual advocating social or economic change of any kind.

"Here, in my opinion, is the essence of the danger. The power granted the Attorney General would not have to be stretched very far to cover organizations proceeding in a wholly American way to advocate reforms that might not be popular with the majority or with powerful minorities. Judicial review is provided, but this remedy would come after an organization had been publicly branded as Communist."

The Draft

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. NORRIS COTTON

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 18 (legislative day of Thursday, June 17), 1948

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, no more perplexing and disturbing problem has confronted the Eightieth Congress than the question of resorting to a peacetime draft to strengthen the armed forces of the United States. Each Member has had to face this question and satisfy his own conscience and his own sense of responsibility to his country in deciding his vote. The decision was a hard one to make not only because of the intense and bitter convictions for and against the measure on the part of those whom we here represent, but more because we are keenly conscious that our vote on this question involves a great principle of far-reaching consequence and affects the individual lives and liberties of many thousands of our fellow citizens.

The first question to be determined is whether this is a peace measure or a war measure. There are those who believe that the building up of our armed forces by compulsory draft of manpower will make this Nation a warlike and militaristic people and serve as a threat to other nations, thus making them more unfriendly and belligerent and that it will, in short, lead us down the road to war. If this belief is sound, obviously the measure should have been defeated. Let us examine the facts.

If history and the counsel of great Americans throughout the years of our national life has taught us anything, it has taught us that adequate preparedness leads to peace, not war. In 1780, General Washington said:

> There is nothing so likely to produce peace as to be well prepared to meet an enemy.

Grover Cleveland, in his first annual message, said:

> The nation that cannot resist aggression is constantly exposed to it.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, on the eve of World War II, said:

> We have learned the old, old lesson that probability of attack is mightily decreased by the assurance of an ever-ready defense.

Prior to our entrance into World War I, when all the world was aflame with conflict, we persisted in a policy of unpreparedness and strove by rigid neutrality to avoid war. We found ourselves inevitably drawn into the conflict and had not other western democracies borne the brunt of the battle until we could marshal and prepare our forces we would have fallen an easy victim to imperial Germany.

Subsequent to World War I, we embarked upon a program of disarmament and, even when the clouds of World War II were gathering, did little to prepare. We found ourselves again at war. An examination of the secret documents of Hitler's government discloses the fact that Nazi Germany struck because of the known weakness of England and France, and the known inability of America to render them immediate assistance. In United States Document No. 789PS, Hitler's statement at the beginning of the war is quoted:

> The decision to strike was always in me. * * * Now there is a relationship of forces which can never be more propitious. * * * Our opponents have disarmed themselves of their own accord.

Again we were saved because of the desperate defense of our allies who gave us time for last-minute preparation.

There are no friendly nations now strong enough to be our first line of defense in another emergency.

Is it true that an adequate national defense antagonizes other nations, weakens our efforts to secure world understanding, and hampers our diplomatic negotiations for peace?

Secretary of State Marshall on March 17 of this year said to a committee of Congress:

> Diplomatic action, without the backing of military strength in the present world, can lead only to appeasement. * * *

He was asked this question:

> In dealing on a diplomatic level with these nations, would it be of advantage for these nations to know that the temper of the American people has changed; that they are perfectly willing to prepare in time of peace to stand ready for instant action?

Secretary Marshall replied:

> I think the psychological effect is the great immediate importance of the action * * * it would make plain to the world that we are going to be strong in a military way and that we are determined to back up our course.

Former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes said:

> The United Nations can never preserve peace unless the great powers have the strength to maintain the peace, and if we are to fulfill our own obligations in this regard, and to insist upon the enforcement of law in the world, we must be willing to implement our foreign policy with whatever force is necessary to make it effective. * * * Moreover, military strength on our part is essential if we are going to convince the smaller nations that the United Nations is a capable and efficient machine for the preservation of peace, for they depend upon us entirely at this time.

Our leaders of the past have reached the same conclusion. When President Cleveland made the statement which I have already quoted, that the nation that cannot resist aggression is constantly exposed to it, he added:

> Its foreign policy is of necessity weak and its negotiations are conducted with disadvantage because it is not in condition to enforce the terms dictated by its sense of right and justice. * * *

Less directly, but no less pointedly, Franklin Roosevelt said in 1939:

> We have learned that God-fearing democracies of the world which observe the sanctity of treaties and good faith in their dealings with other nations cannot safely be indifferent to international lawlessness anywhere. Today we are all wiser and sadder.

The most striking example in all history on this point is the conference at Munich when a representative of a weak and poorly prepared England sat at the "peace" table with an aggressor nation armed to the teeth. We want no more of that kind of "peace in our time."

Military strength will not handicap our spokesmen at the council tables of the nations. It will strengthen them and make them more effective.

Is it true that compulsory military service will make us a warlike and militaristic Nation?

Concern has been expressed by many sincere and thoughtful citizens that a draft of manpower would be the first step toward making this Nation what they term militaristic. They regard compulsory military service as a departure from American tradition and assert that it is likely to cause us in the future to subordinate the civilian to the military in our national life.

A peacetime draft is not, in my opinion, contrary to the American theory. Even in colonial times, and in the early days of our Republic, every able-bodied citizen was subject to certain military duties. He had to report on "muster days" and be ready for service at all times. To be sure, we have not resorted to compulsory service unless we considered ourselves in immediate danger such as existed immediately before our entrance into World War II. Can anyone escape the conviction that similar danger exists today?

It should be borne in mind that the world has been so shrunken by the conquest of the air and the invention of new devices of destruction that we, as a Nation, having reached our national maturity, now find ourselves in the same situation that European nations have been in for many centuries; living constantly in the shadow of possible aggression from powerful neighbors. It is hard for us to realize the full implications of this situation or to learn to live with that danger constantly before us. Even if compulsory military service were a new departure in American policy it would be amply justified by the conditions under which we now exist.

However, Mr. Speaker, I agree that we should never permit this country to be dominated by the military. I am thoroughly in accord with those citizens who express apprehension in this respect and I believe that at the present time we are inclined to have too many men of military background in high posts of civilian authority. Compulsory military service, however, will not make this Nation militaristic; certainly not compulsory military service that only builds up the armed forces to that peacetime strength established by act of Congress. A nation is not made a militaristic nation by compulsory service or by military training of its young men. We could never become militaristic unless we followed the example of other nations and began with the little children. We would have to train them in the schools, teach them a distorted history, marshal them to music, and encourage them to dream of military glory.

The events of the last few weeks assure us that this cannot happen. Why? Because the church, the school, the fathers and mothers of this country are on guard to prevent it. The Congress is on guard as demonstrated by the debate on this measure. Thank God that this is so. The letters that I have received from clergymen, from educators, and from parents pleading with me to vote against this measure are reassuring and, while I could not yield to their request and oppose a measure which I believe to be necessary for the peace and security of the Nation, I am nonetheless encouraged rather than disheartened by their attitude.

No other nation has cause to fear the military might of America. We have never in recent years sought the territory or the wealth of other countries. On the contrary, we have constantly poured out our resources to help them. We have always striven, and will continue to strive, for peace. We need not fear that the draft law will make us a military or aggressor nation.

The last question is whether this measure is necessary for our safety.

There is abroad in the land the notion that we no longer need soldiers for national defense. There has been so much newspaper, magazine, and radio talk about "push-button warfare" and "victory from the air" that many sincere people have gained the impression that we do not need to fill the ranks of our Army for national defense, but that any future attack to which we might be subjected would be a mere matter of planes, bombs, and rockets.

In the first place, a 70-group air force requires a numerous ground force and strong Army components to make it effective. Every air group is composed of many squadrons and each squadron has many planes. For every man who flies, 12 or 13 are required on the ground to keep the planes flying and for each plane, air borne troops, engineers, and supporting infantry are necessary.

Should we ever be attacked, the new weapons of warfare require a more trained and ready defense than has ever been known before. An attack would be preceded by fifth column activities within our own country. Enemies would be in our midst ready to sabotage our defense. When the attack came, great cities would be destroyed. We would have to face the effects of atomic bombs, radioactive materials, biological warfare, and crop-destroying chemicals. Chaos would result, with communications disrupted, millions of persons sick, wounded, and dying, civil disorder, and sabotage. The initial bombing attack would likely be followed by air-borne troops.

With these possibilities in mind, how can anyone say that it is not necessary to have trained disciplined forces, both in the regular units and in reserve, ready at all times to cope with the horrible conditions that would follow an attack? It seems clear to me that we must have such forces available and that we must further be in a position to strike quickly and effectively on the offensive should such an emergency arise.

So far as our Army itself is concerned, we have approximately 540,000 men, 300,000 of whom are serving in garrisons overseas. There are only two and one-half active, well-trained combat divisions in the entire American Army. I can see but one answer to the question of whether the draft law is necessary. Our minimum peacetime strength must be secured immediately and maintained continuously.

The peace and security of our Nation and all nations is the most vital issue of this generation. I believe that our only hope for future peace is to continue our efforts for international cooperation, both within and without the United Nations organization; to continue our program of help to other peace-loving nations; to maintain the strength and striking power of America; and to have all the world know it. During the Eightieth Congress I have supported consistently, to its full extent, the Marshall plan for European recovery. I voted for the 70-group air force and I voted for the draft.

I am convinced that selective service is necessary to maintain our forces.

I am convinced that they must be maintained for public safety.

I am convinced that to do so will promote peace rather than lead to war.

I am convinced that if we do not call upon young men for peacetime service now we are more likely to be compelled to call upon them for combat service soon.

I am deeply convinced of my duty as a Member of Congress, responsible for the safety of our country, to vote for the draft regardless of personal regrets or political consequences.

Ten Promises Made and Kept by the Eightieth Congress—A Republican Record of Achievement by Keeping Faith With Campaign Promises Which Were Made the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point the transcript of a radio address which I gave over a network of South Dakota radio stations shortly before the South Dakota primaries on June 1:

Good friends of South Dakota, I have before me in the studio here today, as I am making this broadcast, a newspaper clipping from the Watertown Public Opinion of October 28, 1946. This clipping is a news item written by the Associated Press at that time and reporting a radio speech which I had given the night previous in connection with the 1946 congressional campaign. As reported in this Associated Press news story I devoted that radio speech to describing the 10 changes in government in Washington which we expected to bring about if a Republican Congress were elected in the 1946 election.

Well, a Republican Congress was elected in 1946 and took office early in January of 1947—the first Republican Congress to sit in Washington, incidentally, for 16 years.

This Republican Congress has now had control of the legislative branch of government in our Nation's Capital for 16 months. It might therefore be informative and interesting to devote this broadcast to a review of what this Republican Congress has done to correct some of the trends and conditions which had developed during the previous 16 years.

Let me say first of all that we have not accomplished as much in this Republican Congress as many of us wish had been the case. We have discovered that when all of the executive departments, the White House, the administrative agencies, and the appointive positions are in the hands of one political party it is a hard, slow, laborious process for the other major political party when it controls only the legislative branch of Government to make rapid headway and speedy progress in establishing the reform and changes which it has in mind. On the other hand, it is also true that in the past 16 months this Republican Congress has made more progress and achieved more results than we had any real right to hope for in so short a time and under such difficult circumstances. In fact, definite and substantial progress has now been made on each of the 10 major objectives which we Republicans placed before the American electorate as our goal in 1946.

Perhaps the best way us to discuss and analyze the record of the Republican Congress in this broadcast is to take up those 10 promises of 1946 as they appear in the Associated Press news story now before me and to examine them in detail one at a time.

The first pledge we Republicans made the voters in the campaign for control of Congress in 1946 reads as follows: "If we elect a Republican Congress in this election we shall take immediate steps to remove all Communists from the Federal pay roll and to curtail communistic activities throughout the United States."

Well, friends, on that pledge any impartial or objective scorekeeper must give this Republican Congress a 100-percent score. We have kept that promise with emphasis or, perhaps, I should say we are keeping it with emphasis since the job of driving Communists off the Federal pay roll and keeping them off is a continuing process. It is not something which can be done by a single action and then forgotten about since the Communists have a nasty, insidious habit of weaseling their way back into positions of authority even after you have purged a specific branch of Government of their presence and their influence. In all events, this Republican Congress has made a great record in this connection. We have set up the machinery and financed the employment of extra agents of the FBI so that each Federal official is now being investigated as to loyalty and by the first of July it is expected this screening process will be complete. A great number of Communists and fellow travelers have already been dismissed from the Federal pay roll or have resigned to escape detection. Each week brings new dismissals or resignations. Slowly but surely we are returning to the wise advice of the Father of Our Country when George Washington said—Place only Americans on guard.

In addition Congress is now in the process of approving legislation which it was my own responsibility and opportunity to write—the Communist control bill, which stirred up so much controversy among the left-wing radicals of America and which passed the House overwhelmingly shortly after the middle of May—the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill. This makes it a Federal offense for any Communist to accept Federal employment and it also makes it a Federal crime for any official of the Government to appoint a Communist to the Federal pay roll. It also denies passports to Communists.

Moreover this Republican Congress has written a number of amendments into legislation which prohibit the employment of anybody in any of the foreign missions now representing America abroad until and unless such personnel have been checked and cleared by the FBI as to both loyalty and security risks.

Incidentally, South Dakota friends, the New Deal has established an all-time record in at least one aspect of bad government. The infiltration of Communists into Government during the Roosevelt regime of more than three terms was so bad and caused such alarming conditions that President Truman himself had to ask Congress for $25,000,000 to be used in purging the Federal pay rolls of the Communists who were appointed to important positions under the more than 12 years of New Dealism ending with the death of President Roosevelt. Never before in American history has a President had to ask Congress for an appropriation to weed out and eradicate disloyal employees appointed by his predecessor in office. This is especially significant since both President Truman and President Roosevelt are of the same political party; both supported the New Deal, so both must share responsibility for the disloyal and foreign-minded employees brought into power by appointment during their administration of American affairs. Never before has any administration so jeopardized our security by permitting big-city political bosses, left-wing agitators, and downright disloyal Communists to place their disloyal favorites on the Federal pay roll.

Thus it is clear that after 16 years of coddling the Communists or failing to face up to the danger which they present to our way of life, this Republican Congress has kept its pledge to the American people on that score.

The second pledge we gave the people in 1946 was to put an end to the era of extravagance and waste and to restore economy in Government in Washington. That promise has also been faithfully kept. With the exception of appropriations for our national defense, substantial deductions have been made in virtually every appropriations bill recommended by the President. Needless expenses have been eliminated entirely and routine expenditures have been scrutinized carefully and the waste and extravagance squeezed out of them. Your Government is today costing you hundreds of millions of dollars less each year due to the watchful economies of your Republican Congress. Part of these savings are being used to reduce the national debt—part of them are being called upon to finance America's program of waging a peace through aiding friendly foreign countries, and part of them are coming home to you right now in the form of reduced Federal income taxes.

YOUR TAXES ARE NOW LOWER

Some of you have received the initial benefits of these reduced taxes in your pay envelopes for May where the withholding tax has been eliminated or lowered—the rest of you will get the benefit of these reduced taxes when you pay the taxes on your income for the current year. In addition, your Republican Congress wrote legislation applying the split-income tax considerations to all States whereas up until this year it has applied only to a certain group of favorite States. As a result, South Dakotans will get substantial extra tax reductions because of this action by your Republican Congress.

Our third promise in 1946 was to "decontrol America." As you are all aware, that promise was promptly kept. The OPA was eliminated and many other Government regulations, restrictions, and restraints upon business and farming operations were eliminated. Today more Americans are enjoying better incomes and better living conditions than at any time in our national history. There are still problems to be solved in the matter of providing better and more adequate housing for veterans and others but houses and apartments are now being built at an all-time record of speed. Even so, the speed of production must be increased and additional steps are being taken to bring down the costs of these new homes so that young families can better afford to buy them at decreased prices and on easier payment terms.

The fourth Republican promise in 1946 was to stop government by decree and by edict and to restore government by laws enacted by the Representatives of the people. My friends, that promise has also been redeemed. No longer do bureaucrats and department chiefs send out mimeographed sheets telling individual Americans what they can or cannot do. Once again, a law is something which has been passed by your Congress or your legislature and not just something decided upon arbitrarily by a few bureaucrats hidden away in a secret office.

The fifth plank in the Republican platform of 1946 on which the congressional elections were held last time stated, "We must put an end to the economy of scarcity. We must give labor and capital an opportunity to work together for mutual profit and we must write tax laws permitting the individual to retain some of the advantages of his labor and good judgment." That promise has been kept. Slowly but surely we are switching from an economy of scarcity to an economy of plenty. You can again buy radios, washing machines, refrigerators, white shirts, automobile tires, and a long list of other necessities. Competition is beginning to produce lower prices in many lines of merchandise. Taxes have been substantially reduced. We have had fewer serious strikes. Jobs are available for all who want to work. By insisting that production controls and restrictive quotas must go, your Republican Congress has again started America on a production program which is providing most of the supplies which most of us need despite the necessity of sending overseas an unexpectedly large quantity of goods in our effort to win the peace and to help stabilize the world so that war will not again return to the world.

In the sixth place, we Republicans promised that a Republican Congress would insist that aid to nations overseas be used to promote peace and not to prepare for future wars. By insisting that exports of war supplies to Russia and other Communist countries be curtailed your Republican Congress has helped formulate a bipartisan foreign policy which is in conformity with that campaign promise.

REA AND SOIL CONSERVATION

Our seventh pledge to you of 2 years ago was that a Republican Congress would economize on nonessentials so as to have extra money available for rural electrification, for soil conservation, and for river development. Every farmer in South Dakota knows that promise has been kept by your Republican Congress. We increased this year by nearly $500,000,000 the money available for REA and we also increased substantially the money available this year for soil conservation. Our Missouri River development program is going forward as fast as engineering skills can advance it and this month we succeeded in getting money appropriated to actually begin the construction of the Oahe Dam just north of Pierre which gives South Dakota more actual river-construction work than is taking place in any other State of the Union.

Our eighth Republican promise for a Republican Congress 2 years ago was to remove from the Federal pay roll a million unnecessary Federal employees. Well, we have actually stopped the salaries and vacated the offices of nearly a million Federal employees. Unfortunately, the new foreign-aid programs and the revitalized national-defense program have required the recruitment of some additional Federal employees but the net result is still a big decrease in Federal employment over what it was when the Republican Congress came into power in January of 1947.

Promise number nine 2 years ago was to keep the FBI from being brought under the domination of the White House. At that time an effort was being made to remove J. Edgar Hoover as Director of the FBI. That effort was promptly stopped by the election of a Republican Congress so that promise was kept and America continues to have a Federal Bureau of Investigation of which every citizen can well be proud.

Finally, the tenth promise we made was to help develop a bipartisan foreign policy based on realism, honesty, and reciprocal relationships with Russia. And that promise has also been kept. Slowly but steadily America is developing a clear-cut consistent foreign policy. It is neither a Democratic nor a Republican foreign policy—it is the beginning of a great new American positive foreign policy and Republicans as well as Democrats are playing an important part in its development.

NOW WE NEED A REPUBLICAN PRESIDENT

As a Member of this Republican Congress and as your candidate for the Republican nomination for Senate in the June 1 primaries, I have enjoyed making this review of some of the activities of our current Congress. We have had many disappointments but we have had many successes. By electing both a Republican President and a Republican Congress next November, I feel confident we can move forward more rapidly in the directions which I have just discussed and that we can also move more effectively in the direction of winning this peace and making it permanent.

I pledge you my continued efforts to do the best I can for you, for South Dakota, and for a peaceful and prosperous world if I am elected as the junior Senator from South Dakota. This is KARL MUNDT concluding a political address in the interests of his Senatorial candidacy.

EIGHTIETH CONGRESS WAS BEST IN HISTORY FROM SOUTH DAKOTA STANDPOINT

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the foregoing radio report, I would also like to take this opportunity to call attention to the following excerpt from one of my regular news letters to South Dakota readers. In an issue of Your Washington and You, I called attention to the following facts under the paragraph heading, "Eighteth Congress good to South Dakota." It reads as follows:

Various factions and groups in different sections of the country will have varying ideas on the achievements and records of the Eightieth Congress depending upon their own special interest, personal, or political viewpoint. But insofar as South Dakota is concerned—regardless of section, faction, occupation, special interest, or political preference—none can successfully deny that the Eightieth Congress just concluded was probably by all odds the best Congress in American history from the South Dakota viewpoint.

Some might argue about what this column believes to be a fact—namely, that the tax reduction in personal income taxes means more to South Dakotans than to taxpayers in other States—because it extends the split-income privilege for the first time to South Dakotans, because South Dakota has a larger percentage of personal income taxpayers as contrasted with corporation taxpayers than most States. Some might even argue against another bit of evidence this column considers factual, namely, that the substantial increases in appropriations for REA and for soil conservation mean most to South Dakota because our programs in these two activities are moving forward faster today than elsewhere in this Republic.

However, on the following, few will even attempt to deny that the Eightieth Congress was the world's best insofar as South Dakota is concerned. It provided funds for pushing forward the largest river development program in the world (Missouri River development) at a faster rate through utilization of more present construction facilities than are being employed in any other river basin anywhere in the world. Over $137,000,000 will become available for spending in the Missouri River Basin after next July 1—this amounts to about 17 percent of the total figure voted by Congress for reclamation flood control, and rivers and harbor development. Much of this money will be spent in South Dakota, virtually all of it will directly or indirectly benefit our State. Added to other projects of significance to South Dakota, the foregoing supplies tangible evidence to support the assertion that from the South Dakota viewpoint the Eightieth Congress was the best in American history. Certainly it treated South Dakota better than any other Congress and the results of its activities will continue throughout the future to pay dividends—big dividends—to South Dakota.

California's National Figure: An Appreciation of a Colleague

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHET HOLIFIELD
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have been intrigued of late by the appearance of a number of articles, columns, and editorials, all dealing with the general subject of women in politics. In practically all of these, regardless of the political coloration of the medium, my esteemed colleague and neighbor, Congresswoman HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS, is prominently mentioned and generally highly complimented.

As those of us here in Congress know, Mr. Speaker, this is as it should be. Praise for the prodigious legislative efforts of the gentlewoman from California has never been lacking in this House. To see those efforts recognized by the press of the Nation is very gratifying to me, and, I am sure, to all of you.

Although all of us do not always agree on the various important matters that come before us and heated debate is often the order of the day, all of us can and do respect keen intelligence, mental and moral integrity, and honest efforts to legislate constructively for the benefit of all the people. All of these qualities, needless to say, are possessed by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS] in superlative degree.

We here, Mr. Speaker, are well aware of the amazing grasp of national and international affairs possessed by the gentlewoman from California. We have seen her go from the thick of battle over the atomic energy bill to take her place as an alternate delegate to the United Nations. We have seen her on one day fighting with the maximum of wit and energy for the passage of the Marshall plan and the next day presenting an income-tax plan which became the basis for the administration's tax proposals. And in all these varied endeavors, handling with consummate ease and familiarity a vast complex of intricate and highly technical information. This, I submit, is statesmanship of a high order.

And yet, above and beyond all this and obviously uppermost in the gentlewoman's mind at all times are the basic necessities of food and lodging for all our people. If I were to name the issues which immediately come to mind when the name of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS] is mentioned, I would unhesitatingly say, "Housing, rent control, and cost of living." For it is on these homely, down-to-earth issues that she has made her major fights and with which she is inevitably identified in the Nation's mind and heart.

And make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, she is so identified. As the columns of newsprint testify, as her voluminous mail bears witness, she is known from one end of the Nation to the other. She is truly California's national figure, and as such, Mr. Speaker, I salute her today.

Political Hysteria Versus the Cold Facts About Government Housing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN PHILLIPS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, the factual material bearing upon governmental or political housing has been neglected. Members of Congress and the public generally have not been given figures that expose the false promises of removing slums and housing the poor. Public housing has largely lived and fattened on emotionalism and on assumptions that slums can be cleared and the poor housed better by socialism than by the practice of the genius and the inventive, creative, and productive capacity of a free society. In this connection, Mr. Joseph H. Deckman, chairman of the public housing committee of the Home Builders Association of metropolitan Washington has made a notable contribution:

POLITICAL HYSTERIA VERSUS THE COLD FACTS ABOUT GOVERNMENT HOUSING

(By Joseph H. Deckman, chairman, public housing committee, Home Builders Association of metropolitan Washington)

In the closing moments of the eightieth session, the Rules Committee of Congress turned down the T-E-W Government housing bill, that is to say, socializing of our economy. Advocates of government housing or housing by a political party in exchange for votes tried to avoid the issue of socialism by arguing that so and so favored the bill and surely you can't call them socialists. Neither did they prove that Government housing clears slums as claimed. On the contrary slums have increased in every country adopting government housing. Government housing decreases the rate always of building, creates more scarcity, and increases slums. That has been true the world over, government housing does not house the poor. If government promises to do so, it deceives and defrauds the poor. It does not house them. It houses the party workers and voters to keep itself in power. A free economy is the only one that clears the slums and houses the poor according to the Childrens' Welfare Federation, New York City, and other authorities here and abroad.

America will never go down the road of state socialism through the government ownership of the homes of the people if they are told the facts of what state socialism is. They must learn that the TEW bill just defeated employs the same fundamental procedures employed by Berlin, London, Paris, or Moscow.

The following questions and answers are set forth to demonstrate how government takes over houses, finances them, selects the favored tenants and compels taxpayers to pay the bill as all socialist states do. Complete reference information is given in order to verify the statement made.

1. Question. What is the total cost of housing one family in a public housing unit over a period of 45 years as provided for in the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill?

Answer. The cost of housing one family for the required 45 year period would be $23,400.

Sources and remarks: Rufus S. Lusk, of the National Association of Home Builders, on March 28, 1947, made the following statements to the Senate Banking Committee:

"The tenant on the average—pays $12,700 into the building and maintenance of that house. * * *

"It runs $23.63 (a month). That leaves a difference which has to be made up somewhere. It may come in the form of a subsidy, in the form of exemptions on taxes and so forth, but there is this difference $10,700, which must be made up in some form by other than the tenant."

"The cost of a completed dwelling on the average is $7,500. * * *

"That money is borrowed by the local public housing authority and of course it has to be repaid.

"The interest over the 45-year period on the loan that is borrowed by the local housing authority to build the house is $5,500 * * *

"The Government guarantees that, and pays it by means of a subsidy which it pays to the local housing authority. * * *

"Now, during the life of this house, it has to be taken care of, heated and repaired and painted, and for that the cost is $9,000, according to the figures of the Housing Authority. * * *

"Then, in addition there is paid into the house by the Housing Authority a figure known as payment in lieu of taxes. They make a contribution. In no case does it equal full taxes. * * *

"Gentlemen, those are the correct costs coming to $23,400, and all we have to pay them with is the tenant's rent of $12,700. The rest is put up by the taxpayers. * * *

"In addition the Federal Government loses in income taxes over the period of the life of this house approximately $2,100. * * *

"The bonds are issued by the local housing authority, the interest on those bonds is not subject to income tax, and assuming the holders of those bonds were in the 40 percent bracket, the Federal Government will fail to collect $2,100 approximately, more or less, than it would collect if those bonds were on privately owned structures."

Senator C. DOUGLASS BUCK, Republican, of Delaware, interrupted Mr. Lusk's testimony to say:

"The Government loses the income tax on these tax exempt bonds and the money which they put in there to subsidize these homes. Is that about the picture?"

Mr. Lusk replied: "Yes, sir." (Hearings on housing before Senate Banking Committee (March–April 1947), pp. 415 et seq.)

2. Question. What is the cost of subsidy payments under the public-housing program?

Answer. The cost would be approximately $5 per week for 500,000 families.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee that:

"What we are currently subsidizing is the rental of 500,000 families, if this goes through. We are doing that every year, that is, currently subsidizing. * * *

"What it comes to, approximately, as I figure it, is that the subsidy will amount to approximately $5 a week for 500,000 families. It is subsidized housing." (Hearings on housing, March–April 1947, p. 479–480.)

3. Question. Is it true that if once started the program would have to continue for the full 45 years specified in the bill?

Answer. Yes. The commitment is for the full 45 years.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"I do not see anything particularly complicated about it, except the one feature that in assuming this program you are assuming it for 45 years. * * *

"You are committed for 45 years to go on subsidizing 500,000 families for rental, as you can see, if we adopt the policy at all. It is a policy that we will have to continue for 45 years." (Hearings on housing, March–April 1947, p. 481.)

4. Question. Would the program probably include 3,000,000 families before it is over?

Answer. Yes.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT, replying to a statement made by Senator ROBERTSON (Va.) at the hearings on housing before the Senate Banking Committee said:

"I think that you are probably right in saying that before you got through, if you do not improve conditions, if you do not reduce costs, if you do not improve income conditions, you probably will have to take care of as many as 3,000,000 families before you get through." (Hearings on housing, March–April 1947, pp. 493 and 494.)

5. Question. Would the annual Federal subsidy on a housing project amount to the interest and amortization on the loan?

Answer. Yes.

6. Question. Would money collected for rent pay only for maintenance and operation of the project?

Answer. Yes.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"The maximum amount that the Government contracts to pay as subsidy on the project is enough to pay the interest and amortization on the cost of that project. And what is charged for rent is the cost of maintenance of the project and operation of the project." (Hearings on Housing, March–April 1947, p. 499.)

7. Question. Could private enterprise build more economically than the Government?

Answer. It is conceded even by those supporting a public-housing program that private enterprise could possibly build more economically than the Government.

Sources and remarks: Senator FULBRIGHT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"It has been said everything else being equal, the public organization cannot build these houses as cheaply as the others." (Hearings on Housing, March–April 1947, p. 484.)

Also, Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"I agree that generally the Government is not as economical as private enterprise probably." (Hearings on Housing, March–April 1947, p. 484.)

8. Question. Are public-housing rents higher than private if allowance is made for the subsidy?

Answer. Probably yes.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"If you subsidize private housing to the same extent that you subsidize public housing, they could get their rent somewhat lower than public housing.

"I think that is probably true." (Hearings on Housing, March–April 1947, p. 484.)

9. Question. What is the cost for the public housing projects of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill?

Answer. The cost is approximately $160,000,000 a year for 45 years, or $7,200,000,000.

Sources and remarks: Senator TAFT told the Senate Banking Committee:

"The total cost of everything, if the total cost were used there to the maximum, which is unlikely, it would be $160,000,000 a year."

10. Question. What is the percentage of housing in America today that is not in need of major repairs?

Answer. Ninety percent.

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Report on Housing, series P–70 No. 1, dated October 29, 1947, contained the following:

"In 1947, about 37,500,000, or 90 percent of the ordinary dwelling units were in good condition or in need of minor repairs, with 93 percent, 89 percent, and 81 percent for urban, rural-nonfarm, and rural-farm, respectively."

"In urban areas, about 20,500,000, or 84 percent of the units had both a private bath and private flush toilet."

11. Question. How many housing units in the United States are owner-occupied?

Answer. Approximately 55 percent of all housing units in the United States were owner-occupied in 1947.

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Report, series P–70 No. 1, dated October 29, 1947, contained the following:

"Homes occupied by their owners now represent 55 percent of all occupied dwelling units in the United States. * * * Two-thirds of the 41,700,000 dwelling units in the United States have a private bath and a private flush toilet; and 9 out of every 10 have electric lighting."

12. Question. How long have we now had public housing?

Answer. Approximately 10 years.

13. Question. What has been the cost of slum clearance and for the building of permanent low-rent housing?

Answer. Approximately $800,000,000.

14. Question. How many Government-owned housing units have been constructed so far?

Answer. About 155,000 units.

Sources and remarks: Congressman RALPH W. GWINN, Republican, of New York, extended his remarks into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 31, 1948, by inserting an article. There's an American Way to Clear the City's Slums and House the Needy, by Joseph H. Deckman, which gave the following:

"After approximately 10 years of the public housing experiment in America * * * it is a fact that eight hundred millions of dollars have been spent for clearing slums and building permanenut low-rent housing while * * * 155,000 Government-housing units have been constructed with this money and the slums have been practically untouched."

15. Question. Assuming it is the goal of the public-housing program to house the lower third, what would be the ultimate cost to meet the goal?

Answer. The cost would be about $225,000,000,000.

Sources and remarks: Representative RALPH W. GWINN, Republican, of New York, extending his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on March 31, 1948, inserted an article There's An American Way to Clear the City's Slums and House the Needy by Joseph H. Deckman, which contained the following:

"Based on the cost set forth in T-E-W bill, and figuring the number of housing units at one-third of the Nation's units of 37,500,000 in 1947 (or a conservative figure of 12,000,000,000 units), it is found by dividing 12,000,000 by 500,000 that we must multiply the cost of the T-E-W bill by 24; $7,200,000,000 by 24 equals $172,800,000,000.

"One hundred and seventy-two billion eight hundred million dollars then becomes the cost to the Federal Government for the first 45 years to house the lower third. To this cost must be added the cost to the local taxpayer for local tax exemptions or local grants to the public housing authorities. This figure at the local level can be conservatively estimated from past experience at well over $50,000,000,000 for a 45-year period.

"To arrive at the total cost to the taxpayer to house the lower third of the population it can be safely stated that the cost will reach approximately $225,000,000,000 at the end of the first 45 years of such a program."

16. Question. Do the appropriation provisions of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill depart from traditional legislative practice?

Answer. Yes. By passing the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, Congress will have, in fact, appropriated the entire sum necessary for a 45-year public housing program. This bypasses annual congressional budget and expenditure controls.

Sources and remarks: Representative JAMIE L. WHITTEN, Democrat, of Mississippi, in a speech before Congress on July 12, 1946, made the following remarks:

"Under the law providing for such housing projects * * * the National Housing Authority can make a contract binding the Appropriations Committee and the Congress to appropriate annually for the next 60 (now 45) years up to $28,000,000 to pay a share of the rent for tenants of these projects."

17. Question. What is the average rent paid by all tenants in public housing, including subsidized and full economic rent?

Answer. In 1946 the average rent paid by all tenants in public housing was $28.33 per month.

Sources and remarks: The Joint Committee on Housing Report (H. Doc. 629), entitled "Housing In America," on page 105 states the following:

"At the end of 1946 the projects that had been in operation for 6 years showed an increase in average rents from $19.31, including utilities, in the first year to $28.33 in 1946, an increase of 46 percent."

18. Question. What is the rental breakdown of the Nation's rental housing?

Answer. See "Sources and remarks," below

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Reports, series P–70, No. 1, dated October 29, 1947, contained the following:

"Of the estimated fifteen and one-third million tenant-occupied nonfarm dwelling units, four and one-sixth million rented for $40 a month or more and the same number rented for less than $20 a month. All of these figures are based on results of a survey which was conducted in April 1947 by the Bureau of the Census."

19. Question. How many rental units rent for more than $50 per month?

Answer. Approximately 1,900,000 rental units rent for more than $50 per month.

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Report, series P–70, No. 1 (October 29, 1947), on page 2 states the following:

"Monthly rents of $50 or more were reported for 1,900,000 of the 15,300,000 reporting units, or approximately 1 in every 8 units."

The Home Builders Monthly (February 1948), page 7, writes as follows:

"Not over 13 percent of the rental housing is renting for more than $50 per month and approximately 50 percent is renting from $20 to $40 per month. Just under 25 percent of the rental units are renting for over $40 a month and the same quantity is renting for less than $20 per month." (These figures based on Bureau of Census Report "Current Population and Housing Report," October 29, 1947.)

20. Question. What is meant by "median family rent"?

Answer. The median family rent is that figure which equally divides the total number of families paying above and below that figure.

21. Question. What is the median rent for all taxpaying private housing?

Answer. In 1947, the median rent was $29.33 per month.

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Report, series P–70, No. 1, page 2, reported the following:

"The median rent for tenant-occupied dwelling units in 1947 was about $29.33 in the total of the urban and rural-non-farm areas; $31.65 in urban areas, and $18.62 in rural nonfarm. Approximately 4,100,000 of the tenant-occupied urban and rural-nonfarm dwelling units had rents of less than $20 per month. Monthly rents of $50 or more were reported for 1,900,000 of the 15,300,000 reporting units, or approximately 1 in every 8 units."

22. Question. Can private enterprise supply the need for low-rent housing?

Answer. Yes. As of October 29, 1947, there were eleven and one-sixth million rental units out of a total of fifteen and one-third million units renting for less than $40 per month, which is enough to approximately house the lower third of the population.

Sources and remarks: The Bureau of Census Reports, Series P–70, No. 1, dated October 29, 1947, contained the following:

"Of the estimated fifteen and one-third million tenant-occupied nonfarm dwelling units, four and one-sixth million rented for $40 a month or more and the same number rented for less than $20 a month."

23. Question. How many public-housing units similar to those planned in the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill now exist?

Answer. As of 1945, there were 155,000 public units.

Sources and remarks: On November 28, 1945, Philip M. Klutznick, Commissioner, Federal Public Housing Authority, told the Senate Banking Committee:

"FPHA presently has under its jurisdiction a program consisting of some 877,000 dwelling units of all descriptions. * * * It is important to understand that the overwhelming percentage of this housing was created and dedicated to war use. Of the total of 877,000 dwelling units, 722,000 are characterized as war-housing units, and the remainder, 155,000, as low-rent units. The FPHA has a continuing responsibility for managing and disposing of the war housing."

24. Question. Do old houses necessarily cause slums?

Answer. No. It is the state of repairs of the building and the type of housekeeping which cause slums. Georgetown has many old homes and yet is not a slum.

Sources and remarks: Representative RALPH W. GWINN, Republican, of New York, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of July 17, 1947, an article A Solution to the Slum Clearance Problem Without the Use of Federal Aid. The author of the article, Joseph H. Deckman, of the National Home and Property Owners Foundation, wrote the following:

"Any solution to the problem of slum clearance should only be confronted after consideration of the basic fact that old houses do not cause slums. Slovenly housekeeping and buildings not kept in proper repair are the real causes of slums. * * *

"The problem of slum clearance is reduced largely to the proposition of promulgating and enforcing proper building codes and sanitary laws at the local municipal level. * * *

"Public opinion * * * dictates that housing codes are essential to define minimum standard housing and make it illegal to rent substandard dwelling accommodations. By this method good used housing at low rents will be provided for the low-income groups, and this much-publicized problem will be cured."

25. Question. Is there a housing shortage in the country today?

Answer. Apparently not, if people were free to move according to their needs. Rent control prevents adjustments of space to the individual and family needs.

Sources and remarks: The Home Builders Monthly (February 1948), page 5, writes as follows:

"America * * * now has more good, safe and sanitary housing than ever before. * * *

"The total housing available in the United States in 1947 was 41,700,000 units. Of this total 37,500,000 units are not in need of major repairs. This means, by allowing four persons per unit, that 166,800,000 people can be housed in America today. * * * Based on a population of approximately 145,000,000 it can be said that there is enough adequate housing for all. * * * Any difficulty in obtaining housing accommodations is due to a maldistribution of the population and not a shortage of housing."

These questions and answers show how public housing is not intended to house the needy. It has not and will not clear slums. Neither is it low rent or low cost in character. Billions provided in a long-range housing bill will not produce any more housing immediately or later. It produces less. Public housing is a clever socialist device to shift ownership from private hands to the Government. Modern technique is not to shoot and force, but to buy with money and favors and taxes so that the transfer is bloodless, even painless.

They Planned It That Way

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN DAVIS LODGE

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Bridgeport Telegram:

THEY PLANNED IT THAT WAY

Shortly after the disastrous floods in Oregon, a prominent "liberal" Member of Congress took to the air and loudly proclaimed that this proved the need for more Government planning. "The Government should take entire control of these rivers."

With all due respect to the gentleman in question, what it proved was nothing of the kind. The disaster at Vanport and the deaths that occurred there were not the result of lack of Government planning. Exactly to the contrary. They resulted from Government planning.

The Government put the people in that flood area in the first place, the Government assured them that they were safe there, and the Government bureaus which commit idiocies like this were merely giving another exhibition of their incompetence.

The true history of Vanport which was wiped out when the dike broke, is one of Government planning. The area where this village was set up was once a swamp, periodically overrun by the Columbia River. During the war, the Portland subsidiary of the Federal Public Housing Administration set up a war village in Vanport. The houses were built by the Government (in the usual style of wall board and tar paper) and were leased to war workers in Portland and the nearby area.

True to the snooping proclivities of Federal bureaucracy, the planners not only set up this village where no village ought to have been built in the first place, but retained the right to make periodical inspections of every apartment to see that the housekeeping was good. Presumably, if the wife of one of these war workers was not a good housekeeper, according to the standards adopted by the snoopers, her lease could be canceled.

To this village of federally owned, federally operated shacks for war workers, disaster came after reassurance given to everybody by the same authority that they were perfectly safe. Only a few days before the bursting of the dike, hand bills were distributed to the residents of Vanport advising them that "engineers" had inspected the dikes and reported no immediate danger. Residents were told not to worry, because if there was any danger, they would be given ample warning.

A few days later the dikes burst, and the houses were swept away like so much cardboard.

This does not show a need for more Federal management. It is a perfect illustration of the stupidity of most attempts on the part of the paternalistic government in Washington to plan the lives of people living thousands of miles away. Ordinary common sense, knowledge of local conditions, and use of good local brains had prevented the people of Oregon from building on that dangerous marshy area. It took the Federal planners to put a village there, and it took the same idiots to assure the villagers they were safe when they were, in fact, in terrible danger.

What we need is not more Federal meddling with rivers. We need more men in Congress who do not make fools of themselves over the radio.

Legislative Record of the Committee on Armed Services, Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER G. ANDREWS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, on July 26, 1947, I reported to you and to the House of Representatives a summation of the work of the Committee on Armed Services during the first session of the Eightieth Congress. It was pointed out in that report that this new Committee on Armed Services owed its origin to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, enacted August 2, 1946, and, therefore, that the committee began its life in the Eightieth Congress without any of the traditions, established procedures, and continuity of personnel which are necessary to the successful operation of any organization.

Nevertheless, I believe it was clearly shown in my previous report that the Committee on Armed Services has performed well from the start, and since the report of last July, subsequent events have proved beyond question that this new Committee on Armed Services has justified the merger of the two former Naval and Military Affairs Committees and that it will remain one of the great committees of the Congress.

The previous report covered the period of the first session between January 6 and July 26, 1947. Since then the Congress has been in session from November 17 through December 19, 1947, and from January 3 through June 19, 1948. I will not attempt to resurvey the material contained in the previous report, but I think that the Congress will be interested in the progress made during the special and second sessions since the first report was rendered.

During the month-long special session last year, the full Committee on Armed Services met three times, and 17 subcommittee meetings were also held during that period. Also during that short session the ground work was laid for a number of very important developments, in an investigative way, which were to transpire in the second session of the Congress beginning in January. As a result of the ground work thus laid, the committee began the second session with unusually productive application to the legislative work at hand.

A total of 114 subcommittee meetings were held throughout the second session, during a session of 99 legislative days. There was therefore an average of well over one subcommittee meeting for each legislative day of the second session. Moreover, there were 32 full committee meetings during the second session in addition to the subcommittee meetings just mentioned. This averaged well over one full committee meeting during each week of the second session of this Congress.

Meetings in the first session—excluding the special session—totaled 168 subcommittee sessions, and 23 full committee meetings. Thus, there was an overall total, for the entire Congress, of 299 subcommittee meetings and 58 full committee meetings, or 357 separate meetings, in all, in the Eightieth Congress.

I consider this an exceptional record of work. With subcommittee meetings averaging more than one each legislative day, and full committee meetings considerably more than one a week throughout the session, it is apparent that the membership of the Committee on Armed Services has worked diligently on the important legislative problems concerning national defense which have arisen during the Eightieth Congress.

A total of 232 bills were referred to the committee during the second session. By adding these to the 424 bills referred to the committee during the first session, we have the over-all total of 656 bills referred to the committee, or an average of 1 of every 11 or 12 bills introduced in the entire House of Representatives during the Eightieth Congress. The committee acted on well over 25 percent of these bills, considering 85 of the bills during the second session, 94 during the first session, for a total of 179 bills considered by the committee during the entire Congress. Of the 179 bills considered by the committee, 22 were tabled by various subcommittees or by the full committee, whereas 157 were reported to the House.

It is significant that of the 157 bills reported to the House, all but 6, or 151, were passed by the House of Representatives. Each of these bills was considered, first in subcommittee, next by the full committee, before the bills reached the House; the committee reports to the House of Representatives were detailed and complete, and the subcommittee chairmen who handled the bills in the committee, as well as the membership of the subcommittees concerned, were so well advised as to the particulars of their various bills that the House membership rarely found serious objections to the proposed legislation.

As a matter of further interest, of the 151 bills passed by the House of Representatives which came from this committee during this Congress, 135 passed the Senate, and of these 128 have been enacted into law. Thus, of the total of approximately 900 Public Laws passed by the entire Congress during the past 2 years, the Committee on Armed Services of the House has initiated 14 percent, or about one of every seven laws passed.

I may say that not all of the committee's work is represented by the legislative record just mentioned. In addition to the heavy legislative load, four important investigations were undertaken and completed during the course of the Congress, each of which dealt directly with very important, basic considerations affecting the national defense. The first of these investigations was conducted in San Francisco, Calif., in September of 1947, and the subcommittee returned with a report which contained a large number of recommendations which went to the very heart of the unification of the services, some of the most important of which have since been implemented by the services. This investigation was under the chairmanship of Hon. JACK Z. ANDERSON, chairman of the Procurement Subcommittee.

Next was an investigation of the synthetic rubber industry of the United States which had as its purpose the determination of the need of maintaining an adequate synthetic-rubber industry for the Nation for use in the event of a national emergency. This investigation was conducted in November and December of 1947, under the chairmanship of Hon. PAUL W. SHAFER, chairman of the Organization and Mobilization Subcommittee. The result of this subcommittee investigation was the Rubber Act of 1948 which assures the Nation an adequate source of domestically produced rubber until 1950. At that time plans for disposal of present Government-owned plants will be submitted to the Congress for its approval. The basic importance of this legislation is beyond overemphasis, for the assurance of an adequate rubber supply in the event of another war would be of incalculable significance to the Nation and to the success of the armed forces.

Next, was an investigation which extended from December 1, 1947, until February 2, 1948, and consisted of a detailed study of all pertinent laws and proceedings governing disability retirement of officers and enlisted men in the armed forces. This investigation was headed by Hon. CHARLES H. ELSTON, chairman of the legal subcommittee. Over 2,500 questionnaires were sent to Army and Navy officers in the grades of colonel and of captain and above over the entire Nation during the course of this inquiry. Numerous recommendations were made which will unquestionably be reflected in legislation which will be forthcoming in the next Congress.

The remaining investigation conducted by the committee during this Congress was under the chairmanship of Hon. DEWEY SHORT and had as its purpose the determination of the adequacy of the present and future petroleum supply of the armed forces. This investigation began in January 1948 and continued until late March 1948. Almost 50 witnesses from the Government and from the oil industry over the Nation appeared before this special subcommittee. Its report of investigation contained a large number of basic recommendations in regard to governmental action required to meet the armed forces' petroleum situation today. This report has received wide acclaim as one of the most thorough, logical, and vigorous studies yet made of petroleum by any committee of the Congress, and at the time of the submission of this summary to you, approximately 4,000 copies of the report have been distributed at the request of individuals throughout the Nation. Its influence will be wide, and it will surely basically affect governmental action in this field for some time to come.

From the statistics submitted above, it will be recalled that this committee initiated approximately one of every six laws enacted during the Eightieth Congress. It should be emphasized here that the large proportion of this legislation is not of minor nature; much is of very far-reaching importance to the Nation. To point this up, I will mention briefly some of the major pieces of legislation which emerged from the committee and which became law. In doing this I will purposefully omit a discussion of such bills as the universal training bill which was not enacted, although all of such bills required fully as much committee time and effort before the bills were reported to the House of Representatives as did the bills which later became law.

There was, for example, the Selective Service Act of 1948 which provides a means by which to raise the strength of the armed forces to the minimum essential to the national defense. The scope and complexity of this law needs no emphasis. Suffice it to say that the law requires the registration of all male citizens between 18 and 26 years of age, with induction of those between 19 and 26 who are not deferred or exempted in the law. This legislation is of tremendous basic importance to the adequacy of our national defense, and few bills have been considered by the Congress in recent years of such great significance to the Nation at large.

And then there was H. R. 1367, which became Public Law 63, which authorizes the Navy to construct experimental submarines. Much of the significance of this legislation pertains to the incorporation into American submarine design the knowledge gained during the war of submarine operations and the improvements and useful innovations found in captured submarines. The importance of this legislation is not immediate; nevertheless, some few years hence it may well have untold significance when the authorized experimentation has been completed.

H. R. 2744, now Public Law 810, is another major bill which this committee initiated and followed through to enactment. It provides a new, improved system for the elimination of inefficient officers of the Regular Army as well as for the retirement of Regular Army officers and enlisted men. Moreover, it provides for the first time for the retirement of officers and enlisted men of the Reserve components of all the services, thus offering substantial inducements to Reserves to perform continued Reserve service over the years. This legislation will have a major effect upon the readiness of the Nation's Reserves in the event of another war emergency. From this standpoint alone, and aside from the effect of the law upon the efficiency of the Regular Army, this is one of the most important bills considered by the last Congress.

H. R. 3227, now Public Law 460, is another bill markedly affecting the efficiency of the Reserve components, for it provides for the first time in our history inactive-duty training pay for Army and Air Force Reservists on the same basis as received heretofore by Navy and Marine Corps Reserves and members of the National Guard. This law, in addition to the retirement law mentioned previously, plays a direct part in the mobilization-day readiness of the Nation by tending to maintain active, vigorous Reserve components.

There was also H. R. 3215 which created the Army-Navy Medical Service Corps. This law gives permanent service status to the various professional groups allied to the duties of the Medical Corps. Also, H. R. 1943, now Public Law 36, establishes for the first time a permanent corps for the nurses of the Army and Navy. Both of these laws conform to the spirit and intent of the Unification Act and contain within their provisions standards which apply equally to all the armed forces.

The committee also initiated H. R. 1845, now Public Law 153, which gives Federal employees who are members of the Reserve components military leave so that they may participate in peacetime reserve training for limited periods without personal loss. This major bill is another move in the direction of maintaining a vigorous, efficient, immediately available reserve force to augment the standing forces. And certainly I should not fail to mention H. R. 2575, which was enacted as a part of the selective-service law, which legislation amends the Articles of War and extensively revises the Army system of military justice. This legislation will have far-reaching effects on the entire military establishment; certain elements of it are assuredly to affect the reorganization of the naval justice system which will also be considered in the next Congress.

Also, there was H. R. 6049, now Public Law 690, which authorized the stoppage of work on certain combat vessels. The effect of this law is to authorize the Navy to undertake the construction of a 65,000 ton aircraft carrier. I do not believe that it is necessary to discuss this legislation in any detail. Certainly its strategic importance is enormous, and in the event of another sudden national emergency the results of the passage of Public Law 319 in the Eightieth Congress may be one of the great sources of strength to which the Nation can turn.

Insofar as the efficiency of the armed forces is concerned, I must also refer to H. R. 3830, now Public Law 381, which reconstructed the promotion and elimination systems of all of the armed forces. This legislation, tremendously complex, far reaching in its implications to the morale and efficiency of the armed forces, was enacted after very extensive hearings. Since it introduces promotion by selection into the Army, as contrasted to promotion by seniority, and accomplishes many other refinements and improvements, the committee expects that it will have a very healthful influence on our military leadership in future years.

Legislation concerning the Medical Corps of the armed forces was previously mentioned, and note should also be taken of H. R. 3851, now Public Law 365, which grants medical officers supplemental income of $100 a month in order to provide additional inducements to physicians and surgeons to undertake military and naval service as a career. The complexity of this legislation is apparent, and the committee pushed this major bill vigorously with the purpose in mind of insuring at all times that members of the armed forces will be provided adequate medical care.

Of extensive public interest was H. R. 4017, now Public Law 254, which permitted the cashing of terminal-leave bonds by members of the armed forces who served in the last war. I believe the mention of this legislation is sufficient unto itself; it attracted national interest and was of great value to vast numbers of veterans of the last war. I also invite attention to H. R. 5805, now Public Law 539, which extended the time for application for mustering-out pay. This was also a bill of great importance to many veterans of the last war.

From the information already provided, it would appear that the committee had done enough for the reserves of the armed forces through the enactment of H. R. 3227, the reserve provisions of the selective-service law, the giving of military leave to Federal employees, and the providing of a retirement system for Reserves, but I should also like to invite attention to Public Law 678, which authorizes medical care for Reservists, under certain conditions, who are injured in military training. All of this legislation combined is, I believe without question, the most vigorous approach to the question of maintaining the vitality of the Reserve components that has been witnessed in any previous Congress, and I feel strongly that the membership of the committee is to be greatly commended therefor.

There were two bills pertaining to the Military and Naval Academies to which I would also like to invite attention. One of these, H. R. 1377, now Public Law 96, increased the pay of cadets and midshipmen to bring them more in line with modern conditions, their previous pay having been derived from statutes enacted 20 or more years ago. This modest pay increase is having a stimulating morale effect at the Academies, which, as you know, have been the traditional sources for the wartime military and naval leadership of the Nation. Furthermore, Public Law 816 reconstituted the Congressional Boards of Visitors to the Military and Naval Academies in such fashion as to insure continuity to these Boards for the first time in history, thereby insuring that these inspection groups will perform excellent advisory control over the Academies in the years ahead. These two laws are of basic importance to the Academies, as were several other lesser bills, which cannot be adequately discussed in this brief summary.

This résumé would be quite incomplete without mention of Public Law 625, which authorizes the admission of women into the Regular Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps for the first time in history. Here again I believe that extended discussion is unnecessary, since this legislation was of great national interest and its provisions are widely known. But the complexity of such a law and the extreme care and great amount of time required for its development are matters to which I call attention as evidence of the tremendous application of this committee during this Congress. There were also Public Law 653 and Public Law 626, the so-called Army and Navy public works laws, which provide for the construction of naval and military facilities within and outside the continental United States, including such items as guided missiles testing ranges, construction in Alaska, and similar undertakings of great importance to the national-defense program. Both of these laws were extensively debated in the House of Representatives and will have great effect in the future on the readiness of the regular forces in the event of an emergency.

One other measure, Public Law 883, initiated by the committee, is of special significance to the Nation insofar as its industrial potential is concerned. This law augments our national industrial reserve program by permitting certain Government-constructed war plants to be placed in stand-by condition and maintained by the Federal Works Agency, in order that these production facilities may be immediately available for war production should an emergency arise. This law in particular protects the integrity of plants important to the national security which Government disposal agencies cannot lease or sell subject to a national-security clause. The law will also permit an increase in the Government reserve of machine tools, the shortage of which was a critical bottleneck at the beginning of World War II.

Finally, I think I should mention Public Law 820, the so-called revolving-fund law, which insures an adequate supply of cotton purchased in this country for Japanese mills in order to reinvigorate the Japanese economy, thereby releasing insofar as possible the dependence of that country upon the United States for its successful functioning. It is anticipated that this legislation will have a marked effect upon the health of the Japanese economy and should aid greatly in the release of this country from its heavy burden in supporting the economy of Japan.

I emphasize that these laws are the high lights only of the major undertakings of the committee during this Congress. There are many other important laws which the committee initiated and which I cannot touch upon within this limited space. Some of these were discussed in my previous report of last July on the first-session activities of the committee, and I am confident that the reading of that report in conjunction with this one will make clearly evident that the Armed Services Committee has functioned well as an efficient legislative organization of the House of Representatives.

It is important to realize that most of the credit for this successful record of the committee is attributable to the outstanding work and constant attention to detail of the subcommittee chairmen who carried through the entire legislative process the bills with which they were charged in subcommittee. I should like to identify the subcommittee chairmen, each of whom deserves the commendation of the entire Congress. For myself, I wish to thank each of them for the magnificent cooperation they have evidenced toward me personally throughout this Congress.

Hon. DEWEY SHORT, Subcommittee No. 1: Personnel.

Hon. HARRY L. TOWE, Subcommittee No. 2: Education and training.

Hon. PAUL SHAFER, Subcommittee No. 3: Organization and mobilization.

Hon. WILLIAM E. HESS, Subcommittee No. 4: Heavy munitions.

Hon. CHARLES R. CLASON, Subcommittee No. 5: Air matériel.

Hon. JACK Z. ANDERSON, Subcommittee No. 6: Procurement and supply.

Hon. LEROY JOHNSON, California, Subcommittee No. 7: Retirement; scientific research and development.

Hon. GEORGE J. BATES, Subcommittee No. 8: Posts and stations.

Hon. MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Subcommittee No. 9: Hospitalization, health.

Hon. WILLIAM W. BLACKNEY, Subcommittee No. 10: Pay and administration.

Hon. CHARLES H. ELSTON, Subcommittee No. 11: Legal.

And I cannot complete this report without again mentioning to what extent the wise counsel and minority leadership of Hon. CARL VINSON contributed to the successful operation of the committee. I am deeply grateful to him, as is, I know, the entire committee. The country is fortunate indeed to have so able a statesman and so devoted a public servant as CARL VINSON as a member of the great Committee on Armed Services. Here I would like to repeat what was stated in the previous report in this regard:

> Mr. VINSON'S sound advice and wholehearted cooperation contributed immeasurably to the accomplishments of the committee. His service in connection with this new, untried undertaking, has been an example of selflessness, loyalty to the national need, and unstinted sharing of personal talent rarely demonstrated in public life. The committee has been benefited greatly by his association and counsel.

Finally, as a parting word, I would like to reiterate my conviction that fundamentally the committee has exceeded all expectations because in all of its deliberations and official actions in regard to legislation, in regard to committee employees, in regard to its activities on the floor, partisanship, political or otherwise, has never entered. So long as this condition prevails, Mr. Speaker, you will continue to have a truly great committee serving the House of Representatives. Under the able leadership of the next chairman, whomever he may be from among the present committee membership, I know that the committee will proceed forward as well as or better than it has in the Eightieth Congress.

Below I am including in this report a tabulation of the laws considered by the committee during the past 2 years:

John Hollis Bankhead 2d

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. HUGH BUTLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, April 12 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD 2D, late a Senator from the State of Alabama

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is with real and sincere sorrow that I recall the departure from this life of my true friend and colleague, a great statesman, JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD 2D, while serving his third term in the United States Senate as a Senator from Alabama. Since 1931 Senator BANKHEAD had been a familiar figure in the Senate Chambers, and the loss of his friendship, advice, studied opinion, and fine example has been felt by all of his senate colleagues, irrespective of party.

It happens that I had the good fortune to serve on two committees with Senator BANKHEAD—the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and on Irrigation and Reclamation. In the course of that service I came to know him well and to appreciate his fine qualities of heart and mind. All his years of service here never caused him to lose his roots in his native Alabama soil. His heart was always with the average man of Alabama, the man who needed help, particularly the farmer. The laws he sponsored for the benefit of the farm tenant and the farmer generally are ample proof of that. With the passing of Senator BANKHEAD, the American farmer lost a true friend, for his welfare was always uppermost in his thoughts and actions.

For a period, he was chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. Although Alabama is not a reclamation State, those of us from the West who had a more direct interest in reclamation questions never had reason to complain of any lack of sympathy or helpfulness in dealing with these problems. As chairman of that committee, Senator BANKHEAD gave unstintingly of his time and counsel in helping us meet those problems of such direct and vital interest to our Western States.

Alabama, the South, and the Nation as a whole, can well remember Senator JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD with pride; for at all times he represented the best in Southern culture, a gentleman in every sense of the word, a man whose life was unselfishly devoted to one purpose—the welfare of the people of the United States.

Statement of Robert E. Freer, Chairman Federal Trade Commission

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH P. O'HARA

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, the National Federation of Small Business, Inc., which I understand has the largest individual membership of any business organization in this Nation, and as the record will show, has been most vigorous in its activities in an all-out program of antitrust law enforcement, in following out this program has requested me to insert in the RECORD the statement of Mr. Robert E. Freer, Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on June 2, 1948.

In the committee hearings both before the Senate and the House on the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, which I strenuously opposed, it will be found that the National Federation of Small Business, Inc., was in the forefront supporting my position. I have no grievance with the American railroads, and I opposed the bill because I believe it would set a dangerous precedent for the railroads to be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws. If free enterprise of this Nation is to remain an important part of our Nation's economy what we need today, more than ever, is stricter and more vigorous enforcement of antitrust laws.

Recently I introduced H. R. 3871, to remove the present quasijudicial functions from the Federal Trade Commission. Under this bill the Commission would file a complaint in the court, and the court would determine the facts. The purpose of my bill was in no way to injure the Federal Trade Commission, but on the other hand, to assist the Commission to proceed in the American way.

While I may not necessarily agree with all of the views expressed by Commissioner Freer, I hereby insert his statement, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ROBERT E. FREER, CHAIRMAN, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, TO A SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE, ON SENATE RESOLUTION 241, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION, JUNE 2, 1948

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is difficult to comment on Senate Resolution 241 for a number of reasons. No one can quarrel with the language of the resolution authorizing an inquiry by the committee into business practices and the impact upon consumers and businessmen of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Cement case and of other recent decisions of a similar nature. As a matter of fact, the Commission welcomes an opportunity to report to Congress on this subject. Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act directs the Commission to make investigations into business practices for the Congress and to report recommendations for legislation on similar matters. I do have some hesitation about the provisions of section 2 of the resolution because it suggests the need of legislation to legalize practices which were found to be illegal by the Commission and the courts in these cases.

The Commission has made numerous investigations of basing point and similar practices over a period of years, and I have with me copies of several reports to the Congress and to the President, showing the extent of the studies which were made and conclusions which were reached. These reports involve not only basing point practices in the cement industry but in other industries as well. I would also direct your attention to the proceedings of the Temporary National Economic Committee which required several years of time and the expenditure of several millions of dollars. A great deal of attention was directed to the basing point problem in its various aspects by the Temporary National Economic Committee which had among its members representatives not only of the departments and agencies concerned with industrial problems but also Democrats and Republicans from the House and Senate. You may recall that the Temporary National Economic Committee recommended legislation to Congress which would declare the basing point system to be unlawful regardless of whether it was supported by combination and conspiracy.

The suggestion inherent in the resolution that legislation may be needed to legalize what was condemned by the Commission in the Cement case is a serious one and it goes to the very roots of the antitrust laws. I think it should be made plain from the outset that legislation which would approve any practice prohibited by the Commission's order in the Cement case would be legislation to permit combination and conspiracy to fix and maintain prices or systematic price discrimination practiced for the purpose or with the effect of eliminating competition. The committee should not approach this problem with any idea that the practices prohibited in the Cement order can be made lawful without nullifying the Sherman Act and the antimonopoly provisions of the Federal Trade Commission and Clayton Acts. Thus, the fundamental issue presented by the resolution is not whether legislation should be considered to protect any particular business group, but whether the antitrust laws should be retained as a basic principle of our legal and economic structure. I venture to suggest that no inquiry can be made by this committee or by any other agency of the Government into every phase of antitrust law enforcement and the social and economic value of such laws, with $15,000 or by March 15, 1949.

The Commission is entirely willing to cooperate with this committee in examining the theories involved in the Cement case or the applicability of such theories to any other industry, but it should be made plain at the outset that the cement case does not have the radical and revolutionary effect that has been attributed to it in certain quarters. The decision of the Commission was to the effect that the cement industry had been engaged in a combination and conspiracy to fix and maintain prices and that systematic use of the basing point method of pricing in that industry had the effect of eliminating competition. This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States and I do not feel it appropriate at this point to seek to justify or defend it. I do commend to your careful scrutiny, however, the very detailed findings of fact by the Commission showing the methods by which the basing point system of uniform delivered prices in that industry was maintained. Certainly, it is unwarranted to assume that the effect of this decision is to outlaw all delivered prices or to require only free on board mill prices. The Cement case is simply a reaffirmation of a principle which is a fundamental one in the law and economics of this country that collusion and combination and conspiracy to fix and maintain prices is contrary to the American system of free enterprise. The Federal Trade Commission has always stood for preservation of the competitive system and has been directed by Congress to prevent unfair practices which interfere with the competitive system. The fundamental approach in the Antitrust Acts generally, and in the Federal Trade Commission Act particularly, is that competition is not only the life of the trade but also the primary force which will insure equal opportunity of business enterprise and the natural regulation of prices in the arena of the free market. The Commission has no desire to suggest how prices should be quoted in any industry or to advise or participate in any decisions of business management.

The difficulty with suggesting an amendment to the existing law which would permit practices prohibited by the Commission's order in the Cement case is that any such legislation would necessarily be a direct contradiction of the fundamental principles of the antitrust laws. I say this because there is nothing in the Commission's order in the Cement case which prohibits conduct on the part of any seller of cement which is not a part of a combination or understanding to eliminate competition, or which is not practiced systematically by the industry for the purpose or with the effect of eliminating competition in price between sellers. The Commission does not wish to be in a position of defending its decision in the Cement case but it certainly is interested in advising Congress of its position that the antitrust laws, ineffective as they may be, are good insurance against disappearance of our system of free enterprise.

I am sympathetic with complaints from individual industries and individual industrialists that competition often is a ruinous process, that often it is harsh and brutal, and that at times it results in inequities. No one can deny that this is so. Members of the committee have no doubt received communications from individual businessmen indicating that immediate ruin faces them as a result of the Cement decision. Such arguments were made to the Supreme Court and similar fears have been expressed to the Commission. It is our view that some of those fears are the result of misapprehension of the decision, some of them may forecast temporary dislocations due to shortages or to local inequities that may exist for a time following use of competitive prices on cement, and some of them may be attempts deliberately to misrepresent the situation. Really honest competition in any industry which has been subject to monopoly control over any extended period of time may actually force some producers out of business by removing the umbrella of monopoly control from the heads of high-cost, obsolete, or badly located plants. There is no question but that competition has this effect.

If you gentlemen are persuaded by evidence of some of the realities of competition that it is undesirable, and that business should be permitted systematically to restrain competition, to keep in operation badly located or inefficient producers, then you must face the issue squarely and provide at the same time some means of protecting the public from selfish excesses that must necessarily attend the right of any group of businessmen to control an industry and to meet together and act for their personal and private benefit. Even the most ardent foes of competition as a regulatory force admit that if it is systematically restrained and eliminated there must be some responsibility to the public which can only be borne by the Government.

If we are to legalize combinations in restraint of trade or systematic price discriminations for the purpose of eliminating competition, the Government must be accorded a voice in the regulation of such combinations and collusive arrangements to protect the public interest. Frankly, my 30 years of experience in legal matters involving the Government and business, which included representation of railroads, express companies, and other corporations as well as more than 20 years in the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, convinces me that it is undesirable to substitute for our present antimonopoly laws, under which Government's duty is only to keep competition free and fair, a system of regulation of business under which it becomes the Government's duty to see that industrial prices and practices are kept "reasonable" in the public interest.

There is nothing in our history of public utility regulation, either by State or Federal Government, which would lead me to suppose that any such regulation would be advisable in such industries as steel, cement, and the like. Some of you gentlemen on the committee have been in business. You have engaged directly in the struggle to manufacture and sell a product. I feel sure that your experience in business has been such that you recognize the dangers which would flow from permitting trade groups to get together to fix prices and marketing practices. There is always in any industry the marginal fringe of high-cost producers. This may be due to bad management, obsolete plant equipment, bad location to raw materials, or bad location to the market. The temptation in any of the formula pricing systems or price fixing combinations is to hold an umbrella over the marginal producer and to fix prices at a level which will be high enough to enable the marginal high-cost producer to operate at a profit. If Congress so relaxes the antitrust laws as to permit such conduct, it cannot long escape the establishment of some agency to pass upon such situations. This has become necessary in those fields of commerce which have been removed in part from the antitrust laws—railroads, utilities, and the like. The process of determining what is a fair rate for a utility or a fair value on the property of a railroad or a power company for rate-making purposes has been known to require from 5 to 10 years of litigation before administrative agencies and courts up to and including the Supreme Court of the United States, so that when a final decision is reached it has only historical significance and is wholly inapplicable to contemporary conditions. One classic example of this situation is an order of the Illinois Commerce Commission made on August 16, 1923, setting rates to be charged by the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. in the city of Chicago. The matter was in the Supreme Court of the United States at least three times, and a final decision was reached in 1934 when the Supreme Court after 11 years finally rejected the telephone company's contentions that the rates established by the Commission were confiscatory (Lindheimer v. Illinois Bell Telephone Company, ((1934) 292 U. S. 151; 54 S. Ct. 658)). This case, like so many others involving the question of whether the prices or rates fixed by a regulated monopoly are fair or reasonable, required the most meticulous, voluminous, and protracted court examination of the properties, practices, accounting factors, and prospects of the company so that in the last analysis the regulatory powers of the public utility commission were practically ineffective.

You are all familiar with the length of time which it took to reach a final decision in the Cement case, involving as it did several scores of producers and practices engaged in over a period of years. I venture to say that if the Commission had been required to examine the books of accounts of the industry to determine whether the prices charged for cement in any one period was reasonable, the case would have dragged on beyond the normal life expectancy of the youngest of the eminent counsel who participated in its trial.

I have a further reason for a dislike of modification of the antitrust laws which would require regulation by the Government We are all of us human beings and subject to the fallibilities of the species, including the likelihood of mistaken judgment. This applies equally to businessmen who would seek to regulate their affairs by agreement and understanding and to Government officials who would supervise such agreements. If a monopolist makes a mistake in business judgment or if a regulatory agency having control of an industry makes such a mistake, the consequences might be disastrous to the Nation as a whole. On the other hand, a mistake in judgment on the part of a wholesale grocer, a steel fabricator, a paint manufacturer, or any other individual concern in a multiple unit industry under free competition, will usually result only in the failure of the one making the mistake.

Furthermore, vigorous price competition plays a part in our economy which could not be played by any organized group in business or by any Government agency. If any Federal commission were to find unreasonable a price for cement, for instance, which had been fixed by the industry on the basis of a profit on the marginal producers' cost of doing business and to order that price reduced to a level which reflected the low-cost producer's cost of doing business plus a reasonable profit, with the necessary effect of driving out of business all the high-cost operators, I have no doubt that such an order would be declared by the courts to be confiscatory and, therefore, unconstitutional.

I am sure that this committee would not wish to see any Government agency empowered directly to order a man out of a particular business because of his inefficiency or bad location. Free competition may do this, but I, for one, would not wish to have the responsibility either of saying that a price was reasonable which kept the high-cost cement producers in business and penalized the public by depriving them of the benefits of lower prices which could profitably be charged by low-cost producers; or of saying to the high-cost producers "You must go out of the cement business."

At the present time the Federal Trade Commission has 562 employees. Messengers, clerks, stenographers, and administrative employees engaged in keeping records and other "housekeeping" activities constitute slightly more than half of the total. This leaves somewhere in the neighborhood of 260 attorneys, accountants, investigators, and other persons dealing directly with business practices, including the five Commissioners, The Standard Industrial Classification Manual, prepared by the Technical Committee on Industrial Classification of the Bureau of the Budget in 1941, lists 1,530 different industries in the United States and contains 43 pages of fine print listing manufactured products from abacuses to zwieback (machine made). The sixth edition of the Directory of Commodities and Services of the Office of Price Administration (1945) lists 245 pages of commodities and services, a total number of approximately 10,000. If Congress should adopt any modification of the antitrust laws which requires a test of reasonableness of price-fixing devices or discriminations in price which cannot be justified by cost differences, it would no doubt empower some agency of the Government to inquire into the reasonableness of such practices and of the prices so fixed. If Congress were to impose such a duty on the Commission, for example, there would be approximately 40 commodities and services and 6 different industries for every one of the present Federal Trade Commission staff not engaged strictly in administrative and clerical work. Of course, the Commission has, at the present time, only about 90 professional people engaged wholly or substantially in antimonopoly matters, so that to divide up the responsibility for industries and commodities between these men would result in an even more ridiculous situation.

I do not think that the task of regulating the reasonableness of monopolistic practices and of curbing unreasonable excesses through orders to cease and desist or court action would be any less complicated task than confronted the Office of Price Administration during the war, and the committee is aware of the many thousands who were employed on that work.

The necessary implication of the resolution under consideration is that the Cement decision and other recent Court decisions upholding antimonopoly orders of the Commission require legislation to modify the antitrust laws and interpret them. This can only mean that the fundamental principles of the antitrust laws are being questioned since there is nothing in the Cement decision nor in the other Supreme Court decisions, which is not based squarely on the fundamental principle of the law that price-fixing combinations or discriminations which injure competition are unlawful and against the public interest. Congress cannot, in my opinion, frame any legislation which would legalize the practices prohibited in those cases and at the same time preserve the antitrust laws as insurance of the continuance of our free-enterprise system.

It is interesting to note that in all of the totalitarian governments in modern history freedom of economic enterprise has been systematically restrained and business has been run either by a few large aggregations of private capital supported by the government or by the government itself. In any case, freedom of enterprise and the right of the individual to take his chance in competition and either to go broke or to run a corner shop into a big business simply does not exist. England is the only example I can recall of a free country which has permitted wide latitude in industrial combinations, many of them operating either under loose supervision of the Government or in cooperation with the Government. I understand from press reports that there is now pending in Parliament a proposal to establish an administrative agency patterned after the Federal Trade Commission with similar powers to prevent price fixing and other restraints of trade and commerce.

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate the position that the Commission does not oppose any inquiry into the operation of the antitrust laws as manifested in the Cement decision or any of the other recent actions of the Commission or of the Department of Justice, but it must be recognized from the start that in legalizing any of the practices found to be illegal in those cases, the mainspring of the free competitive system must be impaired. I also wish to express my firm conviction that legislation to relax the antitrust laws must necessarily provide some substitute check on the part of the Government to protect the public, and that such regulatory check is likely to prove far more onerous than any localized discomforts which may result from the judicially sanctioned breaking up of price-fixing combinations designed to protect inefficient or badly located producers from the rigors of competition.

Agricultural Record of Hon. Burr P. Harrison, of Virginia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the new Representative from the Seventh District of Virginia, the Honorable BURR P. HARRISON, has, during his short service, demonstrated time and again that he is a true friend of the farmers and understands their problems. Coming, as he does, from the Great Valley of Virginia, one of the agricultural garden spots of America, much, of course, was expected from him by the American farmers. He has more than measured up to every expectation. His father before him, long a distinguished Member of this House, was a great lover of the soil and the tillers thereof and was noted for his loyalty and devotion to American agriculture. The present Congressman HARRISON, therefore, did not have to acquire an agricultural interest after coming to Congress. It was born in him. It is a part of his very nature. And his interest is not confined to any particular phase of agriculture, but extends to all phases. What was said of his activities in behalf of the poultry industry in an editorial appearing in the Virginia Poultryman, which I shall later insert in my remarks, can with equal truth be said by the cattle, sheep, and hog farmers, by the tobacco farmers, by the wheat and corn farmers, by the fruit and vegetable growers, and so forth, because he has rendered the same faithful effective service to all segments of agriculture. He has also rendered the same faithful and effective service in connection with the activities to improve our soil and bring electricity back to the farm. No one in Congress, to my knowledge, has been a more devoted friend to Soil Conservation and Rural Electrification.

I was happy to see the Virginia Poultryman, the official publication of the Virginia State Poultry Federation, come out in its June 1948 issue, in a strong editorial commending the splendid record of Congressman HARRISON. It goes to show that farmers recognize worth and are appreciative. The editorial follows:

A FRIEND INDEED

The session of Congress which closed with a turbulent all-night session on the morning of June 20 considered some of the most far-reaching legislation of our times. As these important measures were debated on the floor of the House, BURR P. HARRISON, Representative from the Seventh Virginia District, was always alert to help with the poultryman's problems. Besides his active interest in legislation affecting the poultry industry, he was conducting a behind-the-scenes investigation into the legality of certain United States Department of Agriculture administrative interpretations in connection with their voluntary poultry-grading program.

Poultrymen will remember that Congressman HARRISON, whose home is in Winchester, has always been prompt to voice the poultryman's viewpoint on measures affecting the poultry industry. They remember his able work in their behalf in the attempt to have some of the abundant supply of storage poultry shipped abroad. This brought about a change in policies advocated by top Government officials, which, we believe, tended to curb the soaring spiral of feed prices. He was even more active in the fight against the "poultryless Thursdays" edict, which disrupted the normal flow of poultry from the farm to market last fall, causing untold hardship and loss to the poultry producers. His efforts, combined with those of other legislators and the leaders of the industry, culminated in the rescinding of the ban.

It is comforting to know that poultrymen have such a friend in Washington. He has cooperated closely with the elected officers of your federation, and he has proved that he is ready, willing, and able to explain the poultryman's side of the picture to his fellow Congressmen. He is a friend indeed.

Uncle Joe: Good Fellow

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN DAVIS LODGE

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following telegram from the Bridgeport Telegram:

UNCLE JOE: GOOD FELLOW

President Truman's remarks about Uncle Joe Stalin at Eugene, Oreg., need some explanation. The President said that he liked "Old Joe," that he was really a very good fellow, but he couldn't always keep his promises because the Russian Politbureau would not let him. "He is a prisoner of the Politbureau," the President said.

The President may have been merely joking, or he may have been trying to offer a rather flimsy excuse for the fact that he and his predecessor in office had been so frequently swindled by Joe Stalin. We say "he" and President Roosevelt were swindled, but it would be more accurate to say that the rest of us suffered the swindle. As our representatives the two Presidents gambled the family estate and their shirts on the good faith of a man who doesn't know the meaning of good faith, and naturally lost what they were gambling. They made the mistake, we paid the debt.

At Yalta, at Tehran, F. D. R. was the innocent sucker in good Old Joe's flimflam game, but at Potsdam Harry Truman contributed his full share. Between the two of them they practically gave away the war. It was Roosevelt who sold the Poles down the river into slavery and made Manchuria and the Balkans Russian territory, but it was Truman who bottled up our forces in Berlin, so that we have to pass through Russian military lines, by the courtesy of Russian commanders, to feed our own troops.

But it seems that it's all right because Joe Stalin is really a good fellow—only the boys won't let him do what he wants to do. Since the Politbureau is composed exclusively of men of Stalin's choice and since any man in it who opened his mouth against the leader's wishes would be promptly liquidated, it's a pretty flimsy excuse for having made such a bungle out of our foreign relations.

At any rate, if there's another conference, let's send somebody who doesn't like Uncle Joe.

General Chennault on American Military Policy in China During World War II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, there are few subjects about which American public opinion is more confused than China. Part of the confusion is unavoidable because so little is known by Americans generally about China's history, traditions, economic, and social background; and as a result there is so little understanding of the enormous difficulties involved in modernizing so old and fixed a cultural pattern, even if there were no complications.

Unfortunately there have been complications that would have overwhelmed a people with less vigor and toughness—such as foreign controls by outside nations for a hundred years, struggle with Japan for 30 years, including 8 years of all-out war and invasion, Communist infiltration and rebellion, endless blunders, or worse, by the nation China regarded as her best friend—the United States, plus a constant barrage of misrepresentation and propaganda to discredit China's leadership. One prolific source of such misinformation has been those American military and civilian officials who failed in China, but who are not willing to admit frankly their own miscalculations and mistakes, and instead seek to justify themselves by placing all the blame on the Chinese.

When a few American generals are unsuccessful in dealing with Chinese leaders, but many others, including Generals Wedemeyer, Hurley, and Chennault, are remarkably successful in dealing with those same leaders, it must be clear to all that in the cases of failure the fault is not all with the Chinese. Any sensible person will give more credence to the reports and views of those who succeeded, than of those who failed and quite understandably are deeply hurt inside.

One of the most tragic American figures in the last war was Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell. He was a magnificent combat soldier, a good field commander. But it was his misfortune to be given a job which required more political and diplomatic skill than strictly military. His main task was to get all sorts of people of various nationalities and tongues, civilian and military, to work together in a common effort in a whole theater. He was a Patton and the job required an Eisenhower. That is no reflection on him personally. It is no disgrace that a race horse cannot do a draft horse's work, or vice versa.

The inevitable result of Stilwell's being placed in the wrong kind of a job for his particular talents, was disastrous frustration and failure for all concerned. The recent publication of some of his own papers reveals far more vividly than any other source could, how much earlier he should have been transferred to another type of command, for his sake as well as everybody else's.

One of the American officers best fitted to work in China, as proved by his extraordinary accomplishments there, was Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault. He has recently rendered another great service to his country by filling in a lot of the blank pages in the sorry history of our war activities in the China theater. He speaks as he fights—vigorously, but considering his closeness to the situation he has reported with remarkable objectivity the blunderings at top levels in Asia and in Washington. Complete catastrophe was prevented only by the courage and tenacity and heroism of thousands of Americans and Chinese all down the line who paid in blood for their superiors' mistakes in brains.

A careful reading of the accompanying articles by General Chennault as told to Clyde Farnsworth and printed in the Scripps-Howard newspapers will clear away a lot of the fog and confusion about some of the troubles in China, and their causes:

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 22, 1948]

CHENNAULT, THE FLYING TIGER, SPEAKS

(When Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault organized and inspired the famed Flying Tigers to help repel the Japs, the United States still was shipping scrap iron to Japan. Now 58 and retired, the general has written the inside story of our policy toward China. He believes that unless we send arms to help the National Government defeat the Communists, we cannot escape war with Russia. He tells why, beginning today in the World-Telegram.)

(By. Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, as told to Clyde Farnsworth)

Six hundred million people—the population of China and the United States—are today the direct heirs of a decade of American policy blundering in China.

Barring an eleventh-hour miracle of American understanding, intelligent sympathy and active aid, coupled with a last-ditch miracle of Chinese courage and endurance, the pay-off will be the choice between two disastrous alternatives:

The disaster of a third world war, or

The greater disaster of a surrender to global despotism.

In either event free people the world over would stand as heirs to a tragic legacy of American ineptitude. The colossal irony of it would be that we Americans would have blundered our way either to war in defense of our interests and liberties or into an abject surrender of them.

ARTICLES TO NAME NAMES

In these articles I intend to reveal some of the details of this American blundering. I intend to tell who was responsible for it, and why.

I am going to give names and dates and places. Some of the material which I shall reveal has up to now been secret. Much of it lies buried in Army, State Department, and White House records.

Some of the reading will not be pleasant. It is not easy for us as a Nation to admit that we have behaved in an unconscionable way toward a nation of friendly people who have trusted us.

It is not easy to admit we have gone back on our promises to an ally.

It is not easy to confess that we bartered away China's land in order to get Russia to enter the war against Japan, and that we did this without China's consent.

VALUABLE LANDS LOST

It is not pleasant to reveal that we have done nothing to compensate China for giving up her most valuable lands to the Communists.

I went to China in 1932, and have spent almost all of my time there since. I organized and led the Flying Tigers. I knew, and, when war came, served with all of the senior American commanders in the Far East. As commanding general of the Fourteenth Air Force I was fully familiar with the shabby American policy on China. I saw it in operation during the war. Until I left China recently I was a witness to the disastrous results of that policy.

In the dark days at Chungking I watched Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek hold his beleaguered, poverty-stricken troops together and rally his ragged troops again and again to resist the savage thrusts of the Japanese Army.

The Generalissimo's battle was a most inspiring example of courage and leadership against overpowering odds.

STABBED IN BACK

I am ashamed to say that in the midst of his great effort, he was repeatedly stabbed in the back by some of his American allies.

I was present, for example, when the late Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, then the American commander in China, castigated Chiang Kai-shek before President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill. I shall relate this occurrence, and others.

Altogether, American policy toward China, and the activities of some American officials in China, do not make a pretty picture. But it is vitally important that the American people know the background of American blundering in China. They may pay for it with the blood of their sons.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZED

It is not my intention or wish to absolve the Central Government of its own sins of omission or commission in relations with the United States. The Chinese Government has been arraigned many times and on many charges by its American critics. There is nothing I could add, but what I have to say may help put that criticism in proper perspective.

In one limited sense the failure of American-Chinese relations, and I regard the present situation as proof of that failure, stems principally from the natural difficulty of reconciling two disparate cultures, each with its own deeply ingrained and sometimes mutually incompatible superiorities and deficiencies.

Beyond that understandable limitation, however, there has been inexcusable failures by the executors of American policy that could have arisen only from carelessness, prejudice, short-sightedness, bad judgment, and, I am ashamed to add, a certain inclination for mischief making.

In these reminiscences I hope to reconstruct part of the skeleton of American relations with China during the last 10 years. By dragging even part of that skeleton from the closet I hope to help other Americans to understand the background of our troubled approaches to friendship and collaboration with the Chinese National Government.

One basic question must be answered: How is it possible that the United States, having defended the traditional principle of the open door in China at the cost of war with Japan, should have countenanced and even abetted the substitution of Russian Communist influence for Japan's shattered imperialism in China?

RUSSIA TAKES OVER

Part of the answer lies in the historical fact that we didn't actually choose to defend the open door in China until assaults by Japan were directed against us at Pearl Harbor. That was 4 years after Japan set out to conquer China and 10 years after she grabbed Manchuria.

That grimly simple chronology should teach Americans that aggression can never be cheaply compromised.

Seeking the rest of the answer to our casual attitude toward Russian Communist influence in China we shall have to explore certain aspects of the recent relations of Americans with the recognized Government of China on the one hand and with Chinese Communist puppets on the other.

MAY BE TOO LATE

This is properly a historian's task. But history in our time has become so fluid that we cannot afford to wait for it to cool before learning its substance. It may be too late if we must wait for the researchers of another generation to piece together that sad record.

Our decade of blundering in China started in 1937 after Japan started the conquest of China which at the very outset was inimical to the vital interests of the United States and the peace of the world. We did nothing, or next to nothing.

The 1931 story of Japan in Manchuria finds a parallel today in Russia's sponsorship of Chinese Communists. This needs no further proof than the fact that these puppets were armed with weapons taken from the Japanese Kwantung Army by Russian troops who invaded China's northeast under an American invitation delivered at Yalta.

The 1937 story of Japan in China may soon be paralleled also—not by Russian invasion in the Japanese pattern, but through puppet forces of Oriental Communists. The design is the same or even more grandiose in its strategical implications than was Japan's ill-fated coprosperity sphere.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 23, 1948]

CHENNAULT SAYS UNITED STATES AIDED COMMIES IN CHIANG ATTACK

SHANGHAI, March 23.—China's desperate plight today is traceable to American encouragement of Chinese Communists and discouragement of the Chinese National Government.

These policies came to flower in the middle years of our 4-year wartime alliance with the central government of China and bloomed for a long time thereafter—too long, I believe.

Our encouragement of an armed rebellion against recognized government had an equally strange counterpart in a campaign of faultfinding against that government. The complaints started somewhere on the wrong side of helpful criticism and ranged downward to outright vilification.

POLICY SUITS FELLOW TRAVELERS

These two sides of our policy were plainly in accord with the wishes of Communist fellow travelers, if not actually the result of their maneuvers in wartime Chungking and elsewhere.

How far our policy was directly subverted by fellow travelers I am not prepared to say. Since I am more concerned here with results than motives, that question strikes me as academic at any rate. The fact remains that saboteurs of American-Chinese collaboration could scarcely have hoped for greater success if American officials who fulfilled that hope actually were fellow travelers.

I do not charge that the responsible American officials deliberately played the Communist game in Chungking, but I do charge they played into Communist hands, and in so doing soured our partnership with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's government at a critical stage of our war with Japan. They came close to souring it forever.

This is the only construction I can put on the wartime and postwar tendency of American policy now happily though recently disavowed by both President Truman and Secretary of State George C. Marshall.

CRISIS IN 1944 CITED

The interplay for back patting for Communists and back biting for the Central Government coincided with and helped precipitate a military and political crisis in free China in 1944. Had it not been for Generalissimo Chiang's ouster of General Stilwell, then American theater commander, it would almost certainly have brought final ruin to the joint Chinese-American effort.

We shall consider in turn both aspects of American policy in effect at the time—first the spectacle of official American antipathy toward a wartime ally, and second our public love affair with the Chinese Reds.

Until General Stilwell was replaced by Lt. Gen. A. C. Wedemeyer in the fall of 1944, American staff dealings with the Chinese Government were almost continually pitched on a low level of overbearing pressures and threats. This was only a symptom of the low estimate which General Stilwell and his staff placed upon a Chinese leadership that had resisted Japan for 4 years before Pearl Harbor.

APPROACH GROTESQUE

The similarity between our military and diplomatic relations with China at the time was apparent. Such identity between them might have been expected since our military approach was so grotesque.

The American leadership seemed incapable of dealing with the Chinese on the basis of mutual understanding, helpfulness and respect. Most eminent sign offered by General Stilwell and his staff of their faith in the Chinese was their frequently expressed opinion that a Chinese soldier, properly trained, armed, and supplied, would fight. As a gross understatement of Chinese potentialities it amounted almost to slander.

RECITALS INDISCREET

As if by calculated design, official American estimates of the Chinese Central Government and its armed forces became common conversational stock wherever Americans gathered in Chungking. While American servicemen were ostensibly admonished to refrain from a discussion of the Chinese Government it appeared to be approved practice among American officers in Chungking to recite all the Government's real or fancied shortcomings on the slightest cue.

These recitals would have exceeded ordinary discretion even if they had represented the truth. That they did not emphasize the enormity of the indiscretions.

Frequent contacts between American military personnel and American war correspondents, while largely off the record, gave great currency to this mass-produced criticism of the Chinese.

I had my air headquarters in Kunming but made frequent visits to the Chungking headquarters. On each occasion I heard echoes of this campaign. It couldn't be called a whispering campaign, it was much too loud.

General Stilwell granted almost no interviews to American correspondents in Chungking but his uncomplimentary opinions were always available to them off the record. I have one example from a correspondent who arrived in Chungking in the fall of 1943. He asked General Stilwell in an off-the-record interview what the Chinese needed most for prosecution of the war.

ONE HUNDRED SELECTED HEADS

To this General Stilwell replied: "Cutting off of 100 selected heads."

General Stilwells low estimate of Generalissimo Chiang was freely expressed. I was a witness to a historical example of this.

In the spring of 1943 I was present at a meeting of the Combined Chiefs of Staff conducted by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in Washington. Prime Minister Winston Churchill was also present. Mr. Roosevelt asked General Stilwell for a summary of the situation in China.

General Stilwell rose and belabored Generalissimo Chiang at length. He accused the Generalissimo of being undependable, ungrateful, dishonest, and untruthful. President Roosevelt interrupted the tirade to ask: "Chennault, what do you think about this?"

CHIANG DEFENDED

I told them that in all my years in China the Generalissimo had never broken his word to me in any manner, that I considered him a great man, the only leader capable of holding China together. A full account of both General Stilwell's and my remarks on that occasion should appear in White House records.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 24, 1948]

CHENNAULT SAYS UNITED STATES DEMANDS PUT CHINA ON BRINK OF COMMUNISM

If American policy had attained its manifest objectives in China during the war with Japan, China would be Communist today.

I don't mean to say that this was the conscious aim in China, but I sincerely believe this would have been the result.

American policy, as applied during the first 3 years of our wartime military alliance with China, consisted principally of increasing demands upon the Chinese Central Government which at their peak in 1944 would have entailed virtual abdication of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

At the same time the executors of our war policy had been carrying on a "public love affair" with China's rebellious and autonomous Communists, hoping to arm them with American weapons and bring them into Nationalist China. They were planning to use the Communists in battle against the Japanese at a time when Chinese Nationalist commanders, never short of manpower, were begging for American arms and ammunition.

The strain in American-Chinese relations at the time turned Chungking dinner tables into a strange propaganda front, where Americans extolled Chinese Communists and berated the Chinese Central Government.

"PRIVATE FOREIGN POLICY"

It was a common witticism in Chungking at the time that the American headquarters staff was developing "a private foreign policy with John Davies (a State Department aid assigned to Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell), as Secretary of State."

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Davies is now a member of the long-range planning committee of the State Department, a job to which he was assigned by Secretary of State George C. Marshall. He is in charge of China matters.)

At the root of our mistakes in China was the refusal of the dinner-table clique to take the Communists' own word that world revolution was and would continue to be the Communist objective in China.

Social life in China's drab and battered wartime capital consisted mostly of dinners and cocktail parties. American officers and officials turned them into forums of propaganda for the Chinese Reds and unbridled criticism of the Central Government. Among these groups it became an easy conversational axiom that the Chinese Communists were not really Communists but just agrarian reformers.

FORCED RECALL

My subordinates were told by members of the headquarters staff that this loose talk had General Stilwell's sanction. I believe that this was indeed the case. But if it were not, General Stilwell's failure to curb such behavior was a fault of almost equal gravity.

This was the state of affairs in September, 1944, before Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, refusing the latest and most extreme American demands, forced General Stilwell's recall. For nearly 3 years, General Stilwell had persistently pressed for full control of Chinese armies under an exclusively American corps of officers down to colonel.

For some time, the Communists had maintained a mission in Chungking as a front for a thin pretense of collaboration with the Central Government against Japan. Actually, this mission was little more than an espionage post and propaganda center.

The principal function of the Red outpost in Chungking seemed to be press contact work. It was an ironical, though unpublished footnote to journalistic attacks on the dictatorial Central Government that much material for them originated with the Communist mission in Chungking.

MISSION TO YENAN

To that bizarre arrangement, the American theater staff eventually added another—an American military mission to Yenan, the capital of Communist China. The justification that was offered for our Yenan mission was that it supplied military intelligence in a theater notably lacking in such facilities.

But the Yenan mission was more than a source of intelligence. It served as a convenient bridgehead to the Reds for our military dealings, and an excuse as well as a means for occasional trips there by American correspondents and such State Department personnel as were partners with our theater staff in promoting friendship with the Communists.

If the American mission to Yenan was a source of valuable intelligence, there was a sad lack of security on such information. An officer told me that he had learned on a visit to the Chungking press hostel that Yenan Communists liked General Stilwell well enough to desire his leadership for their armies.

If this report was true, the failure of security on such a delicate matter was nearly as surprising as the information itself.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 25, 1948]

CHENNAULT SAYS STILWELL USED UNITED STATES AID AS CLUB

Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, the principal executor of United States wartime policy in China, wielded his control of American lend-lease supplies like a club throughout his 3 years of dealing with the Chinese Central Government.

With lend-lease as a kind of scepter he sought to rule China—and failed.

Friendly dignity and frankness were lacking from General Stilwell's conduct of our partnership with China. He was in almost constant disagreement with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and seemed to regard him and other Chinese leaders not as colleagues but as obstacles to be overcome. Threats were his usual form of persuasion.

General Stilwell and his staff alternated between pressure for broadened authority in China and criticism of Washington's "softness" on occasions when he was not given a free hand from there.

Official records should show his requests to Washington for authority to cut off supplies as leverage against the Chinese Government. Such moves of his were common knowledge in China.

From what I know of the circumstances of his recall in 1944 it is my belief that his final threat was that all aid to China would be halted unless he was granted free control of China's war potential—or more.

TERMS GUARDED

Terms of that historic ultimatum have been closely guarded by both Chinese and American Governments for different reasons, but I have no doubt what their effect would have been: Replacement of Generalissimo Chiang by Generalissimo Stilwell.

That was the goal which beckoned General Stilwell and conditioned his behavior throughout his tour of duty as commander for the Chinese-Burma-India theater and chief of staff for Generalissimo Chiang. Openly or covertly it therefore dominated American relations with the Chinese from the day General Stilwell walked out of Burma in 1942—with a proposal to put the Chinese armies under American officers—until the dramatic show-down of September 1944 which forced his recall from Chungking.

There was little in General Stilwell's performance up to that time to recommend him for the grandiose role he sought. Chinese military reverses which precipitated that climactic demand were as much or more the product of his own shortcomings and shortsightedness as they were of the central governments.

ASSET PERILED

Apart from all other considerations, General Stilwell's last demand on the Generalissimo, had it been granted, would have ushered in, I believe, the darkest failure of American policy in China. It could have brought disintegration of a nation whose friendship and strength, however often we have misjudged it, was and is our greatest asset in the Eastern Hemisphere.

I know the Chinese people well enough to be sure that neither General Stilwell nor any foreigner could ever rule them except through force and with the help of puppets of their own race.

Moreover, as Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer was soon to demonstrate as General Stilwell's successor, there was a decent and effective way of dealing with the Chinese Government which had never been tried by General Stilwell.

SUBTLE EFFECT

I could not avoid the suspicion, during the recent months of American insistence upon reforms as a prerequisite for assistance to China in her fight against communism, that Washington had reverted to the spirit of General Stilwell's discredited way.

Could it be that we have again made virtual abdication by the central government the price of our help? It is obvious that long after General Stilwell's recall and even after his death his faulty estimates of the central government have had a subtle and prejudicial effect on our postwar China policy.

I have the feeling that General Stilwell's failure in China was never officially recognized by Washington for what it was: The misfortune of a man to be assigned to a task beyond his talents and foreign to his nature, as I propose to show in these memoirs.

Lest this appear as recrimination against a man no longer able to defend himself I should explain that long before General Stilwell's death I observed the courtesy of laying such a critique before him. It drew no response that I know of.

Even so I would not have embarked upon a public telling of this story if I weren't sure that it would serve the healthy purpose of setting straight the record of one of the most misunderstood chapters of World War II—a chapter of presently vital importance to any proper understanding of our relations with China.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 26, 1948]

THREAT TO CHIANG OVER AIR POWER CHARGED TO STILWELL

In 1944, at the lowest ebb of the Chinese-American wartime alliance, Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, American commander in the China-Burma-India theater, considered withdrawal of the United States Fourteenth Air Force from China.

Whether he ever made a formal proposal to that effect to the War Department or whether it got no further than one of General Stilwell's final threats to the Chungking government, I am not prepared to say. Only theater files or the testimony of persons involved in General Stilwell's final negotiations before his recall in 1944 could reveal this matter in its full light.

To me, it was a notable example of General Stilwell's chronic blindness to the possible effect of steps taken to enlarge his authority in China. Considering the deterioration of China then in progress, such action or even the threat of it, if the threat became public knowledge, would produce complete chaos.

The Fourteenth Air Force was at that time the only effective military force that commanded public confidence in China.

However drastic this measure might appear, it seems to have been considered earnestly enough for it to come to the attention of Chinese authorities. My first knowledge of it came from confidential inquiries to me from Chinese who wished to know if the plan would be carried out. Theater headquarters had given me no information on the subject.

Looking back, I recall that the Fourteenth Air Force allocations of air-borne tonnage over the Burma hump had been drastically cut, together with reduction in deliveries to Chinese agencies. I am left to infer that these reductions were General Stilwell's alternative to actual withdrawal of the Air Force as means of pressure on Chungking.

In the autumn of 1943, 1 year before General Stilwell finally was recalled, there developed between the theater commander and Generalissimo Chaing a frictional crisis almost as serious as that which later forced General Stilwell out of China.

As it was, it nearly precipitated a request for his removal.

I witnessed part of the aftermath in which General Stilwell assured the generalissimo through Mme. Chiang he would abide by the generalissimo's wishes and instructions in the future. This assurance was given in what appeared to be a carry-over from an earlier conversion.

I was leaving this meeting when Mme. Kung, sister of Mme. Chiang, took me to one side and said, to my mystification: "General Stilwell has promised to obey the generalissimo."

SWEEPING PLEDGE

To this day, I do not understand the origins of this odd pledge, but it is certain that even if General Stilwell had wanted the best relations with the generalissimo, he could not, as American theater commander commit himself to such a sweeping promise.

I assume therefore the promise was made with no intention that it should be kept. As a fulfillment of that promise, it should be noted that the bitterest of all their disputes over the Burma campaign began immediately after the Cairo conference in November.

In my own experience with the Central Government, I have found friendly candor to be the only prerequisite to a satisfactory solution of mutual problems, and I never found it necessary to conceal the truth, however, disagreeable, from the generalissimo. It was my practice to tell him facts exactly as I saw them, and if the situation called for corrective measures, they were forthcoming.

NO KOWTOWING

It goes without saying that critical reports had to be rendered in a way that accorded due respect to the standing of the generalissimo as China's most decisive single personality, yet without kowtowing. In other words, friendly and effective liaison required only the same respectful and self-respecting behavior due to any chief of State whose friendship and help is valued.

General Stilwell impaired Chinese-American relations throughout his China tour of duty but probably achieved the peak of vituperation in a Chungking press conference following his recall.

General Stilwell's remarks were, of course, off the record, but one found its way into print. I have not kept a copy of Newsweek Magazine in which it appeared but, as I recall, Gen. Stilwell's parting estimate of Generalissimo Chiang was "that onery little ———."

CHENNAULT DESCRIBES HIS 3-YEAR QUARREL WITH STILWELL

My 3-year quarrel with Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell was not so much a collision of personalities as a collision of methods. His quarrel with the Chinese Central Government was both.

I am aware that General Stilwell, on advice of his staff, believed I had set the Chinese against him. This is not surprising. It is no easier to tell a superior officer that he is disliked for himself alone than it is for him to believe it.

Yet I'm sure that General Stilwell's manner and methods with the Chinese leaders were the principal factors in his failure and miscarriage of the Chinese-American war partnership from 1942–44.

From the outset General Stilwell took little pains to conceal his dislike for me as well as for the Chinese leaders with whom he dealt, and it was not easy for me to act as a friend toward him.

ADVICE REJECTED

I had had a longer and more intimate practical acquaintance with the war in China than any other American, yet my opinion was not once solicited by General Stilwell on any major problem in the conduct of our military relations with China. When I tendered advice it was usually—and contemptuously—rejected.

Although I was the senior air officer and concurrently Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's chief of staff for air, I was never called on to make a presentation at American theater headquarters of our air situation until General Stilwell had been replaced in 1944 by Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer.

MUTUAL TRIUMPH

I am not ashamed of the fact that I often differed with General Stilwell in the field of policy, but I faithfully executed every order he ever gave me. I do not contend I was always right and General Stilwell always wrong. Errors were made under my command but I believe they were largely mistakes of procedure rather than of conceptual judgment.

It was a mutual triumph of our discretion in this matter that kept our differences from an open break. As matters turned out, General Stilwell's failure pivoted entirely on his relations with the Chinese and his erroneous strategical choices in the prosecution of the war.

Long before his recall from China General Stilwell forbade me as commander of the Fourteenth Air Force, with headquarters in Kunming, to grant press conferences. Chungking theater headquarters held that only the theater commander could meet correspondents on that basis—this although the Fourteenth Air Force for most of the war was the only American combatant complement in China and hence was of interest to the American public.

The theater's order on this, coupled with the insistence of war correspondents, forced me to the ridiculous alternative of granting press interviews en masse instead of press conferences. The only difference was that the correspondents' stories referred to "an interview" instead of a "press conference." That hair-splitting seemed to satisfy all concerned, including theater headquarters.

VICTIM OF RUMORS

Toward the end of my duty as Air Force commander in 1945 it became apparent that, even though General Stilwell had been gone from China for most of a year, the weight of his judgment lay heavily against me in Washington. For the duration of my command I was the target of malicious rumors and gossip freely circulated by responsible officers, and I fear, fully credited in high quarters without reference to the true facts.

I was accused ultimately of not having cooperated with General Stilwell. Yet it had been the Fourteenth Air Force which General Stilwell at times considered a dangerous nuisance which had saved the American effort in China from total and perhaps irretrievable collapse, as I shall show in these memoirs.

With aerial victory achieved in China in 1945, but yet well ahead of any logistical justification, Washington established a superior air headquarters in Chungking. Not ostensibly, but in its practical application this move was a reflection on me.

I had come to China in 1937 because I was invited to assist in the formation of a Chinese air force. I had remained in China because I wished to help defeat Japan—4 years before Pearl Harbor. I had returned to active service in the United States Army after Pearl Harbor. In July 1945 my war usefulness to the United States and China was over and so I retired once more from the United States Army.

I did so with some disappointment in my heart, but also with the firm conviction that Joseph Stilwell was a fine field commander, one of the best divisional commanders the United States ever produced.

CHENNAULT SAYS UNITED STATES FUMBLED IN CHINA—AIR HERO OF ORIENT ASSERTS FRIENDLY AID COULD HAVE PUT NATION ON HER FEET

With wise and friendly American help, China might have been set upon the path toward postwar strength, stability, and self-improvement even while we fought beside her in the war with Japan.

Instead, opportunity slipped through careless or fumbling fingers, and half of Asia, the world's strategical center of gravity, eventually became the arena for a naked contest for position and influence which we have been losing to Russia ever since we defeated Japan.

In 1942 and even later, circumstances in China were propitious for a long-term investment by the United States in world peace and progress. The investment would have been small and, in any event, no more than we ought to have made even without promise of such high returns.

Apart from material aid, the investment called for was simply imaginative development of honorable relations with an allied nation whose inclination toward us had long been clearly evidenced.

While this would have been the easier and more profitable course, it required some breadth and depth of vision to see it and follow it. And the custodians of our China policy were blind.

REFORMS NEEDED

While helping China to fight, we could have used our good offices to promote governmental self-improvement instead of trying to tear her government apart, to induce needed reforms in China's armed forces instead of trying to take command of them, to foster peaceful conversion of Chinese Communists instead of strengthening their demands and inflating their ambitions.

In every case, we lost the way, abandoning the first alternative in favor of the second. Or when we tried the first we nullified our efforts by resorting at the same time to the second.

From the inception of Japan's attack in 1937, China became increasingly dependent upon the United States for aid. From Pearl Harbor in 1941 and onward her hopes for survival were pinned exclusively to American help and her military fate was identified with ours. In that circumstance lay our greatest opportunity.

Although great strides had been taken by the young Chinese Republic before the Japanese launched their conquest, there remained within the Kuomintang a resistant and unconverted core of reaction against western ideas and ideals of government and public welfare.

Our influence in China, correctly applied, would have minimized the strength of the Kuomintang reactionaries and conversely enhanced the stature of parts of the more liberal elements. Indicated procedures were essentially simple.

There was a natural tendency of the Central Government to entrust its relations with Americans to men who spoke our language, literally and figuratively. This brought to the fore Chinese who had been educated abroad and were generally progressive, predisposed to modernization and liberalization of Chinese culture. We had but to employ that ready-made advantage in our relations with the Chinese.

MUTUAL TRUST NEEDED

But it was a prerequisite that our dealings be on a basis of equality and mutual trust. Americans could gain no influence if they treated their Chinese opposite numbers with suspicion or condescension.

Americans charged with our military diplomacy could have chosen the high road to a beneficial and enduring American influence on China through its liberals and progressives from Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on down.

Instead they took the low road of suspicion and condescension. At times, our official attitude, as expressed by the theater commander, was scarcely short of contempt and open hostility—not only toward the liberal elements but toward the whole Chungking government.

If, through our encouragement, progressives had been enabled to show that they were the ones who could deliver the goods in relations with the United States, they might then have gained predominance throughout the Kuomintang.

Thus the Central Government and China would have been strengthened and it is possible, though not at all certain, that the Chinese Communist following could have been drawn away from their Marxist leaders and the nation united before Russia got around to using China's Reds as cat's-paws in her postwar expansion.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN

At any rate, such a strengthening of China by strengthening her government—would have discouraged any major exploitation of Chinese Communists.

Most of this reasoning falls into the category of "what might have been." Yet it shows, I believe, a poverty of imagination in application of our wartime policy of aiding China.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 30, 1948]

CHENNAULT HITS LACK OF PLANS IN BURMA—AIR HERO ACCUSES STILWELL OF USING JUNGLE CAMPAIGN FOR PERSONAL VINDICATION

In a strict sense, the China-Burma-India command, principal agency of our wartime alliance with China, never did any military planning for China under Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell.

I am certain that theater files for General Stilwell's tour of duty there will disclose no military plans except for the trans-Burma offensive or such air plans as the theater received from me as commander of the Fourteenth Air Force. If there were others, they were withheld from my headquarters.

If there was, indeed, even an approach to planning it was necessarily of highly theoretical nature because theater headquarters lacked the military intelligence necessary for adequate planning. Planning worthy of the name is inconceivable without trustworthy intelligence.

INTELLIGENCE FAULTY

Theater headquarters never placed any reliance on Chinese intelligence, which was both inaccurate and generally too late to be tactical value. Yet, on the other hand, it never attempted to organize its own intelligence facilities and at one stage actually forbade me to do so for the Fourteenth Air Force.

It was characteristic that the theater's staff should have insisted, as it did, that the Changteh offensive was "only a rice raid" despite the fact the theater had no observers on the spot and contrary to the testimony of my own air-ground liaison officers, two of whom went through the siege of Changteh with the Chinese troops. They called it a limited offensive.

To sustain air operations, I had to press the theater for authority to set up my own system which was the sole effective American intelligence agency in China at the time of General Stilwell's recall.

NO PREPARATIONS

Months after Changteh, when Chungking got a new G–2, he recognized the necessity of an intelligence net, and my Air Force observers who had worked at Changteh became its nucleus. Gen. William J. Donovan's Office of Strategic Services later offered personnel and equipment to reinforce our new agency, but the commitment was never fulfilled for one reason or another, including, I understand, General Stilwell's opposition.

Not only was there no theater planning for China—there were no preparations for planning. The Burma campaign appeared to be considered an end in itself. General Stilwell was to all intents satisfied to let China shift for herself.

He actually opposed a substantial air effort within China on the grounds that it was likely to provoke the Japanese. I have been at a loss to understand why he was so concerned over Japanese reaction in China and so careless of it in Burma.

I was always outspoken in favor of a maximum expansion of the Hump operation for the benefit first of a small but effective Air Force and second, strengthening of Chinese ground forces. I believe that offensive tactics were the only way to keep the Japanese off balance until Chinese armies were reasonably strengthened. For months, the air arm was our only supportable offensive weapon in China.

BURMA WAS OBJECTIVE

For the duration of the Chinese-American partnership, the essential military problem was logistical; how to bring our joint potential to bear on the enemy in the most advantageous place. Toward solution of that basic problem, General Stilwell contributed little or nothing.

For him, and therefore for the entire American effort in this theater, the controlling objective had become at the outset in 1942 General Stilwell's determination to fight his way back into Burma where he had sustained defeat in command of a Chinese expeditionary force.

General Stilwell may have felt sincerely at times that a Burma offensive opening a landline to China was a solution of China's logistical impasse, but I believe then, and believe now, his judgment was prejudiced by the prospect of personal vindication he found in the prospect of fighting back through Burma.

Even a casual analysis should have shown that owing principally to the terrain and distances involved, a landline through Burma would produce only a dribble of truck-borne supplies to the southwestern China terminus while a problem of almost equal magnitude remained in the matter of intra-China distribution. Toward effective solution of the latter problem, the theater command under General Stilwell made no contribution whatever.

Certainly the few thousand tons of truck-borne cargo which the Burma Road actually delivered to China could not be counted fair return for the enormous investment in time, lives, and material which went into that 3-year preoccupation of General Stilwell's.

LITTLE TONNAGE

In final proof, the actual road tonnage was inconsequential when one subtracted the weight of the trucks themselves, and it was not practical to maintain a one-way parade of trucks. Certainly, China needed vehicles, but her logistical resources could support no more than 12,000 to 15,000 vehicles until a port was opened, after which, of course, trucks could have been imported by sea.

But General Stilwell had produced neither a program of trucks for China nor an adequate plan for two-way trucking operations through Burma after China had all the vehicles she needed. It was an ironical footnote that one of the first and largest increments of vehicles over the Burma Road was 5,000 Dodges assigned by the United States Foreign Economic Administration in face of the opposition of both General Stilwell and the War Department.

At the war's end in 1945, China was at the saturation point on vehicles, and theater headquarters under Lt. Gen A. C. Wedemeyer, General Stilwell's successor, had already rejected as impractical the two-way truck operations which General Stilwell and his staff had entertained from the beginning.

Thus, the only substantial long-term justification for the Burma operation was the parallel pipe line which, for a few months, delivered fuel to southwest China.

[From the New York World-Telegram of March 31, 1948]

BURMA CAMPAIGN TOO EARTHBOUND—CHENNAULT SAYS STILWELL BLIND TO IMPORTANCE OF AIR SUPPLY LINES

The logistical nearsightedness of the China-Burma India theater command was evident in the way the trans-Burma pipe line was taken on as an objective in a campaign to open a land line into China.

The facts of the matter make it seem presumptuous for Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell's apologists to contend that the pipe line, if nothing else, justified his single-minded devotion to the Burma campaign.

The pipe-line project actually was conceived by China Defense Supplies, Inc., a Chinese supply agency established in the United States some months before Pearl Harbor, and was once spurned by General Stilwell.

In the summer of 1941, Shell Oil Co. engineers prepared designs for a portable pipe line to parallel the old Burma Road before the Japanese occupied Burma. The designs were presented to the Army Engineers in Washington, who did put them to use—but not then in Burma. The Japanese were in full control there by June 1942.

No consideration was given to a pipe-line project by the theater staff until the end of 1942 when China Defense Supplies and lend-lease representatives reminded Maj. Gen. Thomas G. Hearn, commander of General Stilwell's forward echelon in Chungking, that such a project existed. They suggested it be worked into plans for the Burma campaign then being shaped by General Stilwell. They drew up formal recommendations.

"I WANT BULLETS"

When the plan was laid before General Stilwell he disapproved it.

General Stilwell's quoted reaction was:

"I don't want any goddam pipe line—all I want is bullets, just bullets."

The pipe line, I believe, was eventually incorporated in the Burma plans at the insistence of Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, chief of supply in Washington. It was an important project. Without it the Burma Road would have been worth less to China than an increase of the Air Transport Command's hump operations by a single group of transports.

The theater's first priority, it always seemed to me, should have been maximum expansion of air transport facilities across the hump. Even after both the road and the pipe line went into operation a great majority of our tonnage continued to be received by air.

But General Stilwell regarded the Hump airline as competition for his Burma Road project, until midway in his operations the air lift of supplies became a considerable factor in his road's very success. The pipe line, as well as other phases of that campaign, including the Chinese offensive westward across the Salween River, would have collapsed without air-borne supply, including pipe for the pipe line.

It was notable that the new land line, the Ledo Road, which followed General Stilwell's progress through North Burma, was inadequate for supplying his offensive even though the ostensible justification of that land line lay in the tonnages it could carry to China.

NO RECOGNITION

At the beginning of 1942, American air lift over the Hump received stepchild's handling from the CBI theater staff. There was no clear recognition in responsible quarters of the full potentialities for air lift into China.

To China defense supplies officials seeking more tonnage by air in 1942, Maj. Gen. Clayton L. Bissell, speaking for General Stilwell, estimated that it would require 25 major airfields and 300 aircraft to deliver 5,000 tons monthly to the Kunming area. At the end of the war in 1945 the monthly Hump tonnage exceeded 71,000, with 722 planes, according to officials records.

But General Bissell's conservatism was not without foundation in his own experience and that of Gen. Earl L. Naiden before him as theater administrator of Hump operations before the Air Transport Command took over in 1942.

Hump hauling by the China National Aviation Corp. had substantially exceeded that of United States Army aircraft in that year. General Stilwell had acceded to reduction of United States Army transport planes from 100 to 25, ordered by Air Force headquarters on the ground that the hump route was impractical. And when hump operations were transferred to Air Transport Command, it was over the theater's sharp opposition.

For a few months after transfer of hump control, deliveries of 1,200 to 2,500 tons monthly were the rule, until the summer of 1943—and General Stilwell did not seem dissatisfied.

EFFORTS LIMITED

But I was. The hump tonnage conditioned all of my efforts to turn the China Air Task Force and its successor, the Fourteenth Air Force, into an efficient weapon, I was driven to believe that General Stilwell didn't want an air effort in China beyond the pinpricks possible with a few hundred tons of bombs, ammunition, fuel, and replacement parts each month.

My effort to achieve even a minimum level of airpower in China involved me in a three-cornered exchange with Generals Stilwell and Bissell in January 1943. At that time, when supply for the China Air Task Force was running about 750 tons monthly for fuel and oil, General Stilwell cut deliveries in half.

A study showed the China Air Task Force would have to abandon not only the offensive, but also air defense everywhere in China except Kunming, which was the China Air Task Force headquarters and the main Hump terminus. At the same time relatively large hump tonnages were being laid down at Yunnanyi, west of Kunming and well within range of Japanese planes in Burma and Indochina.

When I notified General Bissell that the reduction would allow defense of Kunming alone, he responded that I must maintain defense of Yunnanyi. I could only reply that I knew of no way to fly airplanes without fuel.

Then I flew to Chungking to make a personal explanation to General Stilwell. He gave me a verbal order to discontinue dedefense of Yunnanyi. I asked him to put this in writing. He did not. Instead, he reversed the order the next morning and restored the tonnage cut.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 1, 1948]

STILWELL ACCUSED OF IGNORING CHINA'S TRANSPORT PROBLEM

While Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell looked for the balm of personal vindication or panacea for China's logistical ills in his North Burma campaign, his Chungking headquarters utterly neglected the problem of internal transport in China.

There existed within China a situation that would have nullified Burma Road tonnages even if they had fulfilled their vastly overdrawn promise. Failure or refusal to do anything about it was characteristic of the theater command's 3-year preoccupation with opening a land line through Burma into China.

While the theater monopolized itself with driving a road through Burma it did nothing to improve overland transportation within China—either to facilitate distribution of mounting airborne supplies over the Hump or to prepare for the truckborne tonnages it had enthusiastically forecast.

SUPPORT IMPOSSIBLE

Thus, when the fury of the Japanese offensive broke on east China in 1944 the Chinese armies could not have been supported with overland supply if the theater had been disposed to do so.

How easily the theater had been satisfied in the way of intra-China highway transport was evidenced by the fact that it was practically nonexistent in 1942 and that a single civilian, L. K. Taylor, was engaged by Service of Supply near the end of the year to solve that problem.

Mr. Taylor, almost without assistance, was called upon to deal with as serious a logistical task as there was in the world and he was foredoomed to virtual failure.

SURVEY MADE

During 1943 some slight progress was made, but it was the result of efforts outside the theater staff. China Defense Supplies, Inc., and Lend-Lease representatives helped Mr. Taylor get spare parts for trucks operated by Chinese agencies which did most of the little hauling that went over China's nearly impassable roads.

Two civilian employees for China Defense supplies made the first survey of the highway situation for Mr. Taylor. This finally became the basic theater guide.

When a defense supplies representative delivered the study the chief of transportation for the China-India-Burma theater expressed kindly appreciation but added, without having looked at the report, he would like to know whether the intra-China transport problem was primarily one of rail or highway.

The state of intra-China transport was so alarming in January 1944 that I flew to New Delhi, India, rear echelon headquarters of the China-Burma-India theater, and requested that the Air Service Command be given that responsibility. I didn't want control myself, but I knew no other way to induce appointment by Service of Supply of officers qualified for that enormous job.

NO SOLUTION FOUND

As a result Col. Maurice Sheahan was sent to China in February. Considering that he, too, was denied an adequate staff and was handicapped by shortage of supplies, Colonel Sheahan accomplished much. Yet, when General Stilwell was recalled from China late in 1944, a few months before the opening of the Burma Road, nothing like a solution had been found.

Colonel Sheahan, an expert on transport, served as chief of transportation for the China sector of Service of Supply. He increased the capacity of the main line of communications from Yunnan Province to east China air bases from approximately 2,500 tons to more than 6,000 tons monthly despite obstacles put in his way by the theater staff.

From the end of 1943 General Stilwell was repeatedly advised that the Chinese were incapable of adequate transport without material assistance. It became imperative either to carry new trucks into China by air or to use air transport eastward from Yunnan Province.

SUPPLIES NEEDED

Yet in mid-1944, when General Stilwell conceded that the Fourteenth Air Force must be given supplies to oppose the Japanese offensive then under way in east China, he placed transport responsibility on the Chinese Government and would listen to no contrary advice.

The theater's logistical failure within China was of a piece with its estimates of the capacity of the Burma Road. Logistical evaluation of that major project was superficial from the outset.

When the road was given full dress deliberation Colonel Sheahan, who had attended the first Quebec conference in 1943, told me he had estimated there for the information of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill that the road would never exceed 32,000 tons a month. As it turned out this figure was too high.

However, the same conference produced an even higher official estimate for the Burma Road. It was arrived at simply by striking a balance between Colonel Sheahan's ostensibly conservative estimate of 25,000 to 32,000 tons and an off-hand figure of 100,000 offered by someone else.

PRIORITY GRANTED

General Stilwell's interest in greater Hump tonnage did not develop until after the spring of 1943, when the combined chiefs of staff at Washington granted my air force a priority on Hump tonnage up to 4,700 tons a month.

Then it became evident that his own tonnages for a Salween operation could be taken only after the Fourteenth Air Force had been supplied to the 4,700-ton level and he adopted a somewhat different attitude toward Hump operations.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 2, 1948]

STILWELL ACCUSED OF PRESSURE ON CHIANG IN SALWEEN DRIVE

It was at the Washington meeting in May of 1943 that I first learned of the strange disagreement among Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, the British, and the Chinese on strategy of the Burma campaign.

I had flown back from China as American air commander in China to render what counsel I might for this meeting of the combined chiefs of staff—the same meeting in which General Stilwell made the attack upon Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek already described in these memoirs.

The Chinese position, as made known then in the Generalissimo's absence was, in General Chennault's complete favor of a Burma campaign, but Chinese insisted it could not be undertaken without a British landing in South Burma.

The British agreed that a Burma campaign would be risky without such a landing but contended they lacked resources for that landing. General Stilwell insisted upon a limited Chinese-American-British offensive, even without a British landing.

These views were never reconciled, and the Burma campaign, which became the principal controlling factor of the allied effort in the China-Burma-India theater, represented a forced compromise of them.

FORCED COMPROMISE

In the end Chinese participation, in the lack of British amphibious operations against lower Burma, was gained by duress.

In April 1944, just 1 month ahead of the Salween offensive—the China side of the Burma offensive already under way from India—theater headquarters decided that because the Generalissimo "refused to fight, in spite of all our efforts," the April tonnage allocated to Chinese agencies would be diverted to the Fourteenth Air Force. Evidently this was the final pressure to force the Chinese across the Salween.

PRESSURE BROUGHT

In February 1943, General Stilwell had brought tremendous pressure to bear on the Generalissimo to precipitate that offensive.

This, despite the fact that neither the Ramgarh division (Chinese-trained at Ramgarh, India) nor the Salween forces themselves were ready for battle then, and airborne tonnage across the Hump amounted to only 2,000 tons or so with which to sustain the Salween forces.

The impoverished condition of the Salween forces as to arms, and even clothing, was common knowledge in 1943 when General Stilwell first wished to put them in battle. It was but little improved at the time of the actual offensive in 1944. That these men were able to cross the Salween and the towering Kaolikung Mountain Range was a tribute to the courage and tenacity of the common Chinese soldier.

CHIANG HELD JUSTIFIED

The Generalissimo, it is true, had given his word that the Salween forces would join in the battle for upper Burma, but that commitment was tied up with a promise of a concerted seaborne offensive against lower Burma. The Generalissimo's position was that, if there was no landing in southern Burma to disrupt the Japanese rear and sever their lines of communication, the Burma campaign was a poor investment for his own slim military resources.

In this, I believe, the Generalissimo was thoroughly justified, and I have never accepted the accusations of bad faith which were leveled at him as a result of that reluctance. British abandonment of a seaborne operation, it seems to me, freed the Generalissimo of his part of the three-way commitment.

That line of Chinese reasoning was apparent in the May meeting in Washington and had been put forward in February when the Generalissimo declined the Salween offensive on the logistical basis then existing. I understand the same Chinese argument was made in and following the Cairo meeting of November 1943, when President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Generalissimo Chiang reached an ostensible agreement on Burma strategy.

SITUATION SUMMARIZED

It was thus my impression that the Generalissimo never wavered in what I believe was sound strategical thinking until ultimate pressure was applied in the form of a threat to cut off all supplies to China unless a Chinese expeditionary force crossed the Salween.

It is desirable at this point to summarize the military situation of China during 1942 and 1943.

The Chinese Nationalists held the Chinese hinterland, including the southwest where China borders on Burma and considerable areas of north, central, and southern China, with the principal exception of the coastal fringes and the Yangtse Valley as far inland as Ichang, above Hankow.

China was cut off from all outside supply except that carried by air from India across the mountainous northern extreme of Japanese-held Burma—the so-called Hump.

NEAR STALEMATE

The situation was in a near stalemate which was only slightly affected by three important measures:

1. Training of Chinese troops which had retreated from Burma, or were carried by air to India, was started at Ramgarh, India. These troops, together with Merrill's Marauders, started a drive through upper Burma under General Stilwell in October 1943.

2. In southwest China the so-called Y-force was organized to train and supply a Chinese expeditionary force which was to cross the Salween River westward into Burma in concert with the eastward push and a British landing in lower Burma.

3. The Allied Chiefs of Staff at Washington in May 1943, reversed General Stilwell and accorded priority to aviation supplies across the Hump to sustain the Fourteenth Air Force on a restricted but nevertheless effective basis.

The resources of the CBI theater were bent toward fulfillment of the first two measures, but the third was almost consistently set aside by General Stilwell, and American airmen in China fought on a supply shoestring.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 3, 1948]

SALWEEN SUPPLY COLLAPSE CUT CHINA'S HUMP CARGOES

American supply planning for China's Salween campaign, precipitated in 1944 by Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell's pressure, was a dismal failure.

The record of that effort would seem to vindicate Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's reluctance to participate to that added extent in the Burma campaign when the British had already canceled an amphibious operation against lower Burma.

Whereas in the winter of 1942–43, General Stilwell had estimated a Salween expeditionary force could fight on its share of 2,000 airborne tons a month, he estimated in the Washington Strategy Conference a few months later that a Salween force would require a 10,000-ton stock pile.

In the final reckoning even that figure was shown to have been ultra-conservative.

DIVERTED FROM HUMP

Although the American Y-force had been in existence more than a year before the Chinese crossed the Salween River in May 1944 that organization had achieved no effective supply plan.

About 2 weeks before the expeditionary force was actually committed to battle, plans for an overland supply along the Salween River barrier to Burma were abandoned in favor of air supply. This necessitated an even greater diversion of aircraft from the Hump operation, with the result that China sustained a monthly loss of more than a thousand tons of Hump cargo.

Collapse of the Salween supply plans was brought to my attention in February 1944 when a representative of Gen. Dorn, Y-force commander, consulted me as to feasibility of laying down Hump supplies by air close to the Salween front.

He explained the Y-force lacked highway transport to move supplies west from Yunnanyi where they had been accumulated. He added that the Y-force plan also had called for about 70,000 pack animals to move supplies from truckheads into the zone of battle but that less than 3,000 animals had been obtained.

DIVERTED ALCOHOL

Apart from the lack of trucks, supply also was complicated by lack of any proper fueling preparations for the few trucks that were available. Thus, it became necessary to airlift 500 to 1,000 tons of alcohol monthly from Kunming to Yunnanyi—Chinese-made alcohol which the trucks burned in lieu of better fuel.

It is worth noting that the sudden diversion of fuel westward from the Kunming area practically halted the already inadequate truck movements east on the line of communications for the southeast China air bases. That occurred when the Japanese offensive through east China was developing.

COSTLY BREAK-DOWN

Despite all protests, priority of the Y-force on truck-fuel supply continued to curtail supply movement eastward, which in turn drastically reduced air operations in the face of the Japanese offensive and forced Fourteenth Air Force bombers to withdraw to rear bases when the battle for Hengyang was at its peak.

Since pack animals were not forthcoming, the only way to get food, guns, and ammunition to the Chinese in the mountains and valleys across the Salween was by air drop. It is apparent to me that this expensive break-down resulted from a misconception among Ground Force officers as to Chinese hoarding of trucks and pack animals.

General Dorn, the Y-force commander, clung to the idea such resources were being deliberately withheld by the Chinese. He even accused the Chinese of hiding trucks for postwar use, though it is difficult to conceive how a truck kept inactive through the war would have been much use afterwards.

CHINESE HOARDING

This is quite apart from the fact that careful inquiries failed to uncover any hidden trucks and failed likewise to upset the contention of Yunnan provincial authorities that to provide even half the 70,000 pack animals would cripple farming in that Province to the point of famine.

During the war, critics of the Chinese carried tales of hoarding to ridiculous extremes. When southeast China was being lost in 1944 as the price of American concentration on Burma, the cry of hoarding was raised against the garrison at Kweilin when it produced a miserable total of 2,200 light artillery shells.

The worst that could truthfully be said of the Kweilin garrison was that its hoard was too small, for Kweilin went under the Japanese offensive.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 5, 1948]

UNITED STATES ROBBED CHINA OF AID IN WAR

The bulk of the United States wartime assistance to China was expended on a border operation in Burma, while the situation within China deteriorated into near disaster.

I don't have any statistics showing the allocation of American effort during the period of the Burma campaign, but I would estimate that about 90 percent of the resources of the China-Burma-India theater were devoted to it.

From the outset, Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell and the theater staff virtually ignored the potentialities and need for expansion of airborne Hump tonnage, except as related to the Burma campaign.

Priority given the Burma operation was clearly evidenced by diversion to the Ledo Road construction of eight aviation engineer regiments. These had been sent to India to improve airfields serving air transport across the sub-Himalayan ranges of upper Burma.

NEAR UTTER COLLAPSE

Our strategy—that is to say, General Stilwell's strategy—restricted the military effort in China to a holding operation—and in 1944 not even that. Instead of making an offensive contribution to victory over Japan, China herself skidded close to utter collapse. This occurred in 1944, when a Japanese offensive lopped off east China and immeasurably reduced the possibility of opening a Chinese port in coordination with American forces in the Pacific.

The Burma campaign restored a long and arduous truck route of questionable value and laid a pipe line into southwest China as its most substantial direct contribution. It also permitted a southward shift of the Hump air route from the extreme altitudes required up to that time.

Probably it would never have been possible to airlift more than 30,000 tons monthly into China if northern Burma had not been cleared by General Stilwell's campaign.

But without that campaign all our resources—not merely a fraction—could have been invested in China itself.

LOST BY SLIGHT MARGIN

We would not then have lost east China on the very eve of Japan's defeat. Lest this should appear too much like second guessing, I should add that this was my concept of desirable strategy, even while our strategy was being formulated. Further, I believe we might have held east China, even with the investment of the bulk of our resources in Burma.

The margin by which we lost east China was so slight that it is conceivable a few hundred tons of supply, delivered in the right places and at the right time, could have saved the situation.

I am forced to accept one or two difficult alternatives in my estimate of General Stilwell's planning: Either he considered the Burma landline a fair bargain in exchange for east China, with its string of forward airbases. Or he lacked the simple foresight to strengthen China internally, while at the same time fighting for northern Burma.

Our simplest military objective in China was to sustain the Central Government, whose resistance, since 1937, had tied up more than a million Japanese soldiers, so that its collaboration might be insured when it became necessary to put an American expeditionary force ashore on the Asiatic mainland.

WARNINGS IGNORED

No sound estimate of the situation within China had ever been made by theater headquarters before the Japanese offensive developed early in 1944. Even then repeated warnings and recommendations made by my headquarters were consistently ignored or underrated.

Theater relations for collaboration with the Chinese command were inadequate and strained. Concrete American aid to the armies defending free China was nonexistent except for support by a small air force whose very effectiveness was continually hampered in a competition for Hump tonnages.

In February 1944, I warned General Stilwell of what then appeared to be a threatening offensive by the Japanese. The enemy's air movements were the first detectable sign of the approaching offensive.

PLEAS FOR SUPPORT

I pleaded for Hump airlift during March to support attacks on enemy shipping as well as to maintain the strength of the east China airbases.

I repeated my pleading in March and my warning in April—this time in more concrete form, because the enemy's offensive intentions were by then clearly apparent. But to these early warnings General Stilwell's best reply was that we should do the best with what we had, which was precious little.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 6, 1948]

TROOPS ON JUNKET AS JAPS CUT CHINA

General Stilwell refused him priority on critically needed Hump supplies, Major General Chennault reveals in the fourteenth article of his series on United States military and diplomatic mistakes in the Far East.

In 1944 the Japs drove a continental corridor through China from the north to the south, a line of communications to connect Manchuria with the conquered territories in southeast Asia, Indochina, Siam, the Malays and Burma.

It nearly liquidated China's national existence and the sum of 3 years of American investment in a wartime partnership with China.

No effective plans had been made to meet that offensive and the only forces to oppose it were the small Fourteenth Air Force, the fledgling Chinese Air Force and the Chinese armies that never received a ton of American help until it was too late.

In February, 1944, when I first warned Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell of the enemy's threat, I asked for 8,000 tons of fuel, ammunition, and other supplies for Chinese and American planes during March. I received a little more than half of that request.

PROTESTED IN APRIL

In April, just before the offensive started, I protested that such deliveries forbade accumulation of reserves and would virtually halt our increasingly profitable attacks on Japanese shipping, Japanese airdromes and lines of communication.

A total of 46,900 tons of enemy merchant shipping and two gunboats had been sunk, and 16,700 tons probably sunk, by the Fourteenth Air Force in January. There was every prospect of increasing that monthly destruction to at least 150,000 tons. Radar-equipped B-24's were being prepared for sweeps of the China seas as far as the Philippines.

Tonnage restrictions, I pointed out, precluded reserves necessary for support of Chinese ground forces in the path of the impending offensive. I emphasized that the enemy drive would threaten the security of all free China, including the B-29 bases then being completed near Chengtu in Szechwan Province. Air defense of the Superfortress bases had been delegated to the 14th Air Force, of which I was commander.

PRIORITY DENIED

General Stilwell's first response was that the combined chiefs of staff would not accord me priority on Hump supplies so long as the Japanese expedition out of Burma persisted in its threat to Imphal and the India-side Hump bases in the Brahmaputra Valley. The fact was that General Stilwell's Burma campaign was drawing heavily on Hump tonnages.

General Stilwell told me that air activity in China would simply have to be cut down.

The record will show that I predicted, with fair accuracy, the nature of the Japanese offensive which broke in April in the Yellow River Valley of Honan province, and the following month in Hunan province below the Yangtze.

Whereas my request for March tonnage, 8,000 tons, had been reduced almost by half, and my April request was cut almost as severely. I proposed, first, a restoration of the April cut, a minimum of 8,000 tons for May, and an increase to 10,000 tons monthly thereafter.

As an alternative to such allotments, I suggested temporary allocation of fuel then being stock-piled for B-29s near Chengtu and, if a future emergency should demand it, a diversion of prospective B-29s to tactical attacks within China in place of strategical attack on China's borders.

WARNED STILWELL

I told General Stilwell that unless action were taken along one of the recommended lines, it would appear necessary to inform Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek that he could no longer depend on effective air support for his armies, and at the same time advise Washington that the security of all China was jeopardized.

General Stilwell's reply was still that the India-side crisis forbade improvement of Hump supply to China, and the Generalissimo should not expect the Fourteenth Air Force to do the impossible. But there came an odd sequel to this exchange of messages, one of the strangest orders I ever received as senior American air officer in China.

That order made it the primary mission of the Fourteenth Air Force to defend the Chengtu area, even at the expense of abandoning strikes against enemy shipping and support of Chinese ground forces, which were then facing their greatest trial.

It came in the form of a letter from Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commanding the India-Burma sector of American air forces in the China-Burma-India theater, but the letter stated that General Stilwell concurred.

ACCOMPANIED BY EXCUSE

Ostensible justification for such a directive was that I had raised doubt as to our capacity to defend the B-29 bases, when actually I had raised a question of the security of all China. There had never been any question of our ability to provide local defense for the Chengtu bases.

My general orders had designated as the primary mission of the Fourteenth Air Force, the defense of the China-side hump terminals and support of Chinese ground forces. This I was forced to point out to General Stilwell, asking that he not tie my hands with a contradictory order.

I assured him that air defense of the Chengtu area was child's play by comparison with the tasks of helping stem Japan's offensive, then developing in Honan, and preparing support for the Chinese expeditionary force which soon would cross the Salween River, headed for Burma, after the Japs had stepped off in north China.

POINTED COINCIDENCE

That military coincidence deserves emphasis: The Salween expeditionary force, the best troops in China, poor as they were, was precipitated, under General Stilwell's pressure, into a campaign beyond China's borders, even after the Japs had started to cut off east China.

While the crisis burst into flames in China, General Stilwell and Stratemeyer fiddled over local air defense of the Chengtu area a question that did not exist. General Stilwell dismissed the matter finally with a suggestion I had been crying wolf.

From Burma he radioed sarcastically that he was relieved to learn there was no problem of air defense at Chengtu. That seemed to satisfy him, for he reserved action on the China crisis until months later, by which time east China was doomed.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 7, 1948]

AMERICAN WAR AID TO CHINA WAS TOO LITTLE AND TOO LATE—MOST OF UNITED STATES SUPPLIES WERE SPENT IN BURMA UNTIL GOING GOT ROUGH

Americans entrusted with military supply to China in the war with Japan spent most of it on reopening Burma and when the going got rough in China in 1944 their help was too little and too late.

One Japanese objective in 1944, eventually achieved, was an inland line of communication reaching from Manchuria through China to southeast Asia. The Japanese record of that success is also an American record of warnings unheeded and requests denied.

By May the Chinese military situation had worsened so much that there was no chance of checking the Japanese offensive without dipping into fuel flown across the Hump to supply prospective B-29 operations from bases near Chengtu—and possibly at the same time using superfortresses for strikes on Hankow, seat of the Japanese offensive south of the Yangtze River.

EMERGENCY AT HAND

Under a directive of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, the theater commander, held authority to make emergency use of the XX Bomber Command as well as other available theater resources. In mid-May I messaged General Stilwell that an emergency was at hand.

I proposed he establish a deadline for declaration of an emergency to permit such forward planning as might still be possible. To this he responded with a hint that the prospect of such help would cause the Chinese to lie down on the job. Until the crisis became "unmistakable," as he put it, he would declare no emergency.

That message was dated just 1 day before the Japanese stepped up on their offensive south of the Yangtze in Hunan Province, May 25, 1944.

NOTHING TO DO

There was nothing I could do except keep the Fourteenth Air Force and the Chinese-American composite wing attacking with all they had while at the same time reiterating warnings that disaster was impending and pleas for tonnages necessary to keep even that small air arm in operation. My warnings and pleas produced no concrete results until mid-June, by which time the theater could not fail to see for itself that disaster was at hand.

In the latter part of April and first half of May Honan Province, above the Yangtze, had been overrun as a prelude to an offensive in Hunan below the Yangtze. On June 5 Changsha, the capital of Hunan, was brought under attack, doomed to fall 2 weeks later.

There never was a chance of halting the Japanese in Honan, but the contrary was true in Hunan. There we had strong air units backing up Chinese armies which needed only a minimum of rearming and supply to give a good account of themselves. This was especially true of troops commanded by Gen. Hsueh Yuen, in position from Changsha southward to Hengyang.

TWO THOUSAND TONS A MONTH

I believe that 2,000 tons a month of additional Air Force supply in April and May might have saved the situation south of the Yangtze. That would have been little more than the tonnage lost at the same time through last resort to air supply for the Salween-Burma campaign.

Troops used by the Japanese in Hunan were for the most part brought up the Yangtze and staged southward out of the Hankow area. Hankow was their principal base and the Yangtze their line of supply, both highly vulnerable from the air. Aerial attacks would have reduced the enemy power at the outset, thrown the offensive off stride, cushioned its impact for benefit of the underarmed Chinese.

The manner in which Gen. Hsueh Yueh's troops defended Hengyang for 47 days supports this belief. Yet the theater had written off Hengyang even before the first assault and indeed viewed the east China fighting throughout with easy defeatism.

STILWELL LEAVES BURMA

As the Japanese moved artillery into place against Changsha on June 5 General Stilwell left Burma, where he had been spending months to open the Burma Road, to give the situation in China his attention. He avoided a conference with me at Kunming and flew on to Changking where he conferred with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

In Chunking General Stilwell agreed finally to increase the Fourteenth Air Force tonnage to levels I had recommended and he told me of this decision on a brief Kunming stop-over en route back to Burma. The brevity of his visit forbade consideration of what was then a problem equal to that of getting tonnages into China—their movement eastward to our air bases over a line of communication that had long been neglected.

[From the New York World-Telegram of April 8, 1948]

B-29's Bombed Hankow 6 Months Too Late

When Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, commander of the China-Burma-India theater, finally acknowledged China's military crisis of 1944 he wavered between helping save American air bases in east China and withholding supplies from Chinese defenders as a means of humiliating the Chinese Government. He lost on both counts.

When in June of 1944 he finally acceded to my requests for increased Air Force supply, I outlined the need for a B-29 attack upon Hankow, main base of Japanese offensive then raging in Hunan Province. I urged that it be run as soon as possible, even as the first mission of the superfortresses which were scheduled to take up long-range bombing from their forward bases in west China.

In that conference in Kunming on June 6 General Stilwell half indicated agreement with that proposal. My idea was that the Fourteenth Air Force would follow up the superfort's attack with everything we could throw in concerted effort to smash the Japanese base and help the Chinese Armies organize effective defense in Hunan.

DIRECT ACTION URGED

When I proposed direct action to obtain the B-29 mission General Stilwell said he would handle the matter from his Burma headquarters.

He did apply to Washington, as I understand, but his request failed to show that the result sought could be obtained no other way. So B-29's did not bomb Hankow until 6 months later, after the Japanese had opened a continental corridor through east China. That mission, while successful, was a plain case of locking the barn door after the horse had been stolen.

However, General Stilwell did declare on June 8 that an emergency existed in China. By that time it had become necessary to mobilize practically all resources of supply and transport. But owing to long neglect of China's internal transport, the weight of this eleventh-hour effort was dissipated.

BOMBERS WITHDRAWN

Failure of the eastward line of communications necessitated withdrawal of the few medium bombers we had in east China and limited fighter operations to air-base defense at the very height of the battle for Hengyang, June 23 to August 8, when air support was most needed and conceivably might have saved that strategic center.

In the first days of the siege of Hengyang I proposed contributing 1,000 tons of Fourteenth Air Force tonnage for delivery of light automatic weapons and certain other infantry armament to Gen. Hsueh Yueh, who I was sure would fight if given a little help. The theater carefully weighed this suggestion.

General Stilwell then recognized the need for drastic action but his idea was to take command of the Chinese armies. Accordingly Chungking theater headquarters declined my suggestion.

Somewhat cryptically the theater messaged that General Stilwell was working on a "proposition" that would humiliate the Chinese Government and that he was unwilling to help Chinese ground forces in the east until his "proposition" jelled.

LOOSE TALK STARTED

Responsible theater staff officers at Chungking meanwhile started loose talk to the effect that the Fourteenth Air Force was committed to defending east China without help from the Chinese and that the crisis at hand was proof of such ill-conceived commitment.

That small talk utterly ignored the record of my early warnings and requests. It cropped up as a sequel to another of the theater's conversational indiscretions—dinner table talk at Chungking as to Chinese plans for evacuation of the wartime capital.

NO TIME

In the latter part of July when Hengyang was still resisting bravely I requested assignment of troop-carrier planes to meet repeated requests for airdrops of ammunition and medical supplies to the Chinese defenders. Replying to that request, General Stilwell summarized much of his past attitude toward China and her plight. He said that inasmuch as such airdrops would only lead to further demands, which would not be answered, he would not supply the planes.

In late July the theater's attitude, officially expressed, was that east China was lost. Ignoring the fact that the theater had given no material help to Chinese armies in the east and had neglected surface transport even of air force supplies, the theater reasoned in one classic message that "the old threat, entreaty, expostulation, and bluff treatment" again was called for, but there was no time even for that.

The theater was then belatedly hoping to double the capacity of surface transport to east China to 6,000 tons monthly by September, which might have been enough to halt the Japanese if it had been done earlier. But the problem had lain unsolved too long. East China was lost.

Anti-Fascists Face Prison Terms

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEO ISACSON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRFSENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Speaker, 11 fine, resolute Americans are now facing the prospect of prison terms because they are anti-Fascist to the core and refused to waver from this patriotic resolve even in the face of victimization by a committee of this Congress.

These 11 Americans, Mr. Speaker, are members of the executive board of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, an organization which alone for years has assumed the compassionate task of supplying food and clothing and medical care to thousands of Spanish exiles who fought Francisco Franco in the first Fascist aggression on the soil of Europe.

These 11 anti-Fascists stanchly refused to betray to the Committee on Un-American Activities of this House the names of the Spanish recipients of the generosity and compassion of the people of America, nor would they surrender to the smear mills which derive their information from the House Committee on Un-American Activities the names of these warm-hearted American contributors to whom the lives of anti-Facsists in a world threatened anew by fascism are still precious.

This unyielding defense of anti-Fascists in America and abroad from the prying purposes of the House Committee on Un-American Activities—and, yes, from the spies and menacing agents of Franco in America—has been adjudged "contempt of Congress" by the courts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, this charge was nothing but a shabby legal fiction when it was first instituted. It is now, in the afterlight of the whole affair, a cruel and truly un-American legal spite against a handful of loyal, high-principled American men and women. The basic American sense of fair play should long since have intervened against the intention of the House Committee on Un-American Activities to pillory thousands of decent, earnest Americans for daring to be generous to the victims of the first wave of the world Fascist attack that culminated in World War II.

Mr. Speaker, I should like the Record of this Congress to show the kind of Americans this Congress has sought to brand as un-American, the stanch people from many walks of American life who have without question been railroaded to the prison gates for having the courage to defy an attempt to subject thousands of their fellow Americans to vilification, terrorism, and imprisonment for the "crime" of being charitable to the victims of fascism.

These are the Americans who are being punished with fines and jail sentences for their loyal Americanism and unyielding antifascism:

Howard Fast, one of our Nation's most widely read novelists, whose brilliant career as an author has been almost exclusively devoted to illuminating the lives and actions of men such as George Washington, Thomas Paine, Governor Altgeld, and other builders of the American democratic tradition.

Dr. Edward Barsky, noted New York physician and surgeon, who went to Spain at the time of the civil war to employ his science in healing for the anti-Fascist fighters of democratic Spain who fell before the Falangist assaults of Franco. For the last decade he has devoted his whole energies without recompense to the humane task of bringing comfort and healing to the exiled anti-Fascist victims of the Spanish civil war.

Dr. Lyman R. Bradley, noted educator, author, and professor at New York University, who has devoted his time and energy freely to raising money for the Spanish Republican exiles.

Marjorie Chodorov, housewife, and long active in the fight against fascism.

Harry M. Justiz, attorney and leader of American Committee for Yugoslav Relief.

Dr. Jacob Auslander, prominent physician, who was awarded the Selective Service Medal and civilian war citations by Congress, President Roosevelt, and President Truman for his outstanding volunteer work during the war. He is renowned for his work in general medicine, psychiatry, and cancer. He is a member of the New York County Medical Society, American Medical Association, and Physicians Forum.

Ruth Leider, distinguished attorney, who specializes in immigration law.

James Lustig, an officer of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO. He received a Red Cross citation for his outstanding work during the war.

Manuel Magana, merchant. He was an organizer of the Committee for Democratic Spain and has been president of a patriotic, fraternal organization for Spanish-Americans since 1942.

Dr. Louis Miller, outstanding heart specialist.

Charlotte Stern, education director of the Hotel and Club Employees Union, A. F. of L. She was formerly a school teacher and economic researcher.

Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court has thus far refused to review the convictions of these people by the lower courts.

Thus they stand deprived of the ultimate recourse of American justice and now face jail for maintaining the courage of their anti-Fascist convictions. This decision of the Supreme Court is a serious lapse, a perilous withholding of the right of review in a case on which the whole structure of American civil liberties depends.

However, no lapse of any tribunal of man can dim the eternal luster of the sacred human concept that has motivated these people:

Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend.

Liberal Funds for Reclamation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY C. DWORSHAK

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, there have been many unfounded charges that the Eightieth Congress has not acted favorably on appropriation bills to provide funds for reclamation development. This is not true, because in both sessions of this Congress, the Bureau of Reclamation received more liberal treatment than at any time in its history. I ask permission to insert a most informative article on this subject written by Harry J. Brown, Washington correspondent of the Salt Lake Tribune, which was published recently in that paper.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IDAHO SENATOR LAUDS GOP AID FOR WEST

(By Harry J. Brown)

WASHINGTON.—Senator HENRY DWORSHAK, the first Idahoan ever to attain membership on the Senate Appropriations Committee, is highly elated over the progress by the Eightieth Congress, Republican in both branches, in fulfilling its promises made to the West in the campaign of 1946; he is equally proud of the part he played in getting for reclamation construction larger appropriations than ever before had been made by any Congress, including all those of the 16-year New-Deal era.

This achievement, he points out, was accomplished notwithstanding the scandal and maladministration shown up in the Bureau of Reclamation and the Interior Department—all of which, he says, will be corrected when the Republicans come into full power after the November election.

On moving over from the House to the Senate, DWORSHAK was the only newly elected Senator to be assigned to the Appropriations Committee 2 years ago, after serving 4 years on the House Appropriations Committee. He was on interior, agriculture, labor and Federal security, and Government corporations, and chairman of the subcommittee handling appropriations for the District of Columbia. Appropriations being one of the two most important committees of the Senate, and the busiest, the young Idaho Senator found little time for rest or recreation during his 2 years of Senate service.

On his subcommittees he proved a tower of strength in supporting justified appropriations for the development of the West and its resources. Much of his time not devoted to work on appropriation bills was spent on the Public Lands Committee, whose subcommittee on mines and mining he heads. This committee deals exclusively with legislation affecting the West.

OBTAINS PROJECTS

It is a matter of deep gratification to the Senator that in at least two instances he was able to obtain funds for projects in his State in face of the fact that the President and the Budget had refused to recommend appropriations for either. In the case of the Palisades project on the upper Snake River, he points with some pride to the fact that he obtained authorization of appropriations amounting to $2,000,000, which will be ample to get that project started once the preliminary surveys and negotiations have been completed.

President Harry S. Truman and the Budget had refused to recommend funds for this or any other new project, but as a member of the Appropriations Committee, Senator DWORSHAK was able to override Presidential opposition. He looks upon this as a doubly satisfying accomplishment in light of the fact that President Truman, when in Blackfoot early in June, had, according to the Associated Press, told the people of Blackfoot that "he had sent Congress a message outlining the need for water in this section, but that there has not been much response."

STATEMENT UNTRUE

That statement by the President, says the Senator, is wholly unjustified and untrue, because the President instructed the Budget to ask for no funds for the Palisades project, and Congress—the Republican Congress—voted $2,000,000, notwithstanding the President's objection. The truth, as the Senator points out, was the direct reverse of what the President had publicly stated.

The same situation was true with respect to an appropriation of $500,000 which the Senator obtained, in the absence of a Budget request, to relocate highways and complete preparations for construction of the Lucky Peak Dam, for which another $90,000 was carried in the flood-control bill.

In light of the rule of Congress that appropriations must be supported by budget estimates, Senator DWORSHAK achieved something unusual in getting these two appropriations for his State in the absence of Presidential or budgetary recommendations. The same flood-control bills carry $300,000 to complete planning for the Snake River flood-control dams below Lewiston.

CITES RECORD

In reply to President Truman's oft-repeated charge that the Republican Congress is hostile to reclamation, and that only from a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President can the West get the funds to which it is entitled, Senator DWORSHAK cites the records of the Appropriations Committee and of the Treasury which show that up to the time the Republicans took control of Congress 2 years ago the largest annual appropriation for reclamation had been $117,000,000.

Last year the first session of the Republican Congress voted and made available for reclamation $233,000,000, and the session recently closed approved a reclamation program for the fiscal year 1949, which opened July 1, totaling $275,000,000. The actual cash appropriated in June was $245,000,000, together with contract authorizations amounting to $3,600,000, and the reappropriation of an unexpended balance now estimated at $26,000,000.

President Truman to the contrary, Senator DWORSHAK says the Democrats have never approached the liberal appropriations made for reclamation by the Republican Eightieth Congress. In face of the figures, he says, the President's attempt to mislead the people of the West falls to the ground. The facts and Government records do not sustain the President in his political appeal for western support on the reclamation issue.

Hon. John H. Bankhead

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS
OF MARYLAND
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, April 21 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, late a Senator from the State of Alabama

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD made a very large place for himself in the contemporary history of the United States. For a number of years he was the outstanding leader in Congress in the formulation of agricultural policies. Particularly during the war the vision and statesmanship of Senator BANKHEAD played a large part in providing our own country and our allies with the essential food needed to win the war. Many measures of far-reaching import were sponsored by him and carry his name. In all matters affecting the Nation's security, its economic improvement, and particularly those designed more quickly to win the war, the influence of Senator BANKHEAD was very pronounced, and quite often his position was decisive in molding legislative sentiment.

He devoted himself exclusively to the public service from the very moment he became a Member of the Senate. He was tireless as a worker, well informed, and farseeing in all matters with which he associated himself. Extremely popular with his colleagues of both parties, he had the skill to array his facts in such fashion as to win a large measure of support to the positions he took on public questions.

The farmers of the Nation, for whom he labored so long and well, know of his great reputation and signal efforts in their behalf. He has added luster to a great family name already rich in the development of the history of the United States. His passing left a great void in the Senate and his memory will long be green in the thoughts of those with whom he was associated.

My Report to the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEO ISACSON
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Speaker, as the second session of the Eightieth Congress reaches adjournment, I desire to include in the Appendix of the RECORD the following report to the people of my district on the work of this Congress and my actions as the representative in Congress from the Twenty-fourth Congressional District, the Bronx, N. Y.:

MY REPORT TO THE PEOPLE

On February 17, 1948, you—the people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District, Bronx—elected me your Congressman by an overwhelming vote. I said then that the only way in which I could show my appreciation and gratitude to you was by giving you the most conscientious representation of which I was capable.

I have no political bosses to report to.

So I report to you—the people of my district—the people who elected me.

I want you to know how I voted, what bills I introduced, and how I fought for the things in which we both believe—peace among nations, prosperity and security in our country, the elimination of anti-Semitism and Jim Crow, establishment of the Jewish state of Israel.

1. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT FOR THE JEWISH STATE OF ISRAEL AND FOR LIFTING THE ARMS EMBARGO

This is how I fought

On March 5, 1948, I introduced House Joint Resolution 343 to implement the UN Palestine decision, to lift the arms embargo against Palestine and to build world peace.

On March 22, 1948, I called for a congressional investigation of the substitution of a foreign policy dictated by the oil monopolists for that previously declared before the United Nations.

On March 24, 1948, I exposed the oil pipeline diplomats who hold the almighty dollar more sacred than the blood and sacrifices of the Jewish people fighting for a homeland.

On April 14, 1948, I introduced House Resolution 533, calling upon our Government to recognize and support the newly formed Jewish state. A month later President Truman did recognize Israel. But that recognition was an empty gesture because the embargo was not lifted and partition was not implemented. Israel remained at the mercy of the Arabs and their oil-smeared instigators.

On March 30, 1948, I demanded that no Marshall plan money be used to purchase Middle East oil or to exploit the concessions of the oil cartelists in Arab lands. The purpose of this amendment was to prevent nearly $4,000,000,000, or about 25 percent, of Marshall plan funds for the next 4 years from being usurped by the Arabian-American oil combine, which has openly plotted the downfall of Israel.

On June 4, 1948, I spoke out to deny $1,200,000,000 of ERP funds to Great Britain, who armed the Arabs against Israel with the help of a previous loan from the United States. I charged that the ERP money would also be used to arm King Abdullah, of Transjordan.

I am the only Congressman from the Bronx who voted against giving this money to England.

I stated to the House at the time of the debate on these proposals:

"The grave is not the destiny of Israel.

"The manner in which we can most effectively tell this to the British is by denying them the use of American dollars to be used to kill the Jews."

2. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT FOR PEACE AND A STRONG UNITED NATIONS

This is how I fought

On March 22, 1948, I introduced the Wallace peace plan as a substitute for the Truman-Marshall-Vandenberg military intervention plan. The Wallace plan would administer nonmilitary aid to the stricken countries of the world through the United Nations, with the only qualifications being hunger and need.

I introduced H. R. 6780 to take the profits out of war by Government ownership of the principal munitions industries. "Why not draft the profits of the wealthy," I asked the Republican-Democratic coalition, "before we draft the lives of our youth?"

Neither Truman nor VANDENBERG answered that question, which every father, mother, and son in our Nation demands to have answered.

I know that I spoke the fervent hopes of the fathers and mothers, sisters and sweethearts of our community when I declared during the draft debate:

"The people of America do not want another war.

"The people of America want peace.

"They want a permanent peace—a dignified peace—achieved through world cooperation in the United Nations."

I am the only Congressman from the Bronx to vote against the peacetime draft.

3. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT AGAINST ANTI-SEMITISM AND JIM CROW

This is how I fought

I have steadfastly fought against all measures legalizing discrimination against any group of Americans because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

I fought to amend the draft law and other military measures to prohibit segregation in our Air Forces and other armed services.

I fought for an FEPC clause in every Government contract.

I fought the plot of southern reactionaries to bypass the Supreme Court by using Federal funds to set up segregated schools in the South.

I fought against your tax money and mine going to any State or institution which denies opportunity to any person or group for reasons of race, color, creed, or national origin.

I introduced legislation to extend the provisions of the wage-hour law to cover the people of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, as well as groups excluded from it in the United States.

I defended the people of Puerto Rico from vicious attack on the House floor and I support to the fullest the aims of the Puerto Rican people for full independence.

And, finally, I have exposed the "gentlemen's agreement" by which both old political parties talk civil rights in their party platforms but sabotage any and all legislation guaranteeing these rights to Negroes and other minorities.

4. I PLEDGED TO HALT INFLATION AND REDUCE PRICES

This is how I fought

I have battled against inflation at every step.

I introduced a bill to restore price control and demanded that prices be rolled back to safeguard the American standard of living.

5. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT FOR STRONG RENT CONTROL

This is how I fought

On March 16, 1948, I demanded legislation to extend effective rent control and to keep local boards from having the power to raise rents. My fight was successful, but unscrupulous landlords and real-estate lobbies are already seeking to sabotage this victory.

6. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT TAFT-HARTLEY, TO FREE LABOR, AND RAISE WAGES

This is how I fought

I introduced a bill calling for the establishment of the $1 minimum hourly wage for the whole United States and its Territories.

I introduced a bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley law, freeing American labor to organize and bargain collectively to raise the American standard of living and combat inflation.

I fought for a $1,000 annual increase for all Federal and postal workers, whose incomes, through congressional neglect, have become hopelessly inadequate for a decent existence in this period of unchecked inflation.

And, finally, I rose on the House floor to defend the great name of the late Sidney Hillman, beloved of millions of men and women of organized labor, when his memory was slurred by a notorious enemy of labor in Congress.

7. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT AGAINST THOUGHT CONTROL AND FOR CIVIL RIGHTS

This is how I fought

I testified for a full hour before the Senate Judiciary Committee and battled on the House floor to help defeat the infamous Mundt bill, which would have established thought control in America by threatening jail sentences and fines for persons or groups fighting for peace, civil rights, and an end to discrimination and Jim Crow in America.

I have fought attempts to impose thought control on Government employees through so-called loyalty provisions which deny them the right to join unions of their own choosing or to associate with groups which seek to extend democracy in America by fighting poll taxes, lynching, and Jim Crow.

On March 9, 1948, I fought against further appropriations for the House Committee on Un-American Activities, which persecutes men and women of science and progress in our country while it gives aid and comfort to race hatred, religious persecutors, and the lunatic fringe of American Fascists. This committee was responsible for the Mundt bill, its only piece of legislation offered in 10 whole years of using millions of dollars of public funds to hound and persecute loyal Americans.

I am the only Bronx Congressman who voted against this appropriation.

8. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT FOR HOUSING AND TO WIPE OUT SLUMS

This is how I fought

On March 1, my first day in Congress, my first official act was to sign Discharge Petition No. 6, to free the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill from suppression in the House Banking and Currency Committee.

When this bill finally came before the House it had been so completely butchered in obedience to the demands of the real-estate lobby that not even its original sponsors supported it.

I fought for a housing bill which would build a million and a half low-priced public housing units each year for 10 years, with preference for veterans now living in squalid huts and cramped spare rooms.

I fought for a housing bill which would eliminate the slums of America, the verminous, tumble-down fire-traps out of which real-estate operators and landlords make their greatest margin of profit at the expense of the poorest people in our country.

I will continue to fight to house America decently, to give the men who won the war for us homes at prices and rents they can afford to pay, to bring up the children of today and tomorrow in surroundings of sunlight and health and security from disease, exposure, and squalor.

9. I PLEDGED TO FIGHT FOR FREE PUBLIC HEALTH AND TO EXPAND SOCIAL SECURITY

This is how I fought

I challenged the record of this Congress in ignoring the problem of the health of America, letting die unheeded the great and forward-looking measure of New York's beloved Senator WAGNER to insure the health of future generations in our country.

I have done my utmost.

You who supported my candidacy on the new party ticket of Henry Wallace did so because you were outraged by the Truman betrayal of the Jewish people of Palestine with the connivance of the Republican majority in Congress.

You backed me as the Wallace candidate because you prayed for peace and the Republicans and Democrats and their stooges are driving, without reason, toward war.

You correctly placed the blame on both the Democratic and Republican parties for the wild inflation which has stolen the savings of millions of people and has placed a decent American standard of living far out of reach of the wages and incomes of all but a small percentage of well-to-do people.

You rejected the do-nothing lip service of the old political parties and their representatives in government to America's constitutional guaranties against racial and religious discrimination, segregation, lynching, deprivation of the right to vote and the denial of equal opportunity to millions of American Negroes and members of other minority groups.

You demanded full civil rights for all Americans. The Republican and Democratic parties and their representatives from the North as well as the South have not only withheld those rights from the people but they have abridged and destroyed constitutional guaranties of free America.

You resented the plotting of the Republicans and Democrats to force the Taft-Hartley law on American labor to prevent the wage earners of our Nation from organizing and bargaining to combat the profit-mad corporations and big-business interests.

You opposed soaring rents, the housing of veterans and their wives and babies in tin huts and rat-infested shack villages, the refusal to enact a public-health program and to expand social security. All these and many other conditions perpetrated and enabled by the present administration and the Eightieth Congress are deliberate misdeeds of the two old political parties; and you who suffer because of these conditions know full well who is to blame.

Furthermore, you were increasingly alarmed at the determination of the old parties, which are ruled by greed and wealth, to silence the voice of protest of the American people by suppression of civil liberties and the intimidation and victimization of those who dare to speak out against the plunder of the American people by the moneyed interests of the country.

For these reasons you elected me to carry on your fight in Congress.

For these reasons I went to Congress determined to fight without compromise for a program of human betterment, peace, and security for the American people.

For these reasons I battled ceaselessly against skyrocketing prices, greedy landlords, the real-estate plotters who mulct the veteran by preventing the construction of anything other than high-priced homes and high-rental apartments.

For these reasons I exposed and fought the oil-smeared war profiteers who have openly sabotaged world peace by sacrificing the Jewish people of Palestine to marauding Arab legions, British-armed, British-led, and backed with loans and bribes from the oil cartelists and the Truman bipartisan policymakers.

I have fought to keep my pledges.

I have fought to give you the kind of representation to which you are so richly entitled.

With your renewed support in November, I pledge to continue this fight in the next Congress for peace, security, health, housing, freedom of labor and political opinion, full opportunity for all and a rich, abundant future for our children and our children's children regardless of race, creed, color, or station in life.

A Summary of Housing Legislation Acted Upon by the House Banking and Currency Committee During the Eightieth Congress

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. KUNKEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, despite the current criticism of the House Banking and Currency Committee on the score of inaction on housing legislation, an examination of the record shows that the committee has been active, prompt, and effective. Furthermore, in practically every instance the bills reported were designed to give maximum opportunity to our returning veterans. Every bill reported, save one, was approved by the House of Representatives. In the great majority of cases the bills became law.

The best measure of effectiveness is an analysis of results. In 1946 and 1947 the building program was hamstrung and delayed by controls, regimentation, and bureaucratic mismanagement. In the year 1946 only 437,800 nonfarm residential dwelling units were completed. Public Law 129, from the Banking and Currency Committee, removed these controls as of June 30, 1947. In 1947 completions of nonfarm residential dwelling units increased to 835,100. This was nearly double 1946 completions. It was the second largest number in any 1 year in our history. During the first 5 months of 1948 356,000 nonfarm residential dwelling units have been started. This is an increase of 28 percent over the near record year of 1947. In all probability, 1948 should exceed the old record year of 1925. The final total completions should top the million mark, if the present rate continues. Unofficial estimates indicate that June totals will exceed those of May by from forty to sixty million dollars and will exceed the figures of June 1947 by from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000.

There are three other facts to which I urge your attention:

First. Cumulative number of GI home loans as of May 25, 1948, 1,212,696; cumulative total of GI home loans as of may 25, 1948, $6,961,935,926.

Second. Every effort has been made to increase the building of rental units.

Third. The GI and his housing problem has been the committee's primary concern.

A summary of the bills reported and the subsequent action taken in the Congress in respect to them follows:

HOUSING BILLS PASSED FIRST SESSION, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS

Public Law 129, H. R. 3203, Housing and Rent Act of 1947: Provided for the continuation of rent control in defense rental areas until March 1, 1948. The act removed the remaining governmental controls on the construction industry except that the Housing Expediter was given authority to require a permit as a condition for the construction of any building or facilities to be used for amusement or recreational purposes. Manufacturers of prefabricated housing accommodations were given assistance in the form of FHA guaranty of loans made through usual banking sources, up to 90 percent of the amount which the National Housing Administrator estimates to be the necessary current cost of manufacturing such houses.

Public Law 120, S. 1230: Extended the provisions of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, for an additional 2 years with respect to the authority of the Federal Housing Administration to insure home modernization and improvement loans. The proceeds of these insured loans aid the property owner in such work as repairing the foundation of his home, replacing his worn out furnace or heating system, improving the lighting or plumbing system, building a new barn, service building, and many similar repairs or improvements.

Public Law 301, S. 1361: Provides for the completion of low-rent and slum-clearance public-housing projects where municipalities pay the difference between actual cost of construction and statutory or allocated cost of construction. Thus, 100 projects for which Federal funds had previously been allocated could be completed and provide additional housing for the communities concerned. The bill also contains a provision relating to eviction of occupants of public-housing projects.

Public Law 85, H. R. 2780 superseded by S. 854: Provides an additional $35,500,000 to further carry out the program of providing temporary housing for veterans in municipalities and at educational institutions. These additional funds will supply housing accommodations in projects which had been suspended in 1946 and early 1947 due to lack of funds and rising construction and labor costs. The housing provided by this measure was urgently needed for veterans and their families attending educational institutions, and to help relieve temporarily the housing shortage for veterans and their families in municipalities.

Public Law 372, H. R. 2800: Liberalizes the provisions of the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933 with respect to certain loans made by Federal savings and loan associations. It provides that such associations may invest their funds in loans insured under title I of the National Housing Act, home loans guaranteed or insured under the GI bill, and other loans for property alterations and repair.

Public Law 311, H. R. 3448: Increased the maturity of mortgages acceptable as collateral security for advances by Federal home-loan banks to member institutions, from 20 to 25 years, thus aiding the financing of 25-year GI mortgages.

Public Law 366, H. R. 4395: Increased FHA title VI authorization by $200,000,000 and gave the President the power to further increase the authorized amount by an additional $200,000,000 should the need arise. The bill makes available FHA title VI insurance in financing the purchase of Government-owned permanent war housing.

Public Law 394, H. R. 4675: Authorizing an additional $750,000,000 for title VI, FHA insurance.

HOUSING BILLS PASSED SECOND SESSION

Public Law 468, approved March 31, 1948: Continued until April 30, 1948, authority for insurance of home mortgages under title VI of FHA. Additional insurance authority was provided in the amount of $400,000,000.

Public Law 864, S. 2790: Provides for a Government secondary market for GI home loans guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration in the Federal National Mortgage Association, a subsidiary of the RFC, whose mortgage purchase authority was increased over $600,000,000 for this purpose. This GI secondary market facility will greatly aid in the financing of veterans' housing while at the same time insuring the veteran of a house meeting the construction standards and inspections established by the FHA. It will also facilitate the combination FHA-GI home financing by making GI secondary loans eligible for purchase by this secondary market. The act provides for an incontestability clause in GI home-loan guaranties, which is similar to the existing FHA insurance incontestability clause, and this should result in a wider private secondary market for GI loans.

Further assistance is provided the veterans' housing program by making veterans' housing cooperatives and nonprofit housing cooperations eligible or title II FHA financing up to 95 percent of the value of the project, with emphasis placed on low cost, economically sound, readily financeable housing within the average veteran's income.

HOUSING BILLS PASSED HOUSE BUT NOT ACTED UPON BY SENATE, FIRST SESSION

H. R. 3492 (passed the House on June 18, 1947): This bill provided for the disposal of Government-owned permanent war housing, of which there were approximately 164,000 units. The bill would establish a high veterans' priority in the purchase of these units on an individual or veteran cooperative basis. Provision would be made to make such property eligible for FHA insurance of mortgage up to 90 percent of the appraised value and with a maturity of up to 25 years. In the sale of these housing units to veterans the appraised value was to be such that it did not reflect the inflated values of present-day transactions.

SECOND SESSION

H. R. 5854 (passed House March 23, 1948, not acted upon by Senate): This bill would extend title VI insurance for 1 year, make available an additional $2,000,000,000 in mortgage insurance, $1,000,000,000 to be used for rental units, facilitated the mass production of housing with special provisions pertaining to on-site construction of projects consisting of more than 25 one- and two-unit dwellings, provided for a method of interim financing of the purchase of prefabricated houses, and also provided for FHA insurance for the purchase of FHA insurance of mortgages upon the disposition of the Government-owned Greenbelt towns.

H. R. 6959 (passed the House by an overwhelming vote of 318 to 90 on June 18, 1948): In an effort to secure Senate action on two housing measures previously passed by the House—H. R. 5854 and H. R. 3492—the subject matter of these bills, namely, extension of title VI insurance to March 31, 1949, with an increased authorization, and disposal of Government-owned permanent war housing, was included in H. R. 6959. In addition, the bill provides for a $35,000,000 increase in the insurance authority for mortgages insured under title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, an increase in the limitation on title I, class 3 loans from $3,000 to $4,500, and an occupancy priority to veterans with respect to housing made available through this assistance. The bill would expand the secondary market operation carried out by the Federal National Mortgage Association through increasing the amount of funds available for such purpose and through making eligible for purchase loans insured under section 505 (a) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944. Certain restrictions would be placed about this operation to assure that a sound secondary market would be provided without leaving the secondary market subject to the abuse of being used as a primary source of funds for building loans.

In order to encourage the production of additional rental housing accommodations the bill would amend the Internal Revenue Code to permit the taking of accelerated depreciation up to 50 percent over a 5-year period on rental housing accommodations, the construction of which is begun in the next 2 years. Such accelerated depreciation would only be permitted, however, if the Federal Housing Commissioner issued a certificate authorizing such accelerated depreciation. The Federal Housing Commissioner is only authorized to issue such a certificate if the rental housing accommodations are or will be located in an area in which he finds there is a shortage and if the dwelling units will be rented at such levels as will in his judgment tend to relieve such shortage. The Internal Revenue Code would be further amended to remove the excise tax (7 percent) on the sale of trailer coaches of the housing type sold prior to July 1, 1950.

Another title of the bill would provide an incontestability clause with respect to GI guaranteed or insured home loans similar to the incontestability clause with respect to FHA insured loans. This should improve the attractiveness of GI home loan paper in the private secondary investment markets.

The bill would also set up a system of yield insurance on equity investment in rental housing for a family of moderate income. As in the case of FHA mortgage insurance, this yield insurance program would be set up to be self-supporting on the basis of the insurance premium charged therefor.

As may be noted from the above provisions, the bill was designed to encourage private enterprise in the production of all housing accommodations that could be built with the available supplies of materials and labor. Particular emphasis is placed upon rental housing accommodations in order that veterans in particular might have a choice between renting or buying housing for their needed housing accommodations.

Hon. Carter Glass

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS
OF MARYLAND
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, April 21 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. CARTER GLASS, late a Senator from the State of Virginia

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, was one of the most eminent statesmen of his day and time. He served the Government in many high positions. In every position of service his fine character, intellectual integrity, far-seeing statesmanship, and wise counsel were outstanding.

It is difficult to add to the luster of a State so rich in the history of our country as is Virginia. Yet Senator GLASS, by his many contributions to the progress of our Nation, gave to Virginia an added greatness. He loved his country and realized its great power and influence for good in world affairs. No narrow horizons limited his vision. He saw with uncanny accuracy the likely unfolding of world events and threw his great vision and statesmanship into the struggle to bring his own countrymen and men and women everywhere a chance for peace and prosperity on a world-wide scale.

His convictions were founded upon deep thought. Compromises were not a part of his nature. He began and ended his great career with the same basic philosophy of government. The illustrious son of a noble State, beloved by millions of his countrymen, he wrote a chapter of personal accomplishment in his Nation's history which will endure for all time.

Record of Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce During Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made an impressive record during the Eightieth Congress in the consideration of legislation coming within the committee's jurisdiction.

I have filed today a report of the committee—House Report No. 1197—which presents this record in detail. I should like, however, to summarize for the RECORD some of the salient points in this report.

Of 338 bills and resolutions referred to the committee, 77 were favorably reported. Of these, 45 have become public law, 2 were vetoed, 17 passed the House but not the Senate, and 13 remain on the House Calendar.

The committee conducted 60 hearings for 174 days, involving 622 hours of sitting, on 98 bills and 6 investigations. Forty-seven hearings have been printed representing 10,947 pages, with 7 hearings yet to be printed.

The committee initiated the practice of hearing members of the House on bills which they had sponsored, involving 18 hearings for 102 Members on 129 bills.

The committee held 10 executive sessions to hear the various agencies, administering legislation under committee jurisdiction, describe their organization, functions, and problems.

In addition the committee held 95 executive sessions for consideration of pending legislation.

Pursuant to the general responsibility under the Legislative Reorganization Act for active surveillance of the subjects and agencies falling within the committee's jurisdiction, the committee issued 10 special reports in the fields of transportation, air, petroleum, and commerce.

While this record is impressive, the committee nevertheless is continuing after the adjournment of Congress, to conduct examinations itself and through its staff into a number of fields, with special attention being given to a fuel investigation looking toward establishment of a national fuel policy, the present situation of our transportation media from a national defense viewpoint, the national transportation inquiry, and administrative procedures of various agencies.

I am listing below a brief summary of the 77 bills and resolutions which were reported favorably by the committee, divided by the 12 fields of jurisdiction conferred under the Legislative Reorganization Act:

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE GENERALLY

H. R. 599 (Public Law 183, approved July 11, 1947): Declaring Kenduskeag Stream, Penobscot County, Maine, to be a nonnavigable waterway.

H. R. 1778 (Public Law 15, approved March 10, 1947): Amending the Federal Firearms Act to make purely clerical clarifications of the Federal Firearms Act.

S. 682 (Public Law 258, approved July 30, 1947): Regulating interstate transportation of black bass and other game fish by amending the Black Bass Act of May 20, 1926, so as to include all game fish.

H. R. 4043 (Public Law 375, approved August 6, 1947): Changes in the order of priorities of payments out of the German special deposit account, and transfer of funds from the alien property trust fund (World War I) so as to place American claims arising out of World War I ahead of German claims, and to make available for distribution to American claimants German assets seized during World War I and still held in the alien property trust fund.

Senate Joint Resolution 138 (Public Law 370, approved Aug. 5, 1947): Providing means for the return to the government of Italy and its nationals of those Italian properties now vested by the Office of Alien Property; and authorizing the transfer or return to Italy by the United States of certain ships.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 14: Representation of American small-business men on policy-making bodies created by executive appointment.

H. R. 4044 (Public Law 896, approved July 3, 1948): Amending the Trading With the Enemy Act; creating a commission to make inquiry and report with respect to war claims; and providing relief for internees in certain cases.

This bill had several purposes:

Title I prohibits the return to the former owners of any property of Germany, Japan, or the nationals of either country, vested in the United States after December 17, 1941, pursuant to the provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended, and provides for covering into the general fund of the Treasury the net proceeds remaining upon the completion of the liquidation of such property. Section 2 of this title would suspend all payments, under section 34 of the Trading With the Enemy Act, of debts of the former owners of vested enemy property until 6 months after the War Claims Commission, established pursuant to title II, has filed its report and such report has been received by Congress.

Title II establishes a War Claims Commission with a life limited to 1 year which is to submit to the Congress by March 31, 1948, a comprehensive report presenting all pertinent facts and making recommendations with respect to the adjudication and payment of war claims and the payment of debts of former owners of vested enemy property.

Title III provides a measure of emergency relief for those American citizens, who in the national interest as determined by our Government, remained in the Philippines and other Territories and possessions of the United States in the face of impending Japanese aggression, and who as internees during the war suffered at the hands of the Japanese.

H. R. 366: Requesting the Secretary of Congress to furnish information concerning sales of supplies to foreign countries.

H. R. 6116 (Public Law 874, approved July 1, 1947): Amending the Trading With the Enemy Act to extend the time for filing suits and claims pursuant to the Trading With the Enemy Act until April 30, 1949.

H. R. 3855 (Public Law 191, approved July 15, 1947): Providing for the appointment of one additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

H. R. 4102: National Science Foundation Act of 1947. Companion bill S. 5. Pocket vetoed August 6, 1947.

H. R. 5960: Amending section 32 (A) (2) of the Trading With the Enemy Act to clarify provisions contained in subdivisions (C) and (D) of paragraph 2 of section 32 (a) of the act with respect to claims for the return of vested property by United States women citizen claimants who married citizens of Germany, Japan, Bulgaria, Hungary, or Rumania, and thus eliminate the present disqualification of such claimants which results from the interpretation of section 32 in a recent decision of the Office of Alien Property.

H. R. 3734: Fur Products Labeling Act to require mandatory invoicing of furs and labeling of fur products moving in interstate or foreign commerce to show the true English name of the animal; its country of origin; the fact that the garment contains used fur if such is the case; the fact that the fur is dyed if such is the case, and the fact that the fur product is composed of bits and pieces instead of whole skins if such is the case and further require that when furs or fur products are advertised in such commerce these vital facts be truthfully stated.

H. R. 6007: To create an independent agency of the Government to be known as the National Science Foundation, and to grant to that agency appropriate authority to be used for the following purposes: (1) To develop and encourage the pursuit of a national policy for the promotion of basic research and education in the sciences; (2) to initiate and support basic scientific research through contracts or other arrangements, and to appraise the impact of research upon industrial development and upon the general welfare; (3) to initiate and support (after consultation with the Secretary of Defense) scientific research in connection with matters relating to the national defense through contracts and other arrangements; (4) to grant scholarships and graduate fellowships in the sciences; (5) to foster the interchange of scientific information among scientists in the United States and foreign countries; and (6) to correlate its research programs with those of individuals and public and private research groups.

H. R. 3871: Amending the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, by providing that whenever the Commission has reason to believe that the law is being violated, it shall file a complaint in the United States district court which would then decide whether the law had been violated on the basis of evidence presented by the Commission and the defendant and issue a permanent injunction.

H. R. 2045 (Public Law 16, approved March 10, 1947): Certification of streptomycin under Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

H. R. 4071 (Public Law 749, approved June 24, 1948): Amendments to sections 301 (k) and 304 (a) of Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act authorize the seizure of foods, drugs, devices, and cosmetics which become adulterated or misbranded while held for sale (whether or not the first sale) after interstate shipments.

House Report 1733: Export licensing procedures. This report reviews the Department of Commerce procedures in issuing export licenses; the position of exporters and changes recommended.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN TRANSPORTATION

H. R. 2123 (Public Law 79, approved May 27, 1947): Amendment to Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended to conform to the present personnel policies of the Government.

H. R. 2298 (Public Law 478, approved April 9, 1947): Modification of railroad financial structures by providing a procedure whereby railroads not in bankruptcy or receivership may, under certain specified circumstances, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, alter or modify their obligations (i. e., bonds, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness; or mortgages, indentures, or other like instruments under which obligations have been issued or by which obligations are secured) with the assent of the holders of 75 percent of such obligations.

H. R. 3730 (Public Law 583, approved June 3, 1948): Amending section 20 (12) of the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to recourse by an initial or delivering carrier against the carrier on whose line loss of, or damage or injury to, property is sustained, on account of expense incurred in defending actions at law.

H. R. 6078 (Public Law 633, approved June 12, 1948): Amending section 303 (e) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to clarify part III of the Interstate Commerce Act, with respect to the application of its provisions to foreign cruise travel by water, originating and terminating at ports in different States. The amendment will authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission, by appropriate action, to exempt such water transportation from regulation upon a finding that regulation is not necessary to carry out the national transportation policy declared in the Interstate Commerce Act.

H. R. 2331 (Pocket Veto, July 30, 1947): Amending section 20A of the Interstate Commerce Act to include sleeping-car companies within the definition of "carrier" for purposes relating to issuance of railroad securities, etc. Permits dealings in securities by one railroad carrier with another carrier, corporation, etc., having an officer or director holding a substantial interest in both if the dealings are with the highest bidder as determined by prescribed competitive bidding regulations.

H. R. 3152: Extending certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act for the purpose of allocating the use of transportation equipment and facilities by rail carriers to and including June 30, 1948.

H. R. 2759: Amending the Interstate Commerce Act regarding statute of limitations for recovery of undercharges and overcharges by or against common carriers by motor vehicle, common carriers by water, and freight forwarders.

H. R. 6318. (Public Law 765, approved June 24, 1948): Amending section 3 of the Standard Time Act of March 19, 1918 to permit the Union Pacific Railroad to use Pocatello, Idaho, as the point at which, for operating purposes, it changes from mountain time to Pacific time, and to conduct its operations west of Pocatello on Pacific time.

H. R. 6696: Authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and examine the construction and condition of railroad express and baggage cars used in service in which they are accompanied by an express messenger or train baggageman, to determine whether they meet adequate standards of safety and sanitation and to order the alteration or maintenance of such cars to conform to such adequate standards.

H. R. 6136: United States Travel Bureau. This bill amends legislation so as to remove the administration of these activities and functions from the National Park Service by providing that they shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through a separate unit of the Department, to be designated as the "United States Travel Bureau."

H. R. 221 (Companion bill S. 110 became Public Law 662. Veto overrode June 17, 1948): Amending the Interstate Commerce Act, with respect to certain agreements between carriers providing: (1) common carriers (including freight forwarders) subject to the Interstate Commerce Act are authorized to apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval of agreements between such carriers; (2) the Commission is authorized to approve such agreements (except certain types of agreements the approval of which is prohibited) when the Commission finds that, by reason of furtherance of the national transportation policy declared in the Interstate Commerce Act there should be relief from the antitrust laws with respect to the making and carrying out of such agreements; and (3) antitrust law relief is granted (but no relief is granted from any prohibition, duty, or obligation under the Interstate Commerce Act) with respect to the making and carrying out, subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the Commission, of agreements so approved by the Commission.

H. R. 3692: Amending section 411 (c) of the Interstate Commerce Act, to permit common ownership, lease, control, or holding of stock of freight forwarders if authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

H. R. 5623: Amending the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended in regard to (1) filing of copies of agreements by carriers; (2) extension of credit by express companies; (3) holding of public hearings; (4) issuance of securities by street-railway companies; (5) serving notices on carrier agents; and (6) requiring of special reports from carriers.

S. 2192 (Public Law 756, approved June 24, 1948): Authorizing the issuance of free passes to time inspectors of railroads.

House Report 1272: Transportation in Alaska. This report reviews the development of Alaskan transportation and the need for additional facilities of all types.

House Report 1612: Public aid to air transportation. This report is concerned with the extent of public aids—air-mail payments, airports and airways, and other aids to navigation. It includes estimates of total public aid to air transportation and to carriers other than air.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMUNICATIONS

Senate Joint Resolution 102 (Public Law 48, approved May 13, 1947): Permits United States common communications carriers to render free communications services to official participants in the world telecommunications conferences in the United States in 1947.

S. 816 (Public Law 193, approved July 16, 1947): Repealing the Post Roads Act of 1866, as amended, which provided for a mandatory special rate in the handling of domestic telegrams sent by Government departments and officials. This bill did not arbitrarily prohibit a lower rate for domestic Government telegrams; it merely gave to the regulatory agency, the Federal Communications Commission, the same authority with respect to fixing charges, classifications, and priorities on such Government telegrams that it had with respect to all commercial messages.

H. R. 2336: Amending the Communications Act of 1934 to permit, subject to certain conditions, use of Coast Guard radio stations for reception and transmission of commercial messages.

Under the jurisdiction conferred by the Legislative Reorganization Act, detailed examination of the administration by the Federal Communications Commission of the statutes entrusted to it was made and is continuing. To complete such examination the committee requested additional authority from the House in House Resolution 165 (March 31, 1947), which authority has not yet been granted.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS

H. R. 2758 (Public Law 59, approved May 15, 1947): Amending the act to provide for administration of the Washington National Airport, approved June 29, 1940.

This bill conferred upon the administrator, or his duly authorized representatives, the power to arrest persons.

H. R. 2109 (Public Law 346, approved August 4, 1947): Amending section 1003 of the Civil Aeronautics Act to permit air carriers and surface carriers to establish through service without at the same time establishing joint rates.

H. R. 3587 (Public Law 287, approved July 30, 1947): Establishing a National Aviation Council to carry on the functions heretofore performed by the Air Coordinating Committee, an important agency which existed for a year as a result of a voluntary agreement between the various agencies concerned and later was given recognition by Executive Order 9781, September 19, 1946.

S. 2081 (Public Law 486, approved April 17, 1948): Extending the provisions of the Federal Airport Act to the Virgin Islands. When the Federal Airport Act of May 13, 1946, was enacted the Virgin Islands were overlooked. The Federal Airport Act applies to the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

H. R. 3510 (Public Law 561, approved May 28, 1948): Authorizing the construction, protection, operation, and maintenance of a public airport in the Territory of Alaska.

H. R. 6407 (Public Law 647, approved June 16, 1948): Providing authority for certain Federal agencies to acquire, construct, establish, operate, administer, and maintain airport properties and air-navigation facilities in foreign territory wherever necessary or desirable, to provide for and foster the safe operation of United States-flag air carriers engaged in foreign air transportation.

S. 2454 (Public Law 692, approved June 19, 1948): Recording of title to, interests in, and encumbrances upon certain aircraft to facilitate the purchase of new aircraft by permitting greater use of secured financing.

S. 2455 (Public Law 656, approved June 16, 1948): Amending the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 so as to provide relief from potential unjust and discriminatory liability on persons who are owners of aircraft for security purposes only, or who are the lessors of aircraft.

S. 3 (Public Law 815, approved June 29, 1948): Authorizing a training program for air-traffic-control-tower operators, both civilian and governmental.

H. R. 4169: Amending section 401 of the Civil Aeronautics Act to permit the granting of authority for temporary emergency service of air carriers.

H. R. 4427: Authority for the performance of certain aeronautical activities of the Department of Commerce.

H. R. 4435 (Public Law 872, approved July 1, 1948): Amending the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to redefine certain powers of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in regard to air-navigation facilities, delegation of powers by the Civil Aeronautics Board to the Administrator, and rights of the Administrator to (1) accept any gifts or donations of money or other real or personal property or services; (2) to acquire by purchase, condemnation, lease, or otherwise, real property or interests therein, including, in certain cases, easements through or other interests in airspace; and (3) to dispose of real or personal property acquired by the Administrator in the discharge of his duties by sale, lease, or otherwise.

H. R. 6860 (Public Law 840, approved June 29, 1948): Amending the Federal Airport Act to specifically authorize appropriations to be made to the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics for reimbursement to municipalities of the cost of rehabilitation and repair to airports substantially damaged by a Federal agency.

H. R. 3509: Authorizing construction of a class IV airport for the city of Fairbanks, Alaska, and a public highway or bridge from the city of Fairbanks to the location of the airport.

House Report 885: Aids to air navigation and landing. This report reviews the controversy concerning overland and air navigation aids and makes recommendations for resolving it in the interests of commerce and the national defense.

House Report 1065: Safety in air navigation. This report discusses the nature of the air safety problem, the present safety record, causes of air accidents, possibilities of increasing air safety, and makes recommendations in the interests of commerce and the national defense.

House Report 1437: United States air carriers' foreign and overseas operations. This report is the result of an investigation of the operations of the American-flag air carriers abroad with particular reference to airport, navigational, and other facilities open for their use and the conditions under which they may be used.

WEATHER BUREAU

S. 640 (Public Law 192, approved July 16, 1947): Sale of Weather Bureau property at East Lansing, Mich., to Michigan State College).

H. R. 4426 (Public Law 573, approved June 2, 1948): To provide basic authority for the Weather Bureau to purchase certain supplies and make contribution of the United States share of the cost of the office of the secretariat of the International Meteorological Committee.

S. 2456 (Public Law 657, approved June 16, 1948): Authorizing the Chief of the Weather Bureau to make a full study of the internal structure of thunderstorms and other atmospheric disturbances with particular attention to the degree of turbulence within such storms and to the development, maintenance, and magnitude of up drafts and down drafts, in an effort to establish methods by which characteristics of particular storms may be forecast, and by which such characteristics may be determined on visual observation from outside the immediate storm area.

H. R. 4112: Acceptance and use of private funds for support of the national weather service.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACTS, PETROLEUM AND NATURAL GAS

H. R. 2956: Amending the Natural Gas Act, approved June 21, 1938, as amended, to provide generally for the exercise of the right of eminent domain by natural-gas companies with respect to necessary right-of-way in connection with the construction and operation of natural-gas pipe lines.

H. R. 4051: Amending the Natural Gas Act, approved June 21, 1938, as amended, (1) to clearly define the limits of the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission with respect to the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce, with respect to the sale of natural gas in interstate commerce for resale, with respect to natural-gas companies, and with respect to related matters; (2) to prescribe certain statutory standards to apply for purposes of the fixing of rates for sales of natural gas with respect to which the Commission has jurisdiction.

In addition, the bill contained provisions (1) imposing a duty on natural-gas companies to furnish and supply reasonable service to distributing companies and (2) giving the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction of common carriers engaged in the transportation of natural gas by pipe line solely for others for hire and not engaged in the selling of natural gas.

The amendments made by the bill specifically excluded from the Commission's jurisdiction the properties, facilities of, and sales made by distributors, as well as production or gathering, production or gathering facilities, and sales occurring prior to interstate transportation in trunk transmission facilities.

House Joint Resolution 211: Consenting to extension of an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas. (Companion bill S. J. Res. 122 became Public Law 184, approved July 12, 1947.)

House Joint Resolution 323: Prohibiting temporarily the exportation of kerosene, gas oil, and distillate fuel oil, or residual fuel oil from east and Gulf coast ports in the United States to foreign destinations for a period of 30 days from its enactment. Its sole objective was to divert to domestic use critically needed fuel oils so that American homes, industries, churches, hospitals, schools, transportation systems, and other users of heating oil will be insured against shortages during the balance of the heating season.

H. R. 5475: Synthetic liquid fuel plants. The extent to which the demand for liquid fuels has grown in our economy and the risk of being cut off, in case of emergency, from our foreign sources of supply make it necessary to supplement supplies of petroleum and petroleum products produced in the United States and imported from foreign countries.

This bill sought to accomplish this objective in a number of ways: (1) By making available loans on liberal terms, with maturities not to exceed 30 years, to qualified persons who propose to construct one or more commercial-sized plants for the production of synthetic liquid fuels or intermediate gaseous products from coal, oil shale, or other substances, except natural gas; (2) to the extent that private industry fails to undertake the construction of a limited number of commercial-sized synthetic liquid fuels plants (except from natural gas) by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under contracts with private industry; (3) by providing operating subsidies for producers of synthetic liquid fuels (except from natural gas, which does not require subsidization) in order to enable them to make up any losses incurred in marketing their products in competition with natural petroleum products which at present are produced at a cost lower than synthetic liquid fuels; (4) by providing financial assistance to private industry to accelerate research and development of processes for the production of synthetic liquid fuels; and (5) by providing that the regular lending authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be available for loans to persons who desire to undertake the construction of synthetic liquid fuel plants.

House Report 1270: A preliminary report on the fuel investigation discussing current shortages, the over-all petroleum situation, the need for a study, suggestions as to its scope, and recommendations for the creation of a Joint Committee on Fuel Policy.

House Report 1321: A progress report discussing the action taken by the petroleum industry and various governmental agencies as a result of committee recommendations.

House Report 1438: Petroleum and the European recovery program. This report directs attention to the world-wide petroleum demand and supply situation; the petroleum requirements of the European recovery program; the reliance placed upon the Middle East as a source of crude supply; and the world-wide expansion of production, processing, and transportation facilities simultaneously required to furnish petroleum products needed.

House Report 2342: Petroleum prices and profits. This report, based on petroleum company replies to a committee questionnaire, discusses the industry position with respect to current prices and profits.

The committee's investigation of the fuel situation was implemented further by the specific directions of House Resolution 595 of June 18, 1948.

INTERSTATE TRANSMISSION OF POWER

H. R. 1777: Amending section 1 of the Federal Power Act with respect to the terms of office of members of the Federal Power Commission.

RAILROAD LABOR, RETIREMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT

H. R. 3632 (Public Law 378, approved August 6, 1947): Extending the time within which applications may be made to the Railroad Retirement Board for certain refunds from the unemployment trust fund to correct an injustice to the railroad employees of 10 States in which they, prior to the enactment of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, made contributions to the State unemployment insurance funds of their respective States.

H. R. 6766 (Public Law 744, approved June 23, 1948): Amending the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended, to accomplish two basic purposes: First, by the provisions of section 1, together with the provisions of section 3, all retirement annuities and pensions payable under the Railroad Retirement Act were increased by 20 percent. Secondly, by the provisions of section 2 of the bill, there was restored to the railroad retirement system a feature which was in the act prior to the 1946 amendments, and which, in effect, is a guaranty that every employee who contributes to the system will obtain in benefits, either to himself or to survivors or a designated beneficiary, an amount at least equal to the contribution he makes plus an allowance in lieu of interest.

The amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act substitute, for the present flat 3-percent contribution rate, a sliding scale under which the tax rate is automatically adjusted in accordance with the amount of reserves in the railroad unemployment insurance account as of the close of business of September 30 of each year. So long as the reserve is $450,000,000 or more, the rate would be one-half percent; the rate then increases one-half percent for each $50,000,000 by which the reserve is less than that amount, again reaching a 3-percent rate if the reserve should fall below $250,000,000.

H. R. 3150: Amending the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act relating to benefits for sickness and maternity, and substituting for the present 3-percent contribution rate, now applicable to employers subject to the act, a graduated rate of contribution ranging from one-half percent to 3 percent, the rate applicable during any given year to be dependent upon the balance to the credit of the railroad unemployment insurance account at the end of September of the preceding year.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND QUARANTINE

H. R. 5889 (Public Law 713, approved June 19, 1948): Extending the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act to the Virgin Islands, so as to make the Virgin Islands eligible for grants under those provisions for the construction of hospitals.

H. R. 4114 (Public Law 781, approved June 23, 1948): Authorizing certain expenditures from appropriations for the Public Health Service which have heretofore been authorized annually in the appropriations for the Public Health Service.

S. 2215 (Public Law 655, approved June 16, 1948): Amending the Public Health Service Act to provide for a National Heart Institute for the purpose of improving the health of the people of the United States through the conduct of researches, investigations, experiments, and demonstrations relating to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the heart and circulation; assisting and fostering such researches and other activities by public and private agencies, and promoting the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results; providing training in matters relating to heart diseases, including refresher courses for physicians; and developing, and assisting the States and other agencies in the use of, the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of heart diseases.

H. R. 1447 (Public Law 818, approved June 29, 1948): To prohibit the transportation to the United States, or any Territory or District thereof, of any wild animal or bird under inhumane or unhealthful conditions.

H. R. 4816 (Public Law 830, approved June 28, 1948): Amending section 624 of the Public Health Service Act with respect to construction of hospitals to set a minimum of $250,000 on the annual construction allotment for any State.

H. R. 6339 (Public Law 723, approved June 19, 1948): To amend the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act so as to restore to eligibility to participate in Federal grants for hospital construction a State which has ceased to be eligible for such grants because of its failure to enact, prior to July 1, 1948, legislation requiring compliance with standards of maintenance and operation by hospitals receiving such grants.

H. R. 3934: Amending the Public Health Service Act with respect to venereal-disease rapid-treatment centers to make part of the Public Health Service Act the authority of the Service to operate, and make grants to the States and localities for the operation of, venereal-disease rapid-treatment centers.

H. R. 6726 (Public Law 755, approved June 24, 1948): Amending the Public Health Service Act to provide for a National Institute of Dental Research to improve the dental health of the people of the United States through the conduct of researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases and conditions; to assist and foster such researches and other activities by public and private agencies; to provide training in matters relating to dental diseases and conditions; and to promote the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results, with a view to the development and prompt widespread use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases and conditions.

H. R. 6728: To amend the Public Health Service Act so as to extend medical benefits provided for under that act, not only to employed seamen but also to any person who (A) has been so employed for at least 60 days of substantially continuous service, (B) applies for treatment under the act within 6 months of the last day of such service, and (C) has not changed his occupation.

H. R. 6868: Amending the Public Health Service Act to extend to widows of deceased Coast Guard personnel who died while on active duty during the period from November 1, 1941, to January 1, 1946, the same medical benefits which are extended under section 326 (b) of the Public Health Service Act to dependent members of Coast Guard families.

H. R. 5807: Amending the Hospital Survey and Construction Act to permit Federal aid in the building of hospitals whose sponsors, believing that such aid would be forthcoming under the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act, began construction before the administrative machinery to handle their applications for assistance could be established by their States.

H. R. 3924: Amendments to Public Health Service Act in regard to matters of personnel and administration. (Companion bill, S. 1424, became Public Law 425, approved February 28, 1948.)

H. R. 6732: Amending the Public Health Service Act to give broad administrative authority to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, to establish within the framework of the Public Health Service institutes whose work will be aimed primarily at the important diseases affecting our population. Upon the establishment of such institutes the Surgeon General would be authorized to conduct research and training activities substantially similar to those currently administered by the Service in the fields of cancer and mental health. Within this institute the necessary research activities could be carried on, not only on poliomyelitis but also upon spastic paralysis, cerebral palsies, arthritis, and other diseases affecting the neuro-muscular and skeletal systems.

H. R. 5644: Local Public Health Services Act of 1948 to assist States and local subdivisions in the establishment and maintenance of full-time local health units equipped and staffed to provide basic public-health services.

INLAND WATERWAYS

H. R. 5318: Provides for the disposition of the facilities and rights of the Inland Waterways Corporation at the earliest possible date consistent with the conservation of its assets, provided for dissolution of the Corporation not later than July 1, 1953, and granted to the Secretary of Commerce necessary powers in connection with the winding up of the affairs of the Corporation.

BUREAU OF STANDARDS

The resolution reported by the committee in this matter was referred to it as a result of its jurisdiction over the Bureau of Standards.

House Resolution 522: Directing the Secretary of Commerce to transmit to the House of Representatives a certain letter with respect to Dr. Edward U. Condon.

The Conservation of Our Nebraska Soil

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH BUTLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article prepared by me entitled "The Conservation of Our Nebraska Soil."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Napoleon is generally credited with having been the first to point out that an army moves on its stomach. He meant, of course, that an army cannot fight properly unless it is fed properly. Once he had said that, everyone realized how true it was.

Today, we can expand that idea by saying that a nation lives on its soil. Destruction of our soil means destruction of our Nation. That, too, is now realized by everyone. Strangely, that realization did not come until very, very recently. We can indeed bless God that it did not come too late. Our treatment of the soil in our own State is a case in point, and the movement to save the soil of Nebraska makes a fascinating story.

Our Nebraska has been greatly favored by nature. Our soils have developed, mainly under a protective cover of grass. Through the ages the decaying grass roots have imparted a dark color and mellow texture to the soil. The level to gently rolling plains, the grass cover and loamy nature of the virgin soils all tended to minimize the damaging effect of rain and running water.

In spite of these favorable natural conditions, the soils have not always been able to stand up under the use man has made of them. Tremendous soil losses have occurred in most parts of the State, and it is imperative to prevent further damage. Good farmers everywhere have always tried to conserve their wealth-producing physical assets, although they sometimes have lacked the necessary technical knowledge to do the job properly. The early settlers learned quickly the extent of damage that would take place in the Sand Hill county when the grass cover was abused. They also learned quickly that the best way to preserve such lands was to maintain a good grass cover continuously. Other parts of the State did not, however, receive this same care. About 6,500,000 acres of land in the State are severely eroded. They have lost 6 inches or more of the topsoil layer. Another 15,000,000 acres are seriously eroded, having lost 3 to 5 inches of their topsoil. More than 6,000,000 additional acres are moderately eroded, that is, with 1 to 3 inches of topsoil washed off.

The rate at which the soils of Nebraska are moving from the fields to lower slopes, stream channels, reservoirs, and other places of deposit is alarming. It is estimated that 682,000,000 tons of soil are moved by erosion in a single year in the State. To haul this amount of material back to its source would require 17,000,000 freight cars of 40-ton capacity each. This material would cover 815 average size (427 acres) of Nebraska farms with a layer 1 foot deep. When this soil material left its original site it not only reduced the productive capacity of the field from which it came; it also damaged crops and highways where it was eventually deposited, and it blocked irrigation and drainage canals, choked stream channels, contaminated the waters, and reduced the capacity of reservoirs. Damage from erosion is not confined to the farm that is eroded. Its effect may be felt many miles downstream.

This damage to Nebraska lands can be stopped, and steps have already been taken to begin stopping it. The application of the right combination of conservation practices to the land and the use of the land for the purpose for which it is best adapted will do that job.

Plenty of people have seen this need, and plenty of important soil-conservation work has been done, by individual farmers on an individual basis, for some years. I believe I can say that interest and support for such ideas was at least as widespread in Nebraska as anywhere else in the Nation. A broader program with public backing was needed, however. On the Federal level, legislation along those lines was passed in 1935, setting up the Soil Conservation Service. In Nebraska, our State legislature in May 1937 passed a soil-conservation districts law. Nebraska was among the first States to enact such a law. Now every State and Territorial possession has enacted soil-conservation district legislation.

This law provides a democratic basis for people in a prescribed area to create their own organization for achieving proper land use and conservation of their soil and water resources. Soil-conservation districts come into existence only in response to a petition from the people on the land. Public hearings regarding the necessity for organization are held, and finally landowners and operators within the boundaries of the proposed district are given an opportunity to vote for or against the organization of a soil-conservation district. A 75-percent majority voting for the organization is necessary before a district can be organized. The districts when organized are administered by a governing body of five locally-selected supervisors.

These supervisors, serving without pay, are performing a most useful service to the agriculture of the State. Their unselfish devotion to their duties and their enthusiastic administration of district resources is largely responsible for the fine progress Nebraska is making in conserving soil and water.

The supervisors of each district develop a district program setting forth the district's conservation problems and objectives. They also develop a district work plan, showing what the district's activities will be and the policies under which those activities will be carried out. These documents are guides to all Federal, State, and local agencies and groups cooperating with the district. Following is a table that shows the number of districts organized each year as of January 1, 1939, to May 1, 1948, together with the number of acres and number of farms included in those districts:

Date	Number of soil conservation districts	Acres	Number of farms
Jan. 1, 1939	2	147,964	717
Jan. 1, 1940	10	718,402	3,389
Jan. 1, 1941	20	2,317,721	7,744
Jan. 1, 1942	32	5,826,000	17,411
Jan. 1, 1943	35	9,742,000	39,876
Jan. 1, 1944	43	15,376,000	62,160
Jan. 1, 1945	50	20,739,335	83,702
Jan. 1, 1946	61	25,464,932	105,916
Jan. 1, 1947	75	33,738,426	107,969
Jan. 1, 1948	82	41,035,417	108,949
May 1, 1948	83	43,942,297	109,699

To date, 16,000 Nebraska farms have received benefits from the conservation treatment given them. Through soil conservation, which includes all steps required to keep land permanently productive, these 16,000 farms have been given permanent protection and their productive capacity raised to a higher level.

More than 98 percent of the farms in our State are now included within such soil conservation districts. Farmers in the balance of the State are taking steps to organize so that by this winter it is expected that every farm in the State will be in a district. No other agricultural movement has had such wide acceptance in 11 years. To Dr. G. E. Condra and the State soil conservation committee go much of the credit for helping and encouraging Nebraska farmers to make such progress in organization. The other members of the State committee, Dean W. W. Burr, H. G. Gould, State extension director, and E. G. Jones, State conservationist of the Soil Conservation Service, an advisory member, also deserve their full share of our appreciation.

Many different methods must be used to maintain and improve the land. Some 48 different conservation practices are used in Nebraska. The characteristics of the land, together with the climatic environment, largely determine the crops that can be grown best. These same land characteristics also must be considered in determining the best conservation treatment to be applied in a particular area. The practices must also fit into the type of farming followed by each individual farmer. The farmer and conservation technician working together must develop the best plan to be followed.

Some of the most important conservation practices and the acreage planned and applied are given below:

Practice	Acres planned for to date	Acres on which established, to date
1. Contour planting	1,238,902	831,618
2. Crop-residue management	1,663,841	1,221,856
3. Range properly stocked	1,749,416	1,378,431
4. Seeding range and pasture	334,414	136,134
5. Terracing	597,856	134,704
6. Farm drainage	73,756	37,267
7. Leveling irrigated land	130,359	54,754
8. Improved methods of irrigation	241,001	152,163
9. Irrigation distribution systems	279,969	174,607
10. Stubble mulch tillage	275,177	115,658

The progress made to date in establishing conservation treatment on Nebraska farms is a high tribute to the spirit of close cooperation between the Extension Service and the Soil Conservation Service. These two agencies have worked together in Nebraska. The assistance they have given farmers through soil-conservation districts has been effective. The number of farmers who have filed requests for assistance in planning and applying conservation on their farms proves it is profitable.

Flood control is another important aspect of soil conservation. Practices necessary to conserve the soil also permit the maximum infiltration of rainfall into the soil, with a consequent reduction in water run-off. Conservation treatment on a watershed basis also must provide for the orderly disposal of excess run-off, stream-bank stabilization, detention reservoirs, large gully-control structures, road-bank stabilization, and diversions. Many of the needed conservation practices for flood control are being, and will be, applied by farmers on their own land to protect their own soil and increase productivity. The complete job of flood control, however, will require assistance from the Federal Government for the installation of control measures primarily for public benefit.

Recent studies show that conservation farming in Nebraska increases yields 15 to 25 percent. This increase in production from the 2,112,000 acres now farmed the conservation way represents more than $10,000,000 added income annually to these farmers. The actual dollar return increase per acre to conservation farmers averages $4.81 and varies from $1.55 in the western part of the State to $5.83 per acre in the east. On irrigated land benefits from conservation farming are even greater than on nonirrigated land. The even distribution of water made possible by land leveling, use of the right amount of water for the particular crop grown, and the disposal of excess water, plus the adoption of good soil-management practices, such as rotations, cover crops, and fertilization, increased gross-income returns in 1945 $28.90 per acre in the Scottsbluff area. To date, about 174,000 acres of irrigated land within the State have been given conservation treatment, and the owners are profiting by it.

Experience in Nebraska over the past 10 years has proven conclusively that soil-conservation districts are an effective instrumentality for carrying out the soil-conservation program needed in the State. Soil-conservation districts have proved to be a most effective mechanism for carrying out a program of conservation through the local district supervisors. Through this system, the resources of all agencies, Federal, State, and local, are focused on the specific conservation problems of each individual farm and ranch. Since the district program is administered by locally selected supervisors, it is thoroughly democratic and adapted to the needs of local areas. At the same time, the participation of Federal and State agencies lends an element of continuity and coordination, as well as providing a sound technical basis.

In the closing hours of the session of Congress just finished, a proposal was submitted to us, as part of the so-called long-range farm program, for an extensive administrative revision of both the Department of Agriculture and the local agencies and committees dealing with our agricultural and conservation programs. This proposal, in my judgment, would have disrupted the smooth-running machinery we already have in operation. It created other dangers to our present progressive program for conserving our soil. The measure was presented in such a way that there was hardly any opportunity for adequate debate. Nevertheless, I protested vigorously on the floor of the Senate. I am happy to say that this proposed change was not accepted, and we shall therefore continue for at least another year on the same basis.

In short, the framework for getting the conservation job done has been provided and is to be continued along the same lines as at present for some time. The real task of actually getting conservation on the land rests on the shoulders of the land owners and operators. By taking advantage of the services provided by the soil-conservation districts, these owners and operators can protect every acre of land in Nebraska.

Costs and Scarcity of Sugar in the Domestic Market

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STYLES BRIDGES

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement I have made with reference to the manipulation by the Department of Agriculture of the United States Government of the supply and price of sugar, a commodity vitally important to the American consumer.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Immediate steps should be taken by the Department of Agriculture to allow sugar to become plentiful in the stores of the United States at reasonable prices.

The world supply of sugar this year will approximate prewar quantities. The Cuban crop, which is the largest single source of world sugar, is of record-making proportions, only slightly less than the tremendous crop of last year. Because the war has destroyed the dollar markets of sugar, the sugar producers of the world are faced with the possibility of storing large quantities of sugar at the year's end.

If the economic law of supply and demand were allowed to operate with freedom in the world markets, there would be a marked decrease in the price of sugar from the present war-inflated levels.

The fact is, however, that sugar prices are going up in the world markets and the price of sugar is being marked upwards on the store shelves of the United States. Moreover, American housewives again are complaining of shortages of sugar in the stores.

The only cause for any rise in the price of sugar at this time is found in the unreasonable, bureaucratic action of the officials of the sugar branch of the Department of Agriculture in Washington.

The price of sugar which the American wage earners must pay is going up because the Department of Agriculture officials have cut the quotas for sugar imports from Cuba by 800,000 tons since the first of the year. They have cut the Cuban quota at a time when Cuba is worried about a surplus.

The world price of sugar is on the increase again because the Commodity Credit Corporation of the Department of Agriculture is purchasing Cuban sugar at a price above prevailing world prices. Since the sugar bought by the Commodity Credit Corporation in Cuba is used in programs of relief feeding in the occupied areas and nations in the European recovery program, the action of the Department of Agriculture is adding to the direct costs of foreign-aid programs. In one negotiation for 1,000,000 tons of sugar made this past winter, it is probable that the action of the Department of Agriculture cost the American taxpayer $10,000,000 in added sugar costs for foreign-aid shipments.

In simple fairness to the American consumer and to the American taxpayer, the present policies of the sugar branch of the Department of Agriculture should be reversed immediately. Sugar is a commodity, the price of which is controlled completely by the United States Government. It makes no sense to use these controls, which were intended by Congress to benefit the American consumer, to increase the cost of living in the United States. It is one more example of the abuse of controls by the administration.

The record of the activities of the sugar branch of the Department of Agriculture during recent months indicates a policy of price manipulation that is clearly antagonistic to the interests of the American people. Agriculture officials have acted repeatedly since last fall to bolster sugar prices in a falling market. Let me review the record.

WORLD PRICES

During the war years, sugar was in great demand. For 6 years, the United States purchased the entire sugar crop in an effort to assure enough sugar for the minimum needs of the war effort. At the end of 1947, however, the demand for sugar had fallen considerably. The Cuban crop was not purchased in 1948 and Cuba was faced with a crop of more than 6,000,000 tons, for which there exist normal sales markets for less than 4,000,000 tons.

Because of a foreseeable world surplus the price of sugar began to decline for futures and cash sales toward the end of 1947. The Commodity Credit Corporation then owned more than 400,000 tons of 1947-stock sugar which was surplus to the normal need existing until the beginning of the 1948 crop harvest in February. To prevent a drop in price that would result from the sale of this surplus stock to commercial buyers the corporation sold the lot to the Army for use in the occupied areas of Germany and Japan.

This transfer of surplus sugar to the Army was questioned in the Senate Committee on Appropriations during hearings held at the special session of the Congress last fall. At that time it was stated that the Army had immediate need of the 1947 stocks and could not wait until the 1948 harvest. Actually 125,000 tons of the 1947 lot were not moved by the Army until after March 1948, when the new crop of sugar was readily available. The transfer of the 1947 sugar to the Army was made at prices above the then existing world price. The removal of the surplus into Army hands halted the downward trend of sugar prices and prevented the lower prices which might have benefited the American consumer had there been no Government interference.

In February of 1948 the Department of Agriculture again moved to prevent a decrease in the world price of sugar. On February 3, 1948, when the world price of sugar was 3.65 cents per pound and falling lower, a representative of the Department of Agriculture closed a deal with the Cuban Government for the purchase of 1,000,000 tons of sugar at 4 cents per pound. The deal was made within a week of the announcement that 3.5 cents per pound was the top United States offer. Since, for all practicable purposes, the profitable sale of Cuban sugar can be made today only for United States dollars, there is no doubt that Cuba would have sold its surplus sugar at the United States price. In paying at least one-half cent per pound more than necessary the sugar was purchased out of foreign-aid funds at a cost of $10,000,000 more than was necessary.

DOMESTIC PRICES

The amount of sugar that enters the United States for domestic consumption is controlled by quotas which were legislated in 1937 and renewed in the Sugar Act of 1948. The quotas are fixed for all countries except Cuba. The Cuban quota, established in January, is open to renegotiation. In January of this year the Cuban quota for United States sugar imports was established at 3,239,429 tons. From January 1 until March 1 the price for refined sugar at New York dropped from 8.40 cents per pound to 7.75 cents per pound. To prevent further decreases in price the quota was cut back to 2,943,509 tons on March 11.

In the next 2 months, however, the price took a further drop to 7.5 cents per pound. Therefore a further reduction of quota was made on June 10 to 2,450,309 tons. Since that quota revision the price had begun to climb back again as shortages in sugar have been noticed in the stores of the Nation.

Few commodities affect the American consumer as directly as does sugar. There is hardly a home in the Nation where sugar is not set on the table at every meal. It is used in almost every type of prepared food. Moreover it has widespread industrial uses in the United States. The cost of sugar has a direct bearing upon the cost of living. The average consumption of sugar per person in the United States totals slightly more than 100 pounds per year, according to quota figures.

There is no excuse for any shortage of sugar today in American markets. There is no excuse for continuing sugar prices at wartime inflation levels. Sugar is a valuable food for Americans and for the hungry people of the world, to whom America is extending dollar aid. The Department of Agriculture should call an immediate halt to its present senseless manipulations in the sugar markets and begin an honest effort to work for the American consumer and taxpayer, who is paying the price of Government intervention.

Veterans' Benefits

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WALTER B. HUBER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, there is presented for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following summary of available benefits and services for veterans and their dependents.

During the years I have served as a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs I have had thousands of inquiries on these and related subjects, and I have found that, although the Veterans' Administration and the various veterans' organizations all cooperate splendidly in disseminating necessary information, many of our ex-servicemen of all wars and their dependents are not aware of the numerous rights and privileges to which they are entitled.

Therefore, with the assistance of the Veterans' Administration, I have compiled the following summary which I hope and believe will be of immense value to veterans, their relatives, and others interested in the welfare of those who have patriotically served in the armed forces of the United States:

Governmental benefits and services available for veterans and their dependents

Type of benefit	Basis of eligibility	Nature of benefit	Administering agency
Compensation for disability, service-connected.	Disabilities resulting from injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by active service. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	$13.80 to $138 a month, depending on degrees of disability. Spanish-American War, World Wars I and II. $11.04 to $110.40 peacetime service. Additional benefits for helplessness, blindness, loss of limbs, etc. Additional amounts are payable to wartime veterans 60 percent or more disabled for wife, children, or dependent parents.	Veterans' Administration regional office having jurisdiction over place of residence. Veterans' Administration, Washington 25, D. C., when veteran's service was prior to July 16, 1903.
Compensation for death due to service.	Death while in active service as result of an injury or disease incurred in line of duty. Death after discharge caused by service-connected disability. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	Widow receives $75 per month with additional amounts for minor children. Dependent mother or father $60 per month; dependent mother and father, each $35 per month. (Above rates for Spanish-American War, World Wars I and II. Lower rates for peacetime service.)	Veterans' Administration Branch Office having jurisdiction over veteran's place of residence at time of his death. Veterans' Administration, Washington 25 D. C., when veteran's service was prior to July 16, 1903.
Pension for disability not service-connected.	90 days' active service during Spanish-American War, World War I or II, or, if less, discharged for disability in line of duty. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	$60 per month for permanent total disability. Increased to $72 after continuous receipt for 10 years, or age 65. Income limitations. Service pension is payable in varying amounts for disability or age from $17.28 to $90 monthly with additional amounts for aid and attendance to veterans of Indian Wars, Civil War, and Spanish-American War.	Veterans' Administration regional office having jurisdiction over place of residence.
Pension for death not due to service.	90 days' service or discharge for disability in line of duty during World War I or II. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. No other service-connection requirement for World War I veterans. World War II veterans must also have had at time of death service-connected disability for which pension would be payable if 10 percent or more in degree.	Widow will receive $42 per month with additional amount for each minor child. Income limitations. No benefit for parents. Service pension is payable in varying amounts from $36 to $60 monthly to widows of veterans of Indian wars, Civil War, and Spanish-American War (with additional amounts for minor children).	Veterans' Administration branch office having jurisdiction over veteran's place of residence at time of his death.
Burial allowance—Federal (also provided by some States).	Service during a period of war, or discharge for disability incurred in line of duty, or in receipt of pension for service-connected disability. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	Maximum allowance of $150 for cost of burial and funeral expenses and transportation of the body.	Do.
Burial flags	Service during a period of war, or a complete enlistment, or discharged for disability incurred in line of duty. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	American flag to drape casket and to be presented to next of kin after burial.	Veterans' Administration or county seat post office.
Hospital care (provided by Veterans' Administration).	Service during a period of war, or a service-connected disability due to war or peacetime service, or line of duty disability discharge from peacetime service with discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	Complete hospital care in a Veterans' Administration hospital, or certain other Government hospitals, including transportation. Care elsewhere may be authorized by VA for service-connected disabilities. Prosthetic appliances supplied under certain conditions.	Nearest Veterans' Administration field station. (Authorization for admission should be secured before patient goes to hospital.) Veteran's physician can arrange by telephone in emergencies.

Governmental benefits and services available for veterans and their dependents—Continued

Type of benefit	Basis of eligibility	Nature of benefit	Administering agency
Housing	Service-connected disability due to war or peacetime service entitling to compensation for permanent and total disability due to spinal-cord disease or injury with paralysis of legs and lower part of body.	Payment by Administrator of Veterans' Affairs up to 50 percent of cost not exceeding $10,000 of a suitably equipped housing unit and necessary land therefor.	Veterans' Administration, Washington 25, D. C.
Domiciliary care—Federal (also provided by some State soldiers' homes).	Service during period of war or service-connected disability due to peacetime service, or line of duty disability discharge from peacetime service with discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. Must be so disabled as to be unable to earn a living and without adequate means of support.	Full care, including medical treatment in Veterans' Administration home.	Nearest Veterans' Administration field station.
Medical treatment and prosthetic appliances.	Service-connected disabilities requiring out-patient care or prosthetic appliances. Prior authorization required.	Out-patient treatment by designated physician including necessary medication. Prosthetic appliances provided through Veterans' Administration.	Do.
National service life insurance.	Active service after Oct. 7, 1940. Application may be made within 120 days after entrance into active service without further physical examination. If active service was between Oct. 8, 1940, and Sept. 2, 1945, insurance may be granted after release from service upon application in writing, payment of premiums and evidence of good health satisfactory to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Lapsed insurance may be reinstated without physical examination on or before July 31, 1948, or within 3 months after lapse if applicant is in as good health on date of application and tender of necessary premiums as on date of lapse. Term policies are renewable for an additional 5 years at premium rate applicable at time of renewal.	Death benefits payable in one sum (policies maturing on or after Aug. 1, 1946), or under monthly plan, as selected. Waiver of premiums during continuous total disability (commencing before insured's sixtieth birthday) which continues six or more consecutive months. For an additional premium, total disability income of $5 per month per $1,000 of insurance under certain conditions.	Veterans' Administration branch office having jurisdiction of area in which insured resides.
Readjustment allowance (unemployment allowance under Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended).[1]	Active service between Sept. 17, 1940, and July 25, 1947. Must have had 90 days' service, or, if less, discharge for disability incurred in service in line of duty. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. Week of unemployment must occur not later than July 25, 1949, or 2 years after discharge, whichever is the later. No readjustment allowance payable for any week commencing after July 25, 1952.	Compensation $20 per week, less any wages received in excess of $3. Eight weeks' benefits for each month of first 90 days' service plus 4 weeks per month thereafter, between Sept. 17, 1940, and July 25, 1947. Maximum number of weeks, 52. Self-employed veteran entitled to difference between net earnings and $100 per month.	Veterans' Administration through State unemployment compensation agency.
Unemployment compensation—State.	Veteran must have accrued credits prior to entering service. No service requirements.	Credits generally preserved and available after discharge. Varies according to State laws.	State unemployment compensation agency.
Loan guaranty (provided by Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended).[1]	Active service between Sept. 16, 1940, and July 25, 1947. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. Service must have been for 90 days or more; if less, discharge for service-incurred disability required. Loan must be made before July 26, 1957.	Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may guarantee up to 50 percent of a loan for purchase or construction of homes, farms, or business property, or farm or business equipment. Maximum guaranty, $4,000 real-estate loans; $2,000 non-real-estate loans.	Veterans' Administration regional office having jurisdiction over place of residence.
Education and training (provided by Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended).[1]	Active service between Sept. 16, 1940, and July 25, 1947. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. Service must have been for 90 days or more; if less, discharge for service-incurred disability required. Course must be initiated not later than July 25, 1951, or 4 years after date of discharge, whichever is the later. No education or training beyond July 25, 1956.	Education or training for period of 1 year plus time in active service after Sept. 15, 1940, and prior to July 26, 1947. Total period not to exceed 4 years. Monthly subsistence allowance $65, if without dependent, $90 with dependents. In full-time institutional training, monthly subsistence allowance $75 a month without dependents, $105 with 1 dependent, $120 with more than 1 dependent. In part-time institutional training, including institutional on-farm training, proportionate share of above increased rates. Lesser sums may be paid if veteran is attending course on part-time basis or is receiving compensation for productive labor. Subsistence allowance plus such compensation received may not exceed $210 per month for a veteran without a dependent or $270 per month for veteran with 1 dependent, or $290 for a veteran with 2 or more dependents. Tuition and certain other expenses up to a limited amount (ordinarily $500 per year) also paid.	Do.
Federal vocational rehabilitation (in schools, colleges, or industry).	Active service between Sept. 16, 1940, and July 25, 1947. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable. Compensable service-connected disability and need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome handicap of such disability. No training beyond July 25, 1956.	Vocational training or school expenses paid. Subsistence allowance $65 monthly if without dependent, $90 monthly with dependent or dependents. Minimum monthly payment of allowance, plus any compensation or other benefits: (a) Service-connected disability rated less than 30 percent, $105 if without dependent, $115 if with dependent, plus for additional dependents $10 for 1 child and $7 additional for each additional child, $15 for a dependent parent; (b) service-connected disability rated 30 percent or more, $115 if without dependent, $135 if with dependent, plus for additional dependents $20 for 1 child and $15 additional for each additional child, $15 for a dependent parent.	Do.
State vocational rehabilitation.	Need for training to overcome vocational handicap due to disability.	Tuition, books, tools for training, treatment, appliances, maintenance under varying circumstances, by State-Federal funds.	State Vocational Rehabilitation division—State capital city.
Reemployment	Service after May 1, 1940. Discharge under honorable conditions. Apply for reemployment within 90 days after discharge.	Entitled to reemployment if prescribed conditions are met.	Division of Veterans' Reemployment Rights, Department of Labor (contact local public employment office for information).
Employment	Service during a war period. Discharge under conditions other than dishonorable.	Vocational guidance and placement by veterans' employment representatives.	Local public employment office.
Civil service preference—Federal (also provided by some States).[2]	Active service in time of war or service-connected disability. Separation under honorable conditions. (Preference of peacetime nondisabled veterans acquired prior to June 28, 1944, protected.)	Extra credit points and preference allowed under certain conditions.	U. S. Civil Service Commission regional office. (Information at local post office.)
Burial in national cemeteries.	Last service must have terminated honorably	Burial in national cemetery. Under certain circumstances may also include wife, husband, widow, widower, or children.	Superintendent of nearest national cemetery.
Headstone or grave marker	do	Uniform type of headstone or grave marker furnished free, delivered to nearest railroad station.	Quartermaster General, U. S. Army, Washington 25, D. C.

[1] Special provisions as to period of eligibility are applicable to cases of a first period of enlistment or reenlistment contracted within 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Armed Forces Voluntary Recruitment Act of 1945 (sec. 11, Public Law 190, 79th Cong., approved Oct. 6, 1945) where such enlistment extends beyond July 25, 1947.
[2] Wives, widows, and widowed mothers entitled to preference under certain conditions.

What of Our German Policy?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN H. FOLGER
OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call to the attention of the House a problem which closely ties in with the whole question of European recovery.

In the past few months we have been virtually snowed under with voluminous reports relating to this problem. Undoubtedly it is a vital matter not only because present conditions in Europe will eventually affect our own prosperity but also because a durable peace will depend upon sound economic conditions in Europe.

The terrible devastation inflicted upon the victims of German and Japanese aggression is incalculable in terms of loss of life. They are not alone to be measured in terms of the spiritual demoralization of those who managed to survive. But, nevertheless, there are available some cold statistics which can give us some sort of a picture of the tremendous damage done by the Germans in their mad bid for world domination.

Aside from the millions of people slaughtered by the German war machine, vast amounts of agricultural and industrial resources in the victimized countries have been destroyed, including factories, machinery, railroads, and so on. The claims of Allied nations reflect these material damages, which partially destroyed their productivity, and prevent the rebuilding of their economies.

For instance, the Greeks claim damages up to approximately $11,000,000,000; the Dutch about $2,000,000,000; the French about $97,000,000,000; the Russians more than $130,000,000,000, and other countries in staggering amounts. British authorities estimate that almost one out of every three houses in the United Kingdom was destroyed by the German Air Force, and that by 1943 nearly 3,000 ships of her merchant fleet were sunk. It is estimated that Belgium has claims up to as much as $5,000,000,000. This shows the extent of devastation in Europe today, and, by the same token, indicates the tremendous job ahead of rebuilding these war-torn countries.

The United States which, comparatively, escaped the physical onslaught of the Germans, and as a matter of fact increased its productive capacity, is in a strategic position to help Europe get back on her feet. Undoubtedly Secretary Marshall had this in mind when he made his now famous speech at Harvard.

But it seems to me that a vital consideration in the whole question of rehabilitating Europe has either been overlooked or deliberately bypassed. I am referring, of course, to the responsibility that Germany must share in this crisis. It is a responsibility based not only on the fact that the Germans were the chief perpetrators of destruction, but that in spite of Allied bombings, Germany still maintains an industrial potential surpassing those of her neighbors. This has been officially proven by the United States Bombing Survey, which brought out the fact that the effect of Allied bombings did not seriously impair Germany's huge industrial resources.

It is true that these bombings were quite effective. It is true that they helped to weaken her capacity to wage war, but as a whole, German industry survived. It is estimated that at least 75 percent of Germany's industrial production capacity is intact. This is even true in the heavily bombed steel and machine industries, while the chemical and dye industries—I. G. Farben, if you please—are relatively untouched. These facts were submitted in testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Military Affairs in 1945–46 by responsible American officials in the American military zone.

It was recognized by the Big Three when they met at Potsdam. For when they discussed the question of Germany's ability to repair the source of the damages she had inflicted on her victims, agreements were made which clearly show that Germany was, and still is, in the position to make such compensations. Part 4 of the Potsdam agreement deals with reparations from Germany and states:

> In accordance with the Crimea decision, that Germany be compelled to compensate to the greatest possible extent, for the loss and suffering that she has caused to the United Nations and for which the German people cannot escape responsibility, the following agreement on reparations was reached.

Following this statement, the Allies allocated, percentagewise, the reparations which would be drawn from Germany to help rehabilitate her victims. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the reparations agreement was, and is, a very important factor in the rehabilitation of Europe. If this agreement is fully and promptly carried out, then we shall have solved an important part of the problem which we face today, namely, the reconstruction of Europe.

This seems perfectly clear to me. Yet, there are some people who are pretending to want to help European recovery, but are willing to scrap the reparations agreement which is a basic factor in that recovery. Mr. Hoover, in particular, has expressed his complete disagreement with the reparations program and has urged that Germany's export trade must take priority. In other words, Mr. Hoover is actually stating that Germany's recovery takes priority over her victims.

Senator BRIDGES a few weeks ago, went so far as to call upon General Clay to stop all reparations.

I am afraid that it would be quite difficult to justify such proposals to the vast majority of our people. For how can anyone justify the position that we take over the full burden of helping Europe recover, thus relieving the Germans of any responsibility?

This, Mr. Speaker, is assuming a burden that we should not bear, and it is my intention today to show that, while we can help Europe from our own resources, Europe can receive significant assistance through reparations from Germany.

Let us examine for a moment what the Allies accomplished in terms of reparations after World War I. Originally, the Germans were obliged to pay in money, the sum of $56,500,000,000. By May 10, 1921, this was scaled down to $33,000,000,000. It was soon decided, however, that instead of paying all in cash, Germany would pay from current production as well. Thus, while the Allies thought they had at last solved the question of reparation payments, actually, they had sown the seeds for World War II and, at the same time, deprived Germany's victims of their future economic and ultimately political independence. For what had happened was quite obvious.

Instead of taking German equipment to help rehabilitate her victims, the Allies actually began to supply Germany with more equipment in order to enable her to produce the necessary reparations in finished products.

Thus, Germany proceeded to convert war plants for reparations purposes which might have otherwise been destroyed. Secondly, the countries who should have received German capital equipment became more and more dependent upon German materials, machines, spare parts, and so forth. In other words, we had actually strengthened Germany's economic position in Europe. But, then, Germany argued for foreign loans in order to finance her production for reparations. She received such loans, both public and private, but the Allies became poorer and weaker, economically and militarily. Germany was, therefore, richer by the cash and even more important by the greatly increased industrial war potential.

According to figures provided by German and Nazi sources, Germany paid 10,000,000,000 marks in reparations under the Dawes and Young plans, while, at the same time, her public and private foreign loans amounted to 28,000,000,000 marks. The Royal Institute of International Affairs of London stated that Germany borrowed from abroad three times as much as she paid in reparations.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, Germany found that even in defeat she could make a good bargain. Incidentally, I would like to state that of the sums of money lent to Germany in the years from 1924 to 1930, just over half came from the United States alone. Not only in cash did Germany succeed in pulling a "fast one," but also, as I have just mentioned, in terms of her industries. Now, where did this money go? It went into the great German steel trusts, the notorious German potash trust, the Siemens electrical combine, I. G. Farben, and so forth. More than $800,000,000 of these moneys were used to secure an enormous advance in Germany's electrification which, of course, was controlled by the great German electrical trusts.

In 1923, for instance, the total generation of electrical current in Germany amounted to 20,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours; but in 1929, mind you, it had risen to 30,000,000,000, and by 1939, the eve of the war, it had risen to the gigantic total of 55,000,000,000. Why did Germany need this vast amount of electrical current?

At a conference of German chemical industrialists in Munich in December 1928, this question was answered by Prof. J. Hess, who told his colleagues that the program of German electrification meant "a saving of raw and auxiliary materials." Here, Mr. Speaker, was the beginning of Hitler's "economic autocratic program." It preceded Hitler, and naturally so, because Germany had been preparing for World War II from the very day of the armistice in 1919.

Yes, the American dollar played a very great role in Germany—so great, that Germany, by the time of Hitler's accession to power, had become the foremost industrial nation in Europe. This can be seen from the fact that during the very years of so-called German "helplessness," namely, 1920 to 1933, the cartelization of German industry had reached proportions hitherto unknown in the modern industrial world, and heavy industry, of course, was in the forefront of this development. Official records show, for instance, that between 1933 and 1936, Germany spent most of her income on the development of capital equipment or heavy industry. In 3 years, after Hitler seized power, Germany's new investment in heavy industry was increased almost 500 percent, while it increased only 100 percent in the consumer-goods industry.

Another fact: In 1932 Germany produced approximately 4,000,000 tons of steel for domestic needs. By 1943 she was producing the staggering total of 23,000,000 tons. This is the history, in brief, of the way the Allies handled the reparation problem after World War I, and how Germany's victims were "compensated" for their losses. It was nothing short of a tragic farce—a farce for which the world had to pay in blood, sweat, and tears. Is it any wonder, therefore, that Germany became a dominant power in Europe, so that by 1936, with less than 10 percent of the area and 20 percent of the population in Europe, Germany accounted for one-half, and in some cases much more than one-half, of the total European production of heavy industries?

Is it any wonder, therefore, that Germany controlled the economies of her neighbors, and it is precisely on this fact that certain people now shout the half-truth that European prosperity depends upon the recovery of a strong, industrialized Germany? The real truth is that Germany has used her industrial might to depress the economies of her neighbors. Ultimately her stranglehold on the economic destinies of her victims was transformed into political suzerainty.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, this was the practical method which enabled the Germans to spread the legend that European prosperity depended upon Germany's economic strength. But this is precisely the kind of dependence which cannot breed prosperity or security and will never contribute to a sound recovery in Europe.

I believe it was the basic aim of the Big Three when they met in Potsdam to create strong economies in the various nations victimized by the German aggression. This can be partially achieved by our assistance, but there is no moral or economic justification for permitting Germany to get away with it again.

Edwin A. Pauley, who was the President's representative on reparations, has made this perfectly clear. I have read his recent comments on the present situation and I would urge each of you to read his statements entitled "We Are Repeating the Blunders of 1918." I should like to quote briefly what he has to say:

> This article is a warning to America. It is a warning of grave peril. The peril that the victorious Allies are going to help Germany arm for World War III, just as they helped her to arm for World War II. This is happening right now. In 1918, we won a war. * * * So—with Uncle Sam lending the money and never getting it back—Germany was able to develop the great steel, chemical, aircraft, and other plants which equipped the hordes of Hitler for conquest. We saw the error—too late. But we vowed we would not make that same mistake again. This time, we said, we would disarm and deindustrialize Germany so she could not again become an aggressor. * * * We proposed to our Allies that we take away from Germany all of the industrial plants and equipment beyond what Germany needed to maintain living standards not in excess of those of the nations she had ravished. We proposed, also, that these plants and equipment be transferred to the countries which Germany had devastated in order that they might be aided in rebuilding their lives.
> To these proposals Russia, Britain, and France agreed.

So, the Allies agreed to such reparations. In order to calculate the amount of reparations, they also agreed to fix the level of Germany's peacetime industry. This was finally accomplished in March 1946. The level of industry was based on the agreement that Germany should not be permitted to produce more than 5,800,000 tons of steel annually, with a total steel capacity of 7,500,000 tons. This was an equitable arrangement in view of the fact, as I have mentioned, that Germany only required 4,000,000 tons for domestic use in 1932, as was clearly revealed in the exhaustive analysis made by our Foreign Economic Administration in which all the major United States agencies colloborated. But very early in the game, voices were raised against the arrangement on reparations.

For one thing, John Foster Dulles, making a report to the Federal Council of Churches, stated:

> Reparations should not be an instrument of vengeance—as if rooting out of German life the material sinews of her aggressions could be called an act of vengeance. I say, that when the future peace and security of mankind depend to a great extent on eliminating Germany's war potential, talk of so-called vengeance is preposterous.
> Furthermore, realistic people are not thinking in terms of vengeance—they think in terms of security and with security, the economic well-being of all peoples. The Russians, too, began to sidetrack the true purposes of the Potsdam Agreement on reparations. At the Moscow Conference, Foreign Minister Molotov proposed that the capacity of Germany's steel production be raised from 7,500,000 tons to 12,000,000 tons annually. This was the seeking a means of reparations. Incidentally, not so long ago, the Russians insisted that Germany's steel production be limited to 3,500,000 tons a year and on December 21, 1945, the commander of the Russian zone, Marshal Sokolovsky, declared in Berlin that to "leave Germany an annual capacity of 9,000,000 tons of steel, will mean war in a few years."

First of all, with regard to the whole question of reparations, we should bear in mind the need for strengthening our security controls against the resurgence of a strong Germany. That is what Mr. Pauley had in mind. The United States Foreign Economic Administration, too, was very clear on this point.

We must remember the fact that the problems of reparations is not only a key to the rehabilitation of Europe, but is one of the most vital issues affecting the treatment of Germany and is a major source of friction among the Allies at the present time.

Though the Russians now propose to increase Germany's steel capacity, the British and ourselves are not far behind. As a matter of fact, in the new level of industry plan for Germany, August 1947, we have announced our intention to permit the Germans to produce 10,700,000 tons of steel per year. In view of current developments, this figure may be tentative. But even if we assume that this figure is permanent, when are the Allies going to receive the 9,000,000 surplus steel capacity? Especially when it is known that the existing steel capacity in the western zone alone is approximately 20,000,000 tons. Incidentally, if Germany, in the long run, will be permitted to retain the full steel capacity, then she will be able to produce more steel than any single nation in Europe and yet she was supposed to have lost the war.

Moreover, in order to maintain the huge steel capacity of 10,700,000 tons of steel, other industries also have been increased. For instance, in the machine-tool industry, the original Big Four plan permitted the production of about 74,000,000 reichsmarks in all of Germany. But the new plan states that the western zones alone will increase this figure to 170,000,000 reichsmarks or about 129 percent.

In electric power, the new plan halts further removals for reparations to Germany's victims and, instead, calls for a substantial increase in electrical power equipment. Likewise in the chemical industry the level will be approximately that of 1936 which is about 42 percent more than was provided in the Big Four plan. In other words, the tremendous increase in German steel capacity is accompanied by the boosting of the capacities of other industries far above the original plan of March 1946.

What does this mean in terms of reparations? Even a superficial reading of the new plan will show that this fundamental objective has been practically vitiated. For example, only 3 percent of the mechanical and engineering industries will be removed for reparation as against 60 percent of the original plan. In some instances, such as the cement industry, there will be no reparations for Germany's victims whatsoever.

But, Mr. Speaker, the new level of industry plan as regards reparations merely formalizes a situation which has existed practically since VE-day. Agreements were made in April 1946 with our Allies to allocate German reparations. An Inter-Allied Reparations Agency was set up in Brussels at the end of 1945, but in spite of its stirring appeals to the Council of Foreign Ministers, there has been a virtual embargo of reparation deliveries to the victims of German aggression.

As of February 1947, only 6 complete plants were delivered to Germany's victims out of about 1,600 originally earmarked for reparations. These deliveries were increased to a little more than 30 plants by August 1947. By December 1947, 197 plants were allocated. Incidentally, in dollar values as of January 1948, 18 claimant nations received the trifling total of only $63,000,000 worth of reparations. This violation of our commitments has been so gross that we and the British were finally forced to declare in October 1947 that 682 plants would be dismantled for reparations which is about 50 percent less than originally contemplated. But even the New York Times of October 17, 1947, revealed that of these 682 plants, 302 are strictly war plants. Furthermore, the 682 plants which are now earmarked for reparations is less than 1 percent of all German plants in the western zones. This is confirmed by the statement of Sir Brian Robertson who declared, on October 16, 1947, that—

> The number of plants in the British zone is of the order of 50,000 and we are taking 496 of them. Admittedly, some of the 50,000 plants are small plants—so are some of the 496.

Why even the Germans cynically admit that the new reparations program has not touched the heart of Germany's industrial war potential. As reported by the New York Times on November 16, 1947, Ernest Matthiensen, former director of the stock exchange department of Germany's notorious Dresdner Bank, revealed that when first reports of the bizonal dismantling program leaked out, the stock market fell. But when the list of factories to be dismantled was finally announced, Herr Matthiensen declared:

> We saw that it only affected a small portion of German industries. It was what you might call an agreeable disappointment. The market recovered quickly.

Yet the Germans are continually whining about reparations, and even the Senator from New Hampshire has joined in.

As early as 1946, the former chief of the bizonal committee, Dr. Rudolph Mueller, an executive of the infamous Rohm and Haas cartel, outlined his plan for the rebuilding of a strong Germany. He declared that, unless there was immediate cessation of total or partial dismantling of plants, with the exception of such as exclusively serve "armament" purposes, reconstruction in Germany would be impossible. This has been echoed by all Germans.

Dr. Kurt Schumacher, the new champion of the German democratic forces and head of the Social Democratic Party, who pretends to be a liberal German, has even gone so far as to state that he could not ask the German workers to carry out Allied directives on reparations. In more blunt terms, I state that the Germans have never had any intentions to do so, but rather have, through every possible way, sabotaged the fulfillment of the program.

As I have stated, the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency has made countless appeals to the Council of Foreign Ministers on this vital program. For the most part, the press has not reported what they have had to say. For instance, on July 11, 1947, they issued a press release which said, among other things:

> On the other hand, the western zones of Germany contain a surplus of industrial equipment which is immediately available, since, in any case, their industrial capacity cannot be maintained at the same level as it was at the end of the war.
> Whatever the level at which German industry will be finally fixed, a number of plants will still be available for transfer. Since many German plants are at present lying idle and cannot, in any case, be used by Germany for a long while to come because of lack of fuel and manpower, their transfer will not appreciably add to the German problem or to the difficulty of feeding the German nation.
>
> The value of this form of reparation to the countries which receive it has often been a subject of discussion. But the intense competition among the member governments of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency for this industrial equipment clearly indicates the importance which the European nations attach to it. Even the most highly industrialized countries of Europe are endeavoring to obtain a maximum of such equipment.
>
> The truth is that much of Germany's idle plants consists of precisely the kinds of equipment most needed now by the devastated countries. It represents also many items which cannot now be obtained from other sources, regardless of monetary credits. Even American industry, at this time, is hardly in a position to supply all the industrial equipment needed to revive the European economy, if our own needs are considered just a little.
> German reparation can, therefore, be a powerful contribution by Europe herself toward her own reconstruction and is closely linked to any program which may be drawn up by the Conference meeting in Paris on July 12.

In other words, as early as July 1947, the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency recognized the importance of reparations in any plan for the rehabilitation of Europe.

Even General Clay, in a press conference on November 1, 1947, referring to the winning of the Germans against the new program of reparations which is so inconsequential, stated:

> It is my own belief that a considerable quantity of this plant that is to go into reparations can, in effect, be placed in production elsewhere quicker than in Germany and if that is true, would provide an increase in European production which is so essential for the economic recovery of all of Europe.

He further made this admission which did not appear in the leading newspapers in the United States:

> It was not contemplated at any time that the German people would be happy over reparations from capital equipment, but the fact remains that under all considerations involved, including aid, probably no other conquered nation has been treated with greater consideration.

Strangely Germany seems to be a favored child. Why?

The fallacy of a policy which would leave so much surplus productive capacity in Germany has been recently confirmed by Kenneth C. Royall, Secretary of the Army, who said:

> If General Clay is right, and I have no reason to doubt it, these plants will be of no value to Germany within 5 years.

The attacks against the Allied program on German reparations have been so unprincipled that an American member of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, Mr. Albert Z. Carr, has felt it to be his duty to speak out in a recent article published in the New York Times, December 7, 1947. He took up every argument posed by those who would scuttle the program and showed by facts and figures that reparations was not only essential to the real recovery of western Europe, which is supposed to be the guiding principle of the Marshall plan, but is indeed a vital prerequisite for the strengthening of our own security against a resurgent Germany. As regards the Marshall plan for European recovery, Mr. Carr states:

> Under the Marshall plan western Europe must help herself as well as receive help from America. To help herself she must increase her own production, and daily it is becoming clearer that one way in which western Europe can increase her production is to redistribute Germany's surplus industrial plant in the British, American, and French occupation zones * * *.
> The future of Europe's economy may turn on whether or not the present schedule of reparations in plant and machinery is adequate and whether the deliveries are made on time. If the payment is adequate and not too long delayed, reparations may turn out to be a most important element in the recovery of Europe.

No American who is sincerely concerned about our national interests and our security can afford to disregard Mr. Carr's observations that—and I quote him again—

> The German industrial economy is still, by all odds, potentially the mightiest in Europe.

This is a fact which is sometimes glossed over in order to portray Germany as being a mass of rubble. There seems to be a commitment that Germany shall control the manner and degree of recovery in all Europe.

This was the line that was first used by the Germany Firsters in their efforts to prevent the implementation of Allied decisions on reparations and other vital phases of the German problem. They said, in effect, do not worry about the poor Germans, they are so weak economically that our real problem is not the danger of their rebirth but rather how we can give them some measure of sustenance. Today this line has been discarded and now the Germany Firsters freely admit that Germany's industrial war potential is mighty and that, therefore, it should be used for the rehabilitation of Europe. Indeed it should be used, but not in Germany, but rather should this surplus capital equipment be distributed among her victims.

These facts are well worth noting, especially when we observe a concerted campaign being launched in this country against German reparations deliveries. Even the New York Times has joined in on the fallacious grounds that the United States has already paid out billions to western Europe which have more than paid for the 682 plants now destined for reparations. But the New York Times of June 8, 1947, shows that American aid to Britain, France, Belgium, and Holland, the most important countries of western Europe, totals approximately $6,800,000,000 since VE-day.

With the addition of loans to these countries since that date, the total amount is in the neighborhood of $7,100,000,000. But the New York Times neglected to point out that about 40 percent of these funds are not gifts or charity donations, but rather businesslike loans based on stipulated terms of interest and time payments in dollars. Thus about $2,850,000,000 was given to these countries in the form of gifts, grants, and so forth.

If we compare this amount with the total reparations claims of France, Belgium, and Holland alone, amounting to $100,000,000,000, only a trifle—3 percent—has been satisfied by our grants. Furthermore the New York Times neglects to tell its readers that the greater portion of these grants and gifts have been in the form of foodstuffs and other commodities used for immediate consumption and does not represent productive capital. Therefore, in spite of our generous help thus far, we have not actually tackled the basic problems of reconstruction confronting Europe at the present time. And the solicitude exhibited by the New York Times about the American taxpayer shouldering the burden of supporting the Germans is also specious. For if the American taxpayer is now obligated to see that every German is well housed, well fed, and well clothed, it is precisely the result of a policy which deprives Germany's victims of surplus capital reparations and retards recovery in the whole of Europe. When the Times states that the 682 plants should not be removed because "the United States has more than paid for them," it unwittingly admits to the American taxpayer that he is paying the bill for the damages inflicted upon our allies by the Germans, and neglected to require of Germany any aid in the rehabilitation of other European countries.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the policy which we are following today. We are paying German reparations and even these payments do not tackle the heart of the problem, because they do not increase the productive capital of Europe, but, on the contrary, intensify the economic crisis in Europe by forcing Germany's victims to come to us for hard cash in order to buy the products of German production, receiving little or nothing for their own reconstruction.

This is economic and political insanity, for we are telling our taxpayers that they are obliged to finance Germany's heavy industries instead of making the Germans compensate her neighbors for the damages they inflicted. In effect, we are telling Germany's victims that they must forego economic recovery or remain under German economic domination.

The insanity of this program is shown in the case of coal, where, in spite of our solemn promises to ship substantial amounts of coal to Germany's victims, less than 15 percent of the coal produced in the Ruhr is presently exported. What are the consequences? It has forced Germany's neighbors to come to us and pay $22 a ton in hard cash for coal which must be shipped over thousands of miles of water to its ultimate destination. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the fuel situation in our own country is tight and that there is a dollar famine in Europe?

So long as we carry out a policy which deprives Germany's victims of surplus capital goods and factories, which are their just due, then our plans for the recovery of Europe will be built on quicksands. But if reparations in capital goods and raw materials, especially coal, were promptly handed over to Germany's victims, if the occupying powers made a determined effort to unearth the billions of dollars worth of Germany's external assets and allocate them to Germany's neighbors as was originally agreed upon, Europe would have a concrete basis upon which to plan its reconstruction

But for 2 years the victims of German aggression have waited for reparations, and for the promised shipments of substantial quantities of coal from Germany. The failure to deliver has upset their plans for reconstruction which contemplated the utilization of Germany's surplus productive capacity.

Does it make any sense to Germany's victims when they hear voices in this country protesting our commitments on reparations? Can they reconcile this special solicitude for the Germans with our high moral aims toward European recovery? I do not believe so. I am against reparations from current industrial production for the reasons outlined in the earlier part of my speech. But I fully support the reparations claims of Germany's victims based on the Potsdam agreement—that is to say, in capital equipment, raw materials, such as coal, timber, potash, and so forth. The failure to deliver reparations has been excused by some on the pretext that economic unification of Germany must precede the implementation of the program. Does this mean that the rest of Europe must wallow in economic misery and political unrest until Germany is rebuilt? It is not sufficient that Germany's victims receive food and clothing. It is far more important, in the long run, that they have an industrial base upon which they can determine their own economic future—independent of Germany.

This is the feeling of most of the Allies and has been expressed by the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency. The Reparations Agency has expressed concern lest the German authorities, now vested with great power over the German economy, succeed in gaining American support for their contention, namely, that they could not be held responsible for the economic consequences in Germany if the reparations program were executed. Therefore, the Germans, as I pointed out, are doing everything in their power, including sabotage, to block the dismantling of plants.

Three years ago the violation of our sacred obligations to our wartime allies would have been unthinkable. But now it seems to be the fashion to berate Germany's victims and curry the favor of the Germans. I believe, however, that if we are to preserve our reservoir of good will in Europe, we must continue our leadership in peace, and should not be remiss to other Europeans.

Europe has been ravaged by the Germans time and again, and I frankly state that any nation which shows a special solicitude for the Germans at the expense of her victims will not be able to maintain the good will of the latter. Furthermore, they will look with suspicion on any plans we propose for the rehabilitation, for they will say—and rightly so—"Why have you not included in such a plan the prompt, the full delivery of reparations from Germany which we have every right to claim as due to us in partial replacement for what the Germans destroyed?" I believe the victims of German aggression are troubled, and afraid of German power.

The present trend in our policy toward Germany can only play into the hands of those who question our true motives toward the recovery of Europe. They will point to the present barrage in the press against German reparations as another proof that American policy toward European recovery is a facade behind which the German powerhouse will be reinvigorated at the expense of her victims.

I feel very strongly on this whole problem because the present stalemate on reparations endangers the whole structure of European and world security and deprives our allies of the necessary resources to rehabilitate their war-torn economies.

Germany's victims have not forgotten, however, that the United States did have a policy which expressly stated that German reparations could and should play a major role in the recovery of Europe. It was summed up by our State Department on December 12, 1945, in the following words:

> It is in the interests of the United States to abide strictly by the terms of the Berlin declaration, which imposes a severe reparation obligation on Germany in order to—
> (a) Weaken effectively the economic base from which war industry could be derived until a peaceful democratic government is firmly established in Germany;
> (b) Provide material assistance to United Nations countries which have suffered from Nazi aggression and which now face tasks of rehabilitation and reconstruction from the damage of war;
> (c) Insure that, in the recovery from economic chaos left by war in Europe, the aggressor nation, Germany, shall not reconstitute a peacetime standard of living at an earlier date than the countries ravaged by German arms.

I firmly believe that these principles should remain our guide in the treatment of Germany and in helping Europe recover. They clearly implied that the United States was determined to reverse the economic trends of the past 25 years which have placed Germany in the key role of economic and political arbiter of Europe's destinies. Why we since have rejected this sound policy and substituted a program which will maintain Germany's stranglehold over Europe is beyond my comprehension.

In this connection I am happy to note that Secretary Marshall has also entered the fight. His letter and memorandum of February 11, 1948, to Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG should be read by every Member of this House and should be publicized throughout the land for it proves that not only do we have a moral and political obligation, but that, economically, reparations is a cornerstone for the European recovery program.

Of course, when it is noted that the total residual value of reparations, as estimated by Secretary Marshall, will be in the neighborhood of $250,000,000, I cannot feel too enthusiastic especially when I know that the damages claimed by the member nations of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency amounted to somewhere in the neighborhood of 300 billions of dollars. In spite of the howlings of the Germany Firsters even the present reparations program is a mere fraction of the losses suffered by our wartime allies. Nevertheless, I fully support the principles of reparations as outlined by the Secretary of State, because in the long run it will test our sincerity with the nations of western Europe. I know that if the United States does not come through on this vital issue the forces which oppose ERP will grow in numbers and in strength. Such a course, in the long run, means political and even economic isolation for the United States.

In view of these facts I cannot believe that any fair-minded American can sit back and permit a handful of pro-Germans in this country to subvert our foreign policy on behalf of German interests.

I have raised this question of reparations before the Senate because in our foreign policy we must be as realistic as we are determined, and if we aim to be realistic and, hence, effective, then our Government must take the lead in breaking up the ice jam and carry out, both in letter and spirit, without delay, the reparations program as agreed to. I feel that if we take that initiative, great progress will be made, not only in assisting European recovery, but in the solution of the German problem.

Public Law 810, Eightieth Congress, Provides Retirement Benefits to Officers and Enlisted Personnel of the Reserves of Our Armed Forces

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, an entirely new departure in retirement legislation is provided in title III of Public Law 810, Eightieth Congress, which establishes for the first time in history a comprehensive system of retirement benefits for Reserve personnel based solely upon years of service. This radical innovation is symbolic of the widespread and growing recognition which is now being given to the Reserve components as an essential element of our military strength and one which is absolutely vital to the future security of the United States.

Any thinking man or woman in this country who has ever served in our military or naval forces, or who is at all familiar with the problems with which the services are confronted in wartime, knows only too well how dependent we are and always have been upon the civilian soldier and sailor in time of emergency. High ranking officers of the armed services admit this freely and one general officer has gone on record quite frankly to the effect that the only wars we have ever won without the help of the Reserves were a few Indian wars.

Today, more than ever before, the military strength of the United States lies in its civilian components. A democracy like ours cannot afford the tremendous drain upon its financial resources which would result if we attempted to maintain a standing Regular Army, Navy, and Air Force adequate to meet our needs in wartime. Our only alternative then is to support a small, efficient, compact Regular Military Establishment, consisting of highly trained and competent professional officers and enlisted men, which will serve as a core or nucleus for expansion of our armed forces in wartime. This nucleus must be supplemented in time of emergency by the civilian components, and as we all know, the numbers of wartime personnel who will be furnished from these sources will far exceed those provided by the Regular Establishments. This has been true in the past and will be equally true of the future.

In previous wars the United States has enjoyed a great defensive advantage inherent in its geographical location, protected as it has been by two great ocean barriers. In addition to the protection furnished by our location, we were able to count upon potential allies overseas who could bear the initial brunt of an enemy's assault and hold his forces off until we had had a year or two to prepare ourselves for hostilities. Now time and distance no longer have their former meaning from a defensive standpoint and those friendly nations upon whom we were wont to rely in the past may never again be able to gain time for us. Indeed, it is widely believed by military experts that any future war will come with a suddenness and swiftness such as we have never known before, and that in all likelihood the initial targets of a hostile power will be within our own shores.

Because of these considerations it is imperative that we build up today a strong dynamic reserve of trained and professionally competent officers and men who will be qualified to take the field or fill their billets aboard ship or in the air when the day of mobilization arrives. We can no longer count upon a margin of safety in time. No longer will we have a year or two for indoctrination training, maneuvers and training camps. We must be ready to go to war, if war comes, on the day hostilities begin.

Bearing all of these things in mind, it should be very apparent to anyone why it is necessary today, more than ever before, to maintain our Reserve forces constantly at a peak of training and efficiency. An added factor of great importance which makes this so vital in the modern age is the great increase in technological development which requires that our forces be manned with specialists possessing diverse scientific and technical skills. An ordinary seaman may be trained, perhaps, within a period of a few weeks, but it takes months and years to train radar technicians, communications personnel, aviation mechanics, and all the many other technical personnel upon whom the success of military operations must depend.

In order to insure that our civilian components will be in a state of readiness when the call to arms is sounded, whenever and however unexpectedly that time may come, we must take steps to set up a program for the training and indoctrination of the civilian soldier and sailor far surpassing anything we have done in the past.

We all know, however, that a Reserve officer or enlisted man who applies himself steadily and faithfully to a program of peacetime training must do so at considerable personal sacrifice. He must give up his evenings at home with his family to attend drills, or shut himself off from social activities while he devotes himself to correspondence courses. He must forego his summer vacation if he attends camps or cruises. Those who have done these things in the past have done so solely from motives of patriotism.

The type and extent of Reserve service which will be required in the future demands that a further incentive be offered if we are to build our civilian components to the strengths which must now be provided. However strong the patriotic motives of our men and women may be, some additional inducement must be held out to them which will compensate them for these personal sacrifices.

The retirement legislation which has recently passed the House and Senate provides this incentive. It establishes a system of retirement benefits, payable upon reaching age 60, for those Reserve personnel who have performed 20 or more years of satisfactory Federal service. Generally speaking, "satisfactory Federal service" means service in a federally recognized civilian component, such as the National Guard, Organized Reserves, Organized Naval and Marine Corps Reserves, and the Volunteer Naval or Marine Corps Reserves. Satisfactory Federal service includes both inactive-duty service and active-duty service either as a member of the Regular Establishment or as a Reserve officer or enlisted man.

To be eligible for these benefits an individual must participate actively in the peacetime training program. Standards will be established by the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force which must be met if an individual is to retain his status as a member of a Reserve component and if he is to qualify for promotion. Moreover, a point system is established which provides credits for drills and camps attended, correspondence courses and other training activities.

In order that any given year of service may be deemed to be a year of satisfactory Federal service, a man must earn

50 points during that year. Otherwise it may not be counted toward the total requirement of 20 years. Points will be credited in the following manner:

First. One point for each day of active duty.

Second. One point for each drill attended or each period of equivalent instruction.

Third. Fifteen points for every year of membership in a Reserve component.

"Active duty" includes periods of extended active duty as well as annual camps and cruises. "Equivalent instruction" includes attendance at prescribed lectures and training periods, as well as satisfactory completion of equivalent portions of correspondence courses.

The computation of point credits in the manner described above applies to service performed subsequent to the enactment of this law. The question arises, then, as to what credit will be given for previous service.

Subject to certain exceptions which are specified in the bill, each year of service as a member of a Reserve component prior to the enactment of this legislation will be deemed to be a year of satisfactory Federal service, and thus may be counted toward the 20-year requirement.

The computation of retirement pay will be made in the following manner:

First. One day's credit will be given for each day of active duty performed during a person's entire period of service.

Second. One day's credit will be given for each point received for attendance at drills, for work done on correspondence courses, or for membership in a Reserve component. However, there is a limit to the number of days' credit which will be given, for retirement pay purposes, for inactive-duty training during any one year. Thus, not more than 60 days' credit will be allowed for any year for points earned in the foregoing manner during that year.

Third. Fifty days' credit will be given for every year of inactive-duty service in a Reserve component prior to the enactment of this legislation.

The total number of days' credit received over a man's entire period of service will be divided by 360 to obtain the number of years which may be credited for pay purposes. The number of years thus obtained, including any fraction of a year, will then be multiplied by 2½ percent of the active-duty base and longevity pay which the individual would receive if he were on active duty, at the time he is granted such pay, in the highest temporary or permanent rank which he satisfactorily held during his entire period of service.

As an example of the manner in which this bill will operate, let us take the case of an officer or enlisted man who has served on active duty for 2 years during World War II: He has not joined a Reserve component since his discharge. Can he ever qualify for retirement benefits?

If he becomes a member of a Reserve component now or at some future time, he will be entitled to count his 2 years of active duty toward the 20-year requirement for eligibility. But before he can qualify, he must complete a total of 18 additional years of satisfactory Federal service. To do this, he must earn 50 points during each year. If he is a member of an Organized Reserve unit and attends 48 drills he will receive 48 points for drills alone; if he attends 2 weeks of camp, he will receive 15 additional points. In addition to the total of 63 points thus obtained, he will receive a blanket credit of 15 points by virtue of his membership in a Reserve organization. This will give him a total of 78 points which will be well above the required minimum of 50. If he earns 78 points every year for 18 years in the manner described above, he will have no difficulty in becoming eligible.

The computation of this man's retirement pay is very simple. Having attended 2 weeks' camp every year for 18 years, or 15 days per year, he will receive a total of 270 days' credit for active duty. We assumed that he attended 48 drills per year. This means, then, that he will have received 48 points for drills, plus 15 points for membership in the Reserve, or a total of 63 points each year for training other than active duty. As has been indicated above, however, not more than 60 points earned in this manner may be credited for pay purposes. In other words, he will receive 60 days' credit per year for 18 years, or 1,080 days. The sum of 270 days and 1,080 days is 1,350 days. This will be the number of days credit which he receives for all service performed in the future. But, we must not overlook the fact that he will also obtain 720 days' credit for his active duty during wartime. Altogether, then, he will have earned a total credit of 2,070 days. Dividing this by 360, we obtain the number of years' credit to which he will be entitled for retirement-pay purposes, or 5¾ years. Multiplying this figure by 2½ percent of the active-duty base and longevity pay of the highest temporary or permanent grade which he attains during his entire period of service, we can determine the retirement pay which he will receive upon reaching the age of 60.

Now, let us take the case of an officer or enlisted man who has served on active duty for 5 years during the war but who is unable, because of business considerations, to devote the time required for a membership in the Organized Reserve. For his 5 years of active duty he will receive 1,800 days' credit for retirement-pay purposes. Assuming that he attends drills or prescribed lectures only once a month every year for the next 15 years, he will receive 12 points of credit for these activities each year. In addition, he will receive the 15 points blanket credit for membership in a Reserve component. This will give him a total of 27 points. But before any year can count as a satisfactory year for the purposes of eligibility he must earn an additional 23 points, making a total of at least 50 points for the year. This he can do by voluntary attendance at drills, by attending camps, or by pursuing correspondence courses at home. Let us suppose that he cannot afford the time to attend camp every year. For those years in which he is able to do so he will be able to add another 15 points, leaving a balance of only 8 to be acquired. But even if he cannot go to camp he can still earn the extra 23 points by correspondence courses. Regulations will be issued providing for appropriate credit for correspondence work. These regulations will take into account the length of time which the Department considers necessary to complete a particular course. It is expected that credits for correspondence courses will be allowed on a basis roughly equivalent to drill periods. Thus, in view of the fact that drills will be of 2 hours' duration, it is probably that 5 points credit will be given for a correspondence course requiring 10 hours. Accordingly, if a man must earn 8 additional credits by this means he will probably have to complete correspondence courses requiring approximately 16 hours. Similarly, he will probably have to complete courses requiring 46 hours if he needs an additional 23 points.

The officer or man who has had 5 years of active duty service in the past and who earns 50 points per year for the next 15 years will receive retirement pay computed as follows:

Fifty days' credit will be given each year, or a total of 750 days' credit for the 15 years. Adding this to his credit of 1,800 days for previous active duty, we obtain a grand total of 2,550 days. Divide this by 360, and we obtain a figure slightly over 7 years. This must be multiplied by 2½ percent of the active duty base and longevity pay of the highest temporary or permanent rank in which he satisfactorily serves during his entire 20 years of service.

The system of retirement benefits which this legislation provides should go a long way toward strengthening our civilian components. It will provide a modest compensation to those who are willing to sacrifice their leisure hours in order to make a substantial contribution to our national defense. At the same time, it will not place an unreasonable burden upon the taxpayers of the country, because the benefits granted will be in direct proportion to the actual contribution made by those who qualify.

Statement by Hon. Arthur V. Watkins, of Utah, on Appropriations for the Bureau of Reclamation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. STYLES BRIDGES
OF NEW HAMPSHIRE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by my colleague, Senator ARTHUR V. WATKINS, of Utah, with reference to appropriations for the Bureau of Reclamation.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

While President Truman was lambasting Congress for depriving the West of needed funds for reclamation and power development on his "nonpolitical" tour of the country, Congress in the closing days of the session in June was hard at work completing legislation which will give the West the largest reclamation and power program in its history. To answer the President's unfounded charges, those interested might find helpful the following chart which is beyond dispute. This chart, which gives the total budget requests, including supplemental and deficiency requests—the total appropriations and the expenditures for each of the last 10 fiscal years—undeniably points out that the program is larger and the sums greater than in any year of the New Deal administration.

Bureau of Reclamation

Fiscal year	Budget estimates	Appropriations	Expenditures
1939	$45,229,600	$44,544,600	$79,320,428
1940	80,071,600	76,984,600	96,365,934
1941	80,454,600	73,194,600	85,596,484
1942	100,769,631	101,361,631	91,438,942
1943	96,328,650	89,727,270	69,287,440
1944	41,161,400	38,275,500	54,587,242
1945	30,108,200	24,155,200	50,376,076
1946	146,838,700	117,365,050	64,362,688
1947	168,849,755	116,346,843	134,289,536
1948	196,407,400	143,185,038	[1]191,500,000
1949	284,902,650	245,566,139

[1]Estimated.

NOTES.—(1) Power revenues prior to 1948 excluded. (2) Expenditures include permanent appropriations; other 2 columns do not. (3) Emergency funds (WPA) included in "Expenditure" figures up until fiscal year 1946.

The labors of the Congress may not have met the approval of President Truman but his lieutenants in the Senate voted unanimously with the Republicans in support of both the 1948 and 1949 appropriation bills. The minority members of the Senate Appropriations Committee did not vote against the majority's report on either bill nor did they offer any substantive amendments on the floor. In both sessions of the Eightieth Congress, voice votes were all that was needed to pass the appropriation bills for the Interior Department which included appropriations for the Bureau of Reclamation.

Senator JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, minority member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, who has been so critical of Republican policy towards reclamation, expressed the Democrats' approval of the way Republican leadership had handled the 1949 bill by saying on the floor of Congress:

"I think I should add, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nebraska, Senator KENNETH S. WHERRY, Republican, * * * has done a very successful service in increasing the appropriation for reclamation in the West. * * * I wish it clearly understood that as one of the Senators who has been delighted to cooperate with the junior Senator from Nebraska, I very much appreciate what he has done."

The Evils of Bipartisanism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEO ISACSON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Speaker, since the death of President Roosevelt an unholy alliance has been formed by Republicans and Democrats in our Government. This alliance is dominated by the rich, the privileged classes, those who foster race hatred, the military men, the big corporations and monopolies, the landlords, and the machine politicians.

The two old parties, calling this new alliance of theirs "bipartisan," are seeking to fool the American people into bowing to one-party misrule instead of America's traditional two-party system.

The Republicans and Democrats would like the American people to believe that the future welfare of our country is threatened by some foreign "ism."

In reality the "ism" which threatens us most is bipartisanism—the bipartisan coalition of the Republicans and Democrats against the people.

Bipartisanism has fattened the rich and soaked the poor.

The Republicans and Democrats have forced a bipartisan peacetime draft on the young men of America and their families and sweethearts.

Bipartisanism has robbed the pay envelope of every American family by forcing high prices and keeping wages low; by forcing high rents and refusing to provide decent housing; by enslaving labor with the Taft-Hartley law to prohibit the people from organizing and bargaining collectively for a better existence.

This same Republican-Democrat coalition has betrayed the Jews of Palestine and destroyed the hopes of the sick and starving victims of Hitler anti-Semitism all over Europe for a homeland in Israel.

They betrayed Palestine for the greed and profit of a huge oil trust formed by Standard Oil and Texaco, appeasing the hateful Arab Grand Mufti.

Obedient to the oil profiteers, Truman and the Republicans scuttled the United Nations partition plan.

They inflicted an arms embargo against the people of Israel, at the same time giving loan after loan to Great Britain to arm the Arabs, sacrificing Jewish lives for the benefit of oil imperialism.

Republicans and Democrats are jointly responsible for the removal of price controls.

They ruined rent control, allowing rent increases through loopholes in the law.

They refused to permit a public housing program at low rents which would rescue our GI veterans and their families and others from tin-can shacks and slum conditions and give them decent homes.

The Republican-Democrat coalition has made racial discrimination the law of the land by establishing segregation in our armed forces and in other branches of Government and by fostering racial and religious discrimination in employment, in education, and in housing.

They have brought our country to the brink of war solely because war making is hugely profitable for the great munitions interests, the oil companies, and vast monopolies such as General Motors, General Electric, and du Pont.

This is the unsavory and criminal record of the Republicans and Democrats in control of our National Government since the death of President Roosevelt.

This is why the new party of Henry Wallace has sprung to life, composed of people of America who are determined to wipe out one-party misrule in America, determined to destroy bipartisanism and all the evils it has inflicted on the American people, and once and for all to rip away the death grip of the big corporations and Wall Street profiteers from the throat of the American people.

Last February the new party of Henry Wallace scored its first significant victory of 1948. The new party scored that victory right here in the Twenty-fourth Congressional District of the Bronx, under the emblem of the American Labor Party.

Last February 17 the aroused people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District rejected bipartisanism in an unprecedented overturn of both Democratic and Republican Parties, giving more than 55 percent of their votes to myself as the candidate for Congress of the American Labor Party, the party of Henry Wallace.

Overnight the importance of this event became Nation-wide. The success of the people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District of the Bronx in ridding our community of bipartisanism and its evils, the rejection of Republican-Democratic domination, misrepresentation, and neglect has been a beacon of hope and encouragement to supporters of the new party all over our country.

The people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District dealt Bronx bipartisanism a deadly blow last February.

Now the Republicans and Democratic forces of bipartisanism are trying desperately, by pooling their forces publicly for the first time, to smash the will of the people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District.

In this congressional campaign we see the Democratic and Republican machine politicians of the Bronx at last forced out into the open with their unholy alliance against the interests of the common people of our district. While Republican and Democratic Presidential candidates oppose each other at the heads of their tickets, a single candidate representing both these old parties now appears slated to try to oust the Wallace Congressman.

This turn of events offers a great opportunity to the people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District and the Bronx at large. It permits them, for the first time, to study the records of the two old parties, in the Bronx as well as nationally, as a single record which it really is—the record of a long existing political alliance masquerading as two parties.

The action of the people of the twenty-fourth district last February, giving an overwhelming majority to the party of Henry Wallace and snowing under the Democratic and Republican machines as well as the ineffectual Liberal Party has forced all three of these groups now to admit that they really represent one and the same policy, opposing the interests and the will of the people.

Bronx bipartisanism has picked up a new stooge, making even more evil the smell of political double and triple dealing.

This foul odor is nothing new to the people of the Bronx. But now there should be less difficulty in cleansing our borough of this stench.

The fact is now publicly acknowledged that the Democrats and Republicans in our borough of the Bronx have always worked together hand in glove.

The people of the Bronx have suffered greatly because of this double dealing by the supposed two-party system in the Bronx.

In the past the people were forced to suffer in silence. They had no means of knowing about this double dealing and no political instrument with which to fight it. But the American Labor Party has stepped in, bringing with it in 1948 the candidacy of Henry Wallace. The American Labor Party is determined to put an end to Flynn-Knewitz finagling in Bronx politics.

The bipartisanism of Democratic Boss Ed Flynn and Republican Boss John Knewitz—the double dealing of Republican and Democratic machines in the Bronx—has made of our borough the most neglected and the most backward section of New York City.

The streets are the bumpiest and most broken and torn-up of any in the city.

The people in dozens of sections are forced to live in the poorest, most tumbledown firetraps and shacks that survive in all New York. And for these indecent, tumble-down flats and shacks, the landlords collect rents which are unheard of by any standard of comparison.

Furthermore, the landlords, collecting the highest rents in history from the poorest people in our city, are protected by the Flynn-Knewitz machines from even making repairs and improvements essential to the health, safety, and comfort of the tenants.

Let us take a stroll through the Flynn-Knewitz bipartisan domain, keeping our eyes, ears, and noses open as we pass the uncollected garbage, the open dumps and foul creeks which these so-called leaders should have cleaned up years ago.

Count the old-law fire-trap tenements, and shabby, rat-infested frame dwellings; the rusted, unsafe fire escapes, the ancient schools.

Count the overcrowded blocks, the groups of children playing in peril of their lives in busy streets for lack of playgrounds; note the absence and lack of hospitals and health centers.

Take note of all these things and add up the score against bipartisanism in the Bronx. Is any other borough of our city so neglected by its political leaders and officeholders?

Why should our community of the Bronx be the most neglected of the city's neighborhoods? Why should our children have the worst schools, the fewest playgrounds, the poorest health in the city? Why should our streets be the worst repaired, our garbage the least removed, our dumps the foulest, our tenements the most dangerous and unhealthy, our youth the most neglected and the most exposed to juvenile delinquency?

These are the questions Bosses Flynn and Knewitz and their stooges and public officeholders must be forced to answer.

The record of criminal neglect and mistreatment visited on the people of the Bronx is the Flynn-Knewitz record, the record of a shabby, patronage-trading bipartisanism of Democrats and Republicans which has now at last been forced to expose its hand out in the open by the people of the Twenty-fourth Congressional District and their victory of last February under the banner of the new party of Henry Wallace.

The people of the Bronx will no longer stand for the bipartisan policy of neglect, abuse, and misrepresentation by Bosses Flynn and Knewitz and their Democratic and Republican machines.

The people of the Twenty-fourth District have shown the way to be rid of Flynn-Knewitz double dealing. They demonstrated their resentment and disgust against machine politics last February, burying Flynn and Knewitz and their stooges under a vengeful landslide of votes.

Flynn and Knewitz are now desperate, so desperate that they have been forced out into the open with their sly-dealing coalition and their little "liberal" helper.

The people have them on the run.

Let us keep them on the run until they have been kicked out of Bronx politics forever and replaced by a new party run by the people themselves for the good of the people, and not to enrich the pockets of scheming, thieving politicians.

Eightieth Congress Enacted 186 Public Laws Relating to Veterans and Their Dependents and the Veterans' Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, during the Eightieth Congress a total of 900 bills was enacted into law. Of this number 186 laws or over 20 percent of the total bills enacted related to the veterans and their dependents and the Veterans' Administration.

Of the 186 public laws enacted by the Eightieth Congress, approximately 150 of them provide direct benefits to veterans and their dependents. The remainder relate to the Veterans' Administration and include appropriation measures for that particular agency.

The 186 bills of interest to veterans enacted into law are of direct benefit to millions of veterans and their dependents. These laws are far-reaching and were enacted despite the statement by President Truman on January 6, 1947, in his address to the Eightieth Congress on the state of the Union, when he said, in part—"Except for minor adjustments, I believe that our program of benefits for veterans is now complete."

In order that the provisions of these 186 public laws may be readily understood I wish, at this time, to give a short résumé of each of them:

N. B.—Public laws designated with an (*) represents housing legislation of interest to veterans.

Public Law 5: Amends certain provisions of section 602, National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, re issuance in permanent plans and reinstatement on a comparative health basis. No cost estimated. February 21, 1947.

Public Law 25: Appropriation: increased pay costs—Veterans' Administration $48,272,500. March 29, 1947.

Public Law 26: Establishes office of selective-service records. March 31, 1947.

Public Law 34: Renews expiring 5-year level premium term policies for another 5-year period. No cost estimated. April 15, 1947.

Public Law 36: "Army-Navy Nurses Act of 1947." Establishes permanent Army and Navy Nurse Corps, and Women's Medical Specialist Corps in the Army. April 16, 1947.

Public Law 40: Extension of farm labor supply program re compliance with title V, "Readjustment Allowances for former members of the Armed Forces who are unemployed," under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended. April 28, 1947.

Public Law 46: First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1947: Veterans' Administration, administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services $142,258,000; printing and binding $5,000,000; pensions $241,665,000; readjustment benefits $873,836,000; military and naval insurance $3,125,500; national service life insurance $535,710,000; vocation rehabilitation revolving fund $300,000. May 1, 1947.

Public Law 50: Corrects Public Law 720, Seventy-ninth Congress, to clarify enlistment dates re eligibility of Filipinos for Naval Reserve. May 15, 1947.

Public Law 55: Amends pay readjustment act re validity of certain marriages. May 15, 1947.

Public Law 64: Includes civilian employees United States Naval Government at Guam under Missing Persons Act. May 16, 1947.

Public Law 71: Corrects technical errors in Public Law 729, Seventy-ninth Congress, an act "To provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes." May 16, 1947.

Public Law 72: Limits time within which General Accounting Office shall make final settlement of accounts of disbursing officers. May 19, 1947

Public Law 76: Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1947. Education facilities for veterans; Office of Selective Service Records; section 400: Provision re appropriation not to be used to pay increased pay cost as result of reallocation. May 26, 1947.

Public Law 82: Amends Public Law 434, Seventy-eighth Congress, re credit for military and naval service in connection with homestead entries. May 31, 1947.

Public Law 83: Authorizes Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in and rights-of-way over lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control. No additional cost involved. May 31, 1947.

Public Law 85*: Amends Lanham Act to increase amount available for veterans' housing with restrictions on use. May 31, 1947.

Public Law 242: Provides central authority for standardizing geographic names for purpose of eliminating duplication in standardizing such names among Federal departments. July 25, 1947.

Public Law 247*: Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1948. Provision re effecting settlement of war veterans on public land reclamation projects and employment of veterans. July 25, 1947.

Public Law 252: Amends District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act re contribution rates after termination of military service. July 26, 1947.

Public Law 253: National Security Act of 1947. Provides for Secretary of Defense, for a National Military Establishment, for coordination thereof with other departments, and so forth. July 26, 1947.

Public Law 254: Amends Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 to provide that bonds shall be redeemable after September 1, 1947—settlement in cash—extends time for applying to September 1, 1948. July 26, 1947.

Public Law 256*: Supplemental Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948. Appropriation of $35,500,000 for veterans' housing. July 29, 1947.

Public Law 263: Amends Civil Service Retirement Act to provide for return of amount deducted from pay for service less than 10 years. July 30, 1947.

Public Law 266: Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1948. Contains appropriation for Farmers' Home Administration for loans under Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. July 30, 1947.

Public Law 267: Military Appropriation Act, 1948. July 30, 1947.

Public Law 268*: The Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948. Public Law 865: To assist by grants-in-aid the Republic of the Philippines in providing medical care and treatment for certain veterans who are in need of hospitalization for service-connected disabilities who served in the armed forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States. Hospital construction limited to $22,500,000. Hospital expenses limited to $3,285,000 annually for period of 5 years. July 1, 1948.

Public Law 868. Amends paragraph IV, part I; subparagraph (c), paragraph I, part II; and paragraph III, part II, Veterans Regulation 1(a), as amended, to increase death compensation rates to widows, children, and dependent parents in service-connected wartime and peacetime death cases. Estimated cost $59,367,000 for first year. July 1, 1948.

Public Law 871: Provides for the procurement and supply of Government headstones or markers for unmarked graves of members of the armed forces dying in the service or after honorable discharge therefrom; requires the Secretaries of the three services to compile lists of the names of all members who were missing in action and to provide for the inscribing of each name on the wall of a chapel, or other appropriate memorial. July 1, 1948.

Public Law 876: Amends paragraph II, part II, Veterans Regulation 1 (a), as amended, to increase peacetime service-connected disability compensation rates from 75 to 80 percent of wartime rates. Estimated cost $1,611,000 for first year. July 2, 1948.

Public Law 877: Grants additional compensation on account of dependents in wartime and peacetime service-connected disability cases where disability is 60 percent or more in degree. Estimated cost $45,585,400 for first year. July 2, 1948.

Public Law 888: Amends Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 (Public Law 359, 78th Cong.) to clarify the intent of Public Law 396, Eightieth Congress, which extended preference provisions under certain conditions, to widowed mothers. July 2, 1948.

Public Law 896: War Claims Act of 1948, section 6 provides for the adjudication and payment of claims of former members of the armed forces, held as prisoners of war by an enemy subsequent to December 7, 1941, based upon failure to furnish the quantity and quality of food required by the Geneva Convention. July 3, 1948.

Public Law 900: Postal Rate Revision and Federal Employees Salary Act of 1948, title III provides an increase for Federal employees of $330 per annum, except as to certain statutory salaries. July 3, 1948.

Address of Hon. Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire, at the Freedom Rally, New York, April 11, 1948

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STYLES BRIDGES

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a copy of an address I delivered in New York, April 11, 1948, at the annual Freedom Rally. My address deals with the international situation. Present at the Freedom Rally were Americans whose ancestral roots are in scores of countries in other parts of the world, Americans who have seen their ancestral lands swept under the totalitarian tides of recent years.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Just about 3 years ago, in the spring of 1945, I had the honor to be the guest of this same Coordinating Committee of American-Polish Associations which is again the moving spirit of this Freedom Rally. It was just 2 months after the signing of the Yalta agreement and 1 month before the San Francisco Conference. We were then energetically engaged in warning the makers of American foreign policy that Yalta held the seeds of a great tragedy for the world. Our warnings were not heeded.

The world has already paid a heavy price for the mistakes of some of our leaders. The cost is still rising. Today, in spite of all the blood and treasure sacrificed on the world's battlefields, there is no peace.

It is almost 3 years since the war ended. Sometimes peace seems farther away than it did at the darkest moments of the war. Much of Europe is still in a state of devastation. Economic life has not recovered. Fighting continues to rage in the Holy Land, China, Greece, and India.

From the border nations of western Europe the Communists now control much of the earth eastward to our own Territory of Alaska. Whole nations, almost whole continents, have become engulfed by a Red tide of tyranny which holds in subjection the greatest number of people ever brought under single control in all recorded history. Two fundamental ideas of life, one geared to human freedom and the other to state despotism, face each other throughout the world. Everywhere there is dissension and threats of hostility. Everywhere there is fear in the hearts of men.

How has the world been reduced to this tragic state of affairs? In the late war many nations banded together to crush the march of tyranny begun by Hitler and his Nazi hordes. What was the spirit which lifted our hearts and made us stout enough to face that titantic struggle without flinching? We know it was the spirit embodied in the "four freedoms," in the Atlantic Charter and in the hope that when the smoke of battle cleared nations could unite in a world organization capable of assuring peace, justice, and prosperity.

Chief among the sentiments which inspired us was freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom from fear and want. We sought no selfish gains, territorial or other, out of the war. We rejected the idea of territorial changes without the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned. We promised to respect the right of all peoples to freely choose their own form of government. Sovereign rights and self-government were to be restored to those who had been forcibly deprived of them. We agreed to work toward free access to trade and raw materials which is necessary to world prosperity. We looked toward the organization of a peace in which nations would abandon the use of force and which would afford to all the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries.

It was for these goals that America entered upon the gigantic program of lend-lease without which the war might not have been won. It was in support of these goals that America finally dedicated her manpower and all her resources to the gage of battle. Russia did not join in many of these hopes and promises, to be sure, but she welcomed the powerful aid the free world gave her on these grounds.

Then, in the early dawn of victory and when the guns finally fell silent on a shattered world, came that series of tragic conferences and events which turned the victory of a hard-won war into a peace filled with disaster. The great sacrifices on the battlefields for the ideals we had proclaimed were bartered away over the conference tables of Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam. We had rejected the German surrender until it could be made to all the chief allies together. We stayed the victorious march of General Patton's and General Bradley's armies to permit the Red army to be the first to enter Berlin and Prague.

At Tehran, against the wishes of our British ally, we made fatal concessions to the Soviet Union. Before the war was over we had sacrificed two of our allies, Poland and Yugoslavia. The legitimate Government of Poland was not represented at the San Francisco Conference, although 20 divisions of her brave army fought on our side throughout the war. Even while the San Francisco Conference debated, the Soviets captured 16 leaders of the gallant Polish underground army which had fought the Nazis for 5 years and had assisted the Red army in the final rout of the Nazis. We saw war-exhausted men of Poland marched off to Soviet concentration camps.

In Yugoslavia, the hero and warrior, Gen. Draja Mihailovich, was also sacrificed by his western allies. His government and his people were turned over to the Communist agent Tito who is today actively conspiring against the freedom and peace of his neighbors.

So intent were our leaders on the war and so eager were they to promote Soviet good will that they closed their eyes to the rape of the smaller Baltic Republics of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia.

At Yalta we not only confirmed the Tehran betrayals but assigned half of Europe and the industrial heart of China—Manchuria—to the tender mercies of a government which knows no tenderness and mocks at mercy. The strategic Kuril Islands were consigned to Russia, and China and Korea were opened to Soviet domination and exploitation.

Agreed upon at Yalta and written into the Charter at San Francisco was the veto power which has since been used by the Soviets to block attempts to bring peace to a war-torn world. I said at the time that the veto power would make the United Nations unable to fulfill its great mission to organize peace, and this has now come to pass.

Then, in hammering out the peace compacts with minor enemy nations, we surrendered to Moscow total dominion over Bulgaria, Rumania, and Hungary. America agreed to a reparations scheme for Italy which siphons off economic aid to that unfortunate people as fast as we can pump it in. We created a focus of war infection in Trieste. We left Italy exposed to the depredations of a Communist fifth column supported by the armed forces of her aggressive neighbor, the Tito dictatorship. At this very moment the Communist fifth column seeks to grind Italian freedom under the heel of a Togliatti dictatorship.

At Potsdam we agreed to a system of reparations and to a future economic life for Germany which retards German recovery and the recovery of all of western Europe. As a result, the United States is today subsidizing the Germans on the barest living standard in order to prevent them from supporting themselves. The whole outlook for European recovery is being sacrificed to this nonsensical policy.

It seems incredible that nations which made such sacrifices to crush Nazi tyranny could be so blind as to permit another tyranny to rise out of the ashes of Nazi defeat.

I am sure it was not planned that way. You and I know that the American people despise oppression. We know that Americans historically are the champions of freedom and justice. But by unwise and secret diplomacy, we have found our high ideals being traded away.

Looking back on these developments it is possible to see in part at least how we blundered down this tragic road. We allowed the Soviet armies to take the military honors at Berlin and Prague for perfectly good reasons. We wanted to recognize the measure of Russian sacrifices and suffering in the war. We wanted to continue the solidarity of the United Nations in the finishing of the war and in building the peace. We entered upon the fateful conferences at Tehran and Yalta for these ends and in a sincere effort to understand Russian fears for her postwar security. Our leaders sought her good will, but in our eagerness to win her trust they paid her a price which left almost totally bankrupt the ideals for which we fought the war. When we finally rubbed the secrecy of those conferences from our eyes, the brutal fact confronted us that we had bribed the masters of the Kremlin by conceding them chunks of territory and the freedoms of innocent populations.

How did the Soviets respond to the trust we placed in her? How did she deal with the concessions we made?

She used her entry into Berlin and Prague as a political device to impress the smaller nations with her power. She looked upon war-torn Europe as a fertile field for Communist expansion. She determined to make herself strong by sapping the strength of Europe and enslaving the free manhood of the west. She used Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam not alone for her own peace and security, but to dominate her smaller and weaker neighbors. She turned trust into license and concession into grab. She used every postwar problem and conference to undermine her neighbors, and to spread confusion and strife as weapons to force totalitarian communism on the free areas of the world. The pattern has now become familiar. It seeks to overthrow every free nation by infiltration of Communist fifth columns, by vicious propaganda, terrorism, domination, and then purges.

We must recognize communism for what it is—a vast international conspiracy with tentacles in every country in the world, our own included. Whatever it may be in theory, it is in practice a great engine of power, operated by desperate, ruthless, unscrupulous men who have no respect for human liberties or for human life. They are men who will not hesitate to plunge mankind into another blood bath if we leave them any chance of winning world domination.

The grave error of our wartime leaders was their surrender of principle to expediency. They sometimes laid aside the principles of peace they proclaimed when they called the country to the colors. They failed to realize that that weight of American technology and production was in itself enough to tip the scales to victory without further offerings to Russia. Also, our leaders failed to trust us. Their deals were in secret. I believe that if the American people had been taken into confidence by their leaders, 140,000,000 people in eastern Europe and millions more in northern China would never have been delivered into Soviet enslavement.

On May 23, 1944, when it became apparent that our valorous allies, Poland and Yugoslavia, were being abandoned to a totalitarian fate, I addressed the Senate and said:

"Certainly the American people have not gone into this struggle for the purpose of turning over Europe to the control of any nation or group of nations, much less to substitute the terrors of one dictatorship for another. We have no desire to be a party to the establishment of any postwar organization which is to be dominated by one, two, three, or four nations."

Our wartime leaders undoubtedly meant well. Yet our late President and three Secretaries of State—Hull, Stettinius, and Byrnes—failed to understand that the Soviet Union was busy not only waging a military war against Germany but also a diplomatic war against their allies. But our leaders refused to heed those who did understand this crucial key to the course of events.

A full cycle has taken place from that fateful day in December 1939, when Russia moved on Finland over American protest to the present moment when the immensely stronger weight of the Soviets is again pressing upon Finland, as it is everywhere else in Europe.

American public opinion is at last awake to the fateful commitments to Soviet Russia and to their harsh consequences. And we are acting characteristically to the ominous turn of events. Let me give you a brief summary of changing public opinion as I see it.

During the war years we had placed our trust in the Soviets as an ally. We opened lend-lease to them and supplied them liberally with our war production and all other materials necessary to sustain them. We shared our technical skill and secrets with them. We cooperated wholeheartedly with them in devising the military strategy against the Nazis.

When the war ended we joined with them in UNRRA for the relief of the destitute. They received far more out of UNRRA than they ever put in and America paid some 75 percent of the cost. We included them in all international plans for postwar relief and reconstruction. Although we were disappointed when they remained cold to plans for peace and recovery, we still believed they would think the better of it and eventually would participate.

But as Russia became more demanding, more aggressive toward her neighboring small countries; as she turned concessions and events to her self-interest alone, and as she blocked so many sincere efforts to peace and recovery, American opinion became somewhat bewildered and confused. We remained patient, however, and redoubled our efforts to understand Soviet ways.

As the Soviets continued and as case after case revealed her aggressive conduct, American opinion turned to irritation and protest. We made strong representations, I remember, in the Petkov and similar cases. And when diplomatic notes failed to move the masters of the Kremlin America began to face the tragic reality that, in spite of our protests, the freedom of over 140,000,000 Europeans was ruthlessly being crushed by Moscow and her dominated satellite governments. But even then we could hardly believe that the Soviet leaders were so foolhardy to continue their aggressive conduct. We simply could not believe the Soviets would follow in Nazi footsteps after the terrible lesson of what Nazi oppression had cost the Germans and Europe.

It took the reestablishment of the Cominform, the threats to Greece and Turkey, and above all the seizure of Czechoslovakia, and the death of the Czech patriot, Jan Masaryk, to convince some American leaders of the real meaning of Soviet behavior.

Thereupon American opinion shifted another notch. We continued our simple economic aid to Greece, Turkey, China, and the 16 nations who met at Paris. But we took the further step of encouraging the free nations to work together for their safety and security. We began to show a firm determination to help them remain free. We took a firmer stand in direct resistance to Soviet actions in the United Nations and other international councils. And finally we turned once again to our own rearmament with a program that should give notice to the world that America is at last aroused.

What is it we seek? Certainly we wish to recapture the moral leadership which was bartered away by secret commitments and unprincipled appeasement. Here we are returning to the firm, positive ground which made America a haven for the oppressed and a champion of freedom throughout our history. We want the four freedoms and the Atlantic Charter to be the beacon lights on the road we seek to travel. We demand an end to secrecy. We insist upon faith and integrity instead of half truths and broken pledges.

We must insist with all our force that a free world be allowed to heal its wounds in peace, and that the people of every country be permitted to order their own lives freely and in peace. We have already moved to permit Germany to support herself and contribute her share to the economic recovery of Europe. We propose to stay in Germany as long as needed for this purpose. We ask that Trieste be returned to Italy rather than leave it as a no-man's land of constant friction. We have quickly passed the foreign aid bills to strengthen free peoples and hasten their recovery.

This is but the beginning of what we hope will become a general resettlement of postwar problems looking toward peace, equity, justice, and security for all nations. We hope the Soviets will join in this healing operation. The world needs the great contributions the Russian people can make to world peace and progress. We shall deeply regret any disposition the Soviet leaders may have to turn the clock back farther to renewed strife and misery.

In my address to the Senate about 2 weeks ago, I outlined some 17 steps which our country should take to safeguard its future and to enable it to contribute toward world peace and stability. This program implements the following first principles:

America must be financially sound and economically strong.

Our Army, Navy, and Air Force must be reinvigorated with manpower and matériel to meet any eventuality.

Our industrial potential must be geared to the defense needs of the Nation.

Our scientific secrets must be safeguarded and scientific progress pushed vigorously.

Our military leaders should at once coordinate their efforts and draw up a strategic plan to meet any contingency.

Those who would confuse our counsels and subvert our efforts must be removed from Government positions.

We should deal with all countries, particularly with the Soviets, on a reciprocity basis so that good relations with all become a two-way street.

We must encourage and support those who resist aggression. We must not strengthen those who strive to undermine the United States and other free countries.

We should support and strengthen the United Nations until it is capable of dealing justly and effectively with aggression.

In this hall this afternoon there are Americans whose ancestral roots are in Albania, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Italy, Ireland, Korea, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, and Spain. This is in the true spirit of America for we have welcomed to our shores men and women who sought an opportunity to work out their own destinies in peace.

Think of it—in this hall there are people of almost a score of nationalities free to worship as they please, to speak and write as they wish, and free to move about this great country as they will in the full knowledge that our Government and our Constitution will protect their liberties, freedom, and security.

Our spirit stems from the very foundations on which the United States began. The spirit of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln in our memories is greatly enriched by the kindred spirits of Kosciusko, Pulaski, Garibaldi, Mazzini, Kossuth, Sun Yat-sen, and many others of the old world—east and west—who joined in common search and struggle for liberty, freedom, and truth.

All of the people in this hall know of the great statue which can be seen from Battery Park in lower Manhattan. It is the Statue of Liberty, the gift of France to America, holding high the torch of freedom. It symbolizes what America means to all of us. The same lamp of liberty burned in the spirit and hearts of our forebears, yours and mine. Let us unite in the determination to spread its shining light throughout the world.

Eightieth Congress Has Provided for a National Institute of Dental Research

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the field of public health is one of the many important fields which are the legislative responsibility of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The record of this committee, of which I am chairman, during the Eightieth Congress is one of which I am extremely proud. I should like to review the record insofar as it relates to public health, and especially as to legislation in the dental field.

Of 46 bills relating to public health referred to the committee, 14 have been reported, and 12 have become the law of the land. This means that important legislation was passed in practically all aspects of health, for the total number of bills represents many duplicate and similar bills on the same subject.

Probably none of these new laws is of more significance than H. R. 6726 which creates a National Institute of Dental Research.

The Institute is created for the purpose of improving the dental health of the people of the United States through the conduct of research, investigation, experiments and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases and conditions; of assisting and fostering research by public and private agencies; and of providing training in matters relating to dental diseases and conditions.

The backlog of dental need is vast. It far exceeds the man-hours of dental skill that conceivably can be devoted to it. Only by finding new and improved techniques of prevention and treatment through research, can we hope within the near future to bring a reasonable measure of dental health to this Nation.

In the field of dental caries, research contributing to its prevention is still meager. Dental caries is the destroyer of most of the teeth that are lost by persons until they reach their middle thirties. About 90 percent of our children are affected by caries before they enter school, and most of them by the age of 18 have lost one or more of their permanent teeth. Thereafter pyorrhea, a disease of the supporting structure around the teeth, takes over as the chief enemy of dental health.

Crooked teeth, misshapen jaws, and other disfigurements within the definition of malocclusion, are found in all age groups and in between 25 and 40 percent of the population.

While some knowledge has been gained of the value of fluorine as a preventive of caries in children's teeth, we yet do not know why this reduces decay, nor the cause of dental caries. In the field of periodontal disease and malocclusion we yet have no idea of preventatives.

The study of all of these fields calls for the combined efforts of many scientific specialists. It requires adequately financed dental research. Research today is carried on only limitedly. There is also lack of facilities, and we have no research center comparable to our medical centers. Dental schools also need expanding research facilities, as well as personnel trained in research.

This bill, H. R. 6726, is designed to lay a sound legislative basis for a dental research program. It follows attentive consideration by the committee of the half-dozen bills relating to dental research which were before the committee. It has the full support of the American Dental Association, the Surgeon General of the United States, and of all who appeared before the committee.

The establishment of a National Institute of Dental Research, coupled with the training program provided in this legislation, constitutes a clear demonstration that dental research is on a sound basis. It should encourage qualified candidates to prepare themselves for research.

The establishment of the Dental Institute in the Public Health Service places it in the field of applied and basic research in dental diseases in the same position occupied by the Cancer and Mental Health Institutes, and the newly created Heart Institute, in the fields of cancer, mental health, and heart research. The legislation creating all of these agencies was likewise the work of our committee. The Dental Institute will not only provide a focal point of research, but is also empowered to make grants-in-aid to public and private institutions for projects that show promise of contributing to the knowledge of dental diseases and conditions.

As chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, I am exceedingly proud of the work of the committee in its consideration and favorable endorsement of this legislation. I have been gratified that it has secured the approval of the Congress and of the President, and has been enacted into law. It is one more worth-while contribution which the committee has made in the field of health toward the betterment of the people of the United States.

John Hollis Bankhead 2d

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. ARTHUR CAPPER
OF KANSAS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, April 21 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of HON. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD 2D, late a Senator from the State of Alabama

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, a number of years ago I was talking with a Member of the House of Representatives, and the conversation got around to the Bankheads of Alabama. As I remember it, Representative William B. Bankhead at that time was Speaker of the House; his brother, Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD, had been serving on the Senate Committee on Agriculture with myself since his first election to the Senate in 1930.

"In Alabama," this Alabama Congressman informed me, "the name of Bankhead is synonymous with personal and political integrity."

That must have been 14 or 15 years ago, but the tribute has stuck in my mind ever since. I really don't know that higher praise could be accorded any man; to have it as a family attribute is something of which I think any Alabaman can be proud, indeed.

Also, that is the way I myself always regarded Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD 2D, after association with him on the Agriculture Committee and in the Senate. JOHN BANKHEAD was a man of ability, of character, with qualities of leadership and loyalty and tenacity of purpose that made him outstanding in any field in which he engaged his activities. His work for agriculture in the Senate, particularly for Southern agriculture, fairly entitled him to the esteem in which he was held by farmers and farm leaders, in and out of Congress, in and outside of farm organizations.

I was proud and happy to call him a friend, and always shall remember him as a friend, and also as a loyal and distinguished American; one of the highest types that we have in American public life. If any words of mine could add to his stature or his place in history of his day and generation, I would add those words. But such additional words would not add anything to his standing. I can only say that I am glad, indeed, to pay this feeble tribute to the memory of JOHN H. BANKHEAD 2D, a leader with vision; a man of integrity; a statesman who served his State and Nation well and with honor. May we have more like him in the days to come.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. ALLEN J. ELLENDER

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, April 21 (legislative day of Monday, March 29), 1948

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD 2D, late a Senator from the State of Alabama

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, we pay tribute to a noble gentleman from Alabama, the late Senator JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD. Words cannot adequately describe the course, loyalty, and unselfishness he manifested in defending the welfare of his fellow men. The Congress has been privileged and honored to have had within its ranks one or more members of Alabama's leading family, the Bankhead family, for three generations. The brilliant career of JOHN H. BANKHEAD has extended to 60 years the period of courageous service this family has performed to the State of Alabama and the Nation.

It has been said that JOHN H. BANKHEAD was Alabama's greatest statesman, and there is ample evidence to support that statement. The zeal with which he served his community, State, and the Nation places him among the foremost statesmen of his generation. Keenly aware of the many difficulties the farmer faces in producing food and clothing for America, the illustrious Senator devoted years of tireless effort toward removing these burdens. Although unquestionably an authority on the subject of cotton, he also possessed a thorough, comprehensive knowledge and understanding of all phases of agriculture and agriculture research.

Senator BANKHEAD was truly a valiant champion of the American farmer. Not alone by fearless words, but by a long list of statutes which bear his name, he has carried the farmers' torch before the Congress. He achieved an unchallenged position as a foremost leader for American agriculture in Congress. A short while before his death, he was honored by the farmers of Alabama as being one of the greatest men who had ever served the farmers of that State. He was also a distinguished scholar and alumnus of the University of Alabama.

During his 16 years of service in the Senate, Senator BANKHEAD was a member of the Appropriations, Banking and Currency, and Agricultural and Forestry Committees. His contributions to these committees and his faithfulness to their tasks won for him the respect and devotion of all those who served with him. His friends are legion. The true value of his public services to the State of Alabama and the farmers of the Nation cannot be estimated.

One of several outstanding Federal statutes initiated by Senator BANKHEAD is the Bankhead Cotton Control Act of 1934. This measure provided the means by which the cotton industry would be placed on a sound commercial basis, prevented unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, and provided funds for paying additional benefits under the AAA.

Presenting this bill to the Senate, Mr. BANKHEAD clearly stated his position with reference to agriculture in these words:

I desire to say that, as a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, I have stood with an open willingness to promote any agricultural program for the benefit of agriculture in any section of America that may be agreed upon by those who represent the producers in such agricultural section. My heart is with them. My judgment is with them. * * * Let me say that this bill has not come to Congress from any theorist of any kind. This is a practical program which has developed out of the necessities of our situation. Let me say that the demand for the passage of this bill comes up from the very cotton rows of the South.

Another statute bearing the name of Mr. BANKHEAD is the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act of 1937, which established the Farmer's Home Corporation primarily for the purpose of encouraging and promoting the ownership of farm homes and making the possession of these homes more secure. In describing the plight of the tenant farmers who were to be benefited by this measure, Senator BANKHEAD said:

Here is the underdog so far as any measures the present Congress has passed are concerned, except possibly those coming under the relief bills. Here is the poorest group of people. At least, to whom loans have been authorized by our Government. There are local communities which have served without compensation in order to help their fellowmen in the counties. Whatever I can do to contribute to that end, I shall certainly do to bring about an economical and a cheap administration of this program for the poor farmers of this country.

No one has any thought that we can provide Federal credit for every tenant farmer in the country who desires to own a home, because I daresay that more than half of the farm tenants, regardless of their intellectual standards, have a longing for homes of their own, for themselves and for their families. I shall not digress at this time to go into the subject of home ownership, its desirability, and its value. Those things are well known to every man intelligent enough to serve in the Congress of the United States.

Little more need be said about Senator BANKHEAD'S contribution to the farmers of America. His own words as well as his deeds illustrate the true stature of this stalwart champion of the farmer.

A Debauched Currency Is Responsible for High Prices and World Chaos

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ZALES N. ECTON

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to call to the attention of my colleagues a statement made in the House of Representatives today by the Honorable JOHN SANBORN, of Idaho, in support of H. R. 7012 and S. 2895.

This statement tells you some facts about money in language anybody can understand, and should be convincing evidence that until we adopt a sound monetary system along the lines provided in H. R. 7012 and S. 2895, all of our present frenzied efforts for world peace and economic stability are just so much sound and fury signifying nothing.

The Marxist system of "managed economy and managed currency" initiated by the New Deal 14 years ago has so debauched our currency that the dollar and all fixed-dollar-value securities have lost 63 percent of their value since 1933, and continue to lose 1 percent of their value monthly. One of the proudest boasts of the New Dealers is that they protected the people's savings by enacting a law to guarantee bank deposits, yet under this system of currency debauchery they have not only filched 63 percent of the American people's savings but have destroyed 63 percent of the value of their life insurance, pensions, and other fixed-dollar value securities. This represents a greater loss to the American people in 14 years than was suffered through bank failures in the preceding 140 years.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the statement referred to.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY PRICES ARE HIGH

Demagogues are blaming business and the farmer for high prices, but a glance at the figures below should convince any fair minded person that the unsound monetary and fiscal policies of the New Deal administration are entirely to blame. Based on the purchasing power of the dollar many prices are actually lower than they have ever been. High prices do not reflect greater values but cheaper dollars, and naturally it takes more of these cheap dollars to defray living costs.

The purchasing power of $1 today is equivalent to 37 cents prior to 1934.

It requires $2.71 to buy what could be bought for $1 prior to 1934.

A $10 daily wage today is equivalent to $3.70 prior to 1934.

Your $100 per month pension is equivalent to $37 prior to 1934.

Your $10,000 life insurance policy is equivalent to $3,700 prior to 1934. And the only thing that will prevent the purchasing power of the dollar from falling still lower is to adopt a sound monetary system as suggested in H. R. 7012 and S. 2895.

WHY WE HAVE A HOUSING PROBLEM

With an unstable and constantly depreciating dollar, no one knows what material and labor costs will be six short months from today. Consequently many builders are frightened at the prospect and reluctant to take chances which might ruin them. Free competitive enterprise will supply us with all the homes we need if we will adopt a sound, stable, dependable dollar. With sound money, there is no need for subsidies or socialistic housing projects which, in the last analysis, robs Peter to pay Paul, and eventually hurts most those they pretend to help.

WHY WORLD WAR III THREATENS

It is this unsound monetary system which prevents European recovery and is driving us headlong into world war III. For all wars are economic. All depressions are the result of unsound monetary and fiscal policies. Government, and not industry, is to blame for booms and busts.

Sound money is the most vitally important subject before the American people, and if we continue to ignore it, we are not fit to represent our constituents in the Congress. Fathers and mothers who fail to read Congressman SANBORN'S statement or, having read it, neglect to do anything about it, should stop complaining about high prices, high taxes, and the imminent danger of their sons being sent to fight another foreign war. It is no good blaming somebody else, for we people in the U. S. A. are personally responsible for the kind of government we get. It is time that we abandon expediency and the isms and ideologies of the old world, and support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Representative Knutson Takes Care of Tax Relief for Wealthy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. KIRWAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Drew Pearson from the Washington Post:

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

REPRESENTATIVE KNUTSON TAKES CARE OF TAX RELIEF FOR WEALTHY

(By Drew Pearson)

WASHINGTON, June 14.—The declining years of the du Ponts, the Rockefellers, the Morgans and the Astors will be made considerably brighter by several loopholes tucked away in the new "technical" tax bill which Congressman HAROLD KNUTSON, Minnesota Republican, is obligingly reporting out of the Ways and Means Committee.

He has carefully called this a "technical tax-revision" bill which gives the general impression that it merely rounds off a few rough edges of the tax law. The edges it rounds off, however, cut down the estate and gift taxes so as to benefit the wealthiest families in the United States.

Most people don't realize that the earlier tax bill, passed over President Truman's veto, carried a little-noticed provision reducing estate and gift taxes by a rough average of 30 percent. By reason of estate-tax exemption of $60,000, this relief goes only to the Nation's wealthiest families.

This, however, has merely whetted the appetites of the tax-lawyer lobbyists. They are now out to get more for their wealthy clients, and their good friend, Congressman KNUTSON, has generously fixed up another bill—H. R. 6712—by which anyone with a good tax lawyer could pass on to his family the nice little bonanza of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 without any death or gift taxes whatsoever.

This would reduce gift and inheritance taxes. And while reducing gift and inheritance taxes for the wealthy, millions of low-income taxpayers continue to pay eight to ten times as much in income taxes as before the war.

NOTE.—The two tax lobbyists who sneaked this across with their willing friend, KNUTSON, were Roswell Magill, the Wall Street tax lawyer, and William Sutherland, tax expert of the American Bar Association.

A Long-Range Farm Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN A. BLATNIK
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have always been in agreement with the agrarian philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence and father of the Democratic Party, who believed that a thriving agriculture based on individually owned and operated farm units was one of the cornerstones of a successful democracy, and a bulwark against selfish corporate power which, if left unchecked, will trample upon the rights of the people. I am also in accord with the Jeffersonian concept which holds that a stable, prosperous and expanding agriculture is essential to a sound and prosperous national economy—that when all goes well for agriculture, then all goes well for the Nation. For this reason I have been a strong supporter of the Roosevelt farm program, and have advocated that this program be expanded and improved to promote the interests of the American farmer, and to solve the major problems which confront him.

GOP FAILS THE FARMER

When I first arrived in Washington as a freshman Congressman, I was confident that the Eightieth Congress would enact into law some constructive farm legislation. I was encouraged by the many speeches delivered from the floor of the House by Republican orators, who talked long and loud about a new long-range farm program which they were going to formulate. But my optimism was short-lived. In spite of all this GOP "I'm a friend of the farmer" oratory, it soon became obvious that the Republican leadership was not interested in working out a genuine program for the farmer. Now the second session is ended, and this mythical long-range farm program has never materialized.

The record of the Eightieth Congress on farm legislation is one of miserable failure and broken campaign promises. It proves that all this Republican talk about helping the farmer was only Republican double talk. Let us look at the record. While the Republican leaders were talking about the welfare of the farmer last year, the GOP hatchetmen in the House Appropriations Committee were swinging the economy ax on the budget of the Department of Agriculture. They cut REA appropriations by $25,000,000; funds for the AAA and soil conservation were reduced by $36,000,000; the farm-tenant purchase program had its appropriation reduced from $35,000,000 to $15,000,000, and crop-insurance funds were reduced by 55 percent. During the second session the GOP continued its false economy policy by cutting the Department of Agriculture budget by $58,000,000, which will result in the further curtailment of crop insurance, farm-tenant purchase and other farm programs. REA funds, which were sharply reduced during the first session, were restored this year only because of strong pressure from farm representatives during an election year.

In other words, the Republican majority did not have the courage to repeal the Roosevelt farm program outright—they knew that the farmers would not stand for that. What they did not dare to do openly, they attempted to do indirectly and under cover. So they merely cut the heart out of the farm program by reducing appropriations to the point where the Department of Agriculture cannot function properly. This is legislation by appropriation of the worst kind.

The farmer received another set-back when the Republican Congress adopted the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, which exempts the railroads from the antitrust laws for rate-making purposes. In practice, this new law will enable two banking houses—J. P. Morgan and Kuhn-Loeb companies—to dictate all freight rates. It means higher freight rates on the goods the farmer buys and sells—a sell-out for the farmer in favor of the rail lobby.

The Republican majority is also directly responsible for the recent attacks upon farm-marketing and consumer cooperatives. Under Republican leadership, the House Small Business Committee held hearings and recommended a special tax on cooperatives and the House Ways and Means Committee also held hearings on this question. Had it not been for the strong public reaction against this proposal, the evidence shows that the GOP was prepared to use the Federal taxing power to curb and destroy these cooperative organizations which protect the interests of the farmer against the food trusts by making direct marketing possible without exploitation and enormous middlemen profits.

In short, the Republican policy toward agriculture during the entire life of the Eightieth Congress was negative and destructive. They did immeasurable harm to the existing agriculture programs by cutting the agriculture budget. They opened the door for higher freight rates on farm produce, and threatened the life of the farm-cooperative movement. The only constructive action taken during both sessions was passage of the measure to extend farm-price supports at present parity levels for another year, after which a new parity formula, lower on some commodities, will go into effect.

A COMPREHENSIVE FARM PROGRAM NEEDED

It is most fortunate for the farmer and nonfarmer alike that previous Congresses had the wisdom to formulate a permanent, long-range Federal farm program. This program was built up step by step and act by act under the brilliant leadership of Franklin Roosevelt, and today stands in striking contrast to the do-nothing policies of the Republican Party. I have always looked with favor on this program, and I have opposed the GOP efforts to sabotage, weaken, and undermine it.

At the same time, I recognize that the Roosevelt farm program is not perfect. It represents only a step in the right direction, and there is much left to be done. I am convinced that we should take the present farm program as the pattern, and then broaden, strengthen, and expand it to provide permanent prosperity to the farmer, and farm security for all people who till the soil.

Planning and constructive effort to refine and improve existing farm programs is a major responsibility of government, made so by the important place of the farm industry in our economy. In the past farm problems have not received as much attention as they deserve because few people have a clear conception of the role that agriculture plays in our total economy. Agriculture is important and basic not only because it is the source of food for the total population, but also because it furnishes many raw materials for manufacturing industries—cotton, and so forth. Our society is interdependent economically, and if the Nation's farm industry suffers from stagnation, then all phases of our economic life disintegrate.

Relatively few people realize the size of the agriculture industry. It consists of approximately 6,000,000 farm units averaging 190 acres each, and represents an investment in land, buildings, and equipment of over $100,000,000,000. Against this total investment is a total debt of $8,500,000,000. There are 30,500,000 people living on American farms, with about 10,000,000 adults being gainfully employed in this occupation. The fortunes of one out of every four persons in the United States are directly linked to farm income.

Surely an industry which supports over 30,000,000 people and which involves a capital investment of $100,000,000,000 deserves the most serious consideration by our people and our Government. Surely an industry which feeds the Nation, and furnishes raw materials for our industries, deserves more than passing thought from our Government planners and National Legislature.

A PROGRAM FOR AGRICULTURE

For the purpose of analysis and discussion, the problems of the farmer can be divided into the following five major phases: First, price parity and the problems resulting from unfavorable price-cost relationships for major farm products; second, the problem of maintaining soil fertility; third, the problem of securing credit; fourth, the problem of tenancy and home and farm ownership; and fifth, the problem of social security and welfare of the farm population.

These five great farm problems are interrelated, and any sound, well-founded farm program will be one which furnishes some solution to each of them. I will discuss each problem in turn and suggest some positive proposals to furnish solutions.

First. Parity prices and the unfavorable price-cost relationship: The main problem of agriculture is found in the unfavorable price-cost relationship for major farm products which exists almost always except during periods of war and postwar food shortages, and which results in a low level of farm income. It is an economic truth that farm income tends to fluctuate with the business cycle. For example, total farm income in 1919 was at $17,000,000,000, but in 1929 it was down to $11,000,000,000, and by 1932 it had fallen to $5,000,000,000. Today, during this period of inflation and heavy foreign demand for American food, farm income stands at about $28,000,000,000. In other words, the farmer is prosperous one year when farm income is high, but since such prosperity nearly always coincides with high prices of the goods and equipment he must buy, his net income is not raised enough during the good years to take care of him during the bad years. Since farm prices tend to fall more rapidly than prices of the goods the farmer must buy, in past years when the market dropped the farmer often mortgaged and lost his farm, and rural living standards fell far below those in the rest of the country. The farm foreclosures, the bankruptcies, the 30-cent corn and 40-cent wheat of the Hoover administration represented the low point in the farmer's fortunes, but they were the end product of 10 years of farm depression following the First World War.

It seems to me that the solution to this problem of fluctuating farm income requires a double-barreled approach. One requirement is to take action to stabilize farm prices at a level necessary to guarantee a decent standard of living for our farm population. Another approach is to increase the consumption of farm products by placing a floor under national food consumption.

Under Roosevelt's leadership, America made a major effort to stabilize farm prices by enactment of the AAA program of 1938. The purpose of this program was to achieve parity—i. e., give the farmer a price representing the same purchasing power as he enjoyed during the base period 1909–14—by means of (1) limiting production through acreage allotments, (2) setting marketing quotas for basic crops, and (3) allowing the Commodity Credit Corporation to support prices by making loans to farmers up to 90 percent of the parity price of the crop and to hold farm surpluses off the market until prices were more favorable under the ever normal granary program.

It is generally agreed that the triple-A program was moderately successful. Total farm income was raised from a low of $5,000,000,000 in 1932 to $9,000,000,000 in 1940. In spite of this success I am not suggesting that the present AAA program is perfect or that it represents a permanent panacea. Although the program is basically sound, there is a need for revision.

A. Modernizing the parity formula: For example, there is an immediate change needed in the parity formula to establish a more equitable relationship between prices received today by the farmer and prices paid. The old base period of 1909–14 is outmoded, due to technological change. The proposal made by the National Grange—eighty-first national convention, 1947—to modernize the parity formula by, first, determining the average percent of the national income received by agriculture during the most recent 10-year period; and, second, applying this percentage to the national income figure determined by the Council of Economic Advisers as necessary in maintaining maximum employment and thus determining what the parity figure should be is a sound one, and deserves consideration. This suggestion would anchor farm prices to the national income, and guarantee to the farmer his just share of this income.

I regret to say that the so-called agricultural price stabilization bill adopted by Congress on the last day of the session—June 19, 1948—does not provide a modernized parity formula. It provides a new formula to take effect in 1950, but not an equitable one. It is unfair to the farmer in that it actually reduces parity prices on a flexible basis, and then reduces support prices on the new parity levels. In my opinion, it is a step backward in providing security and protection to the farmers, and it is my hope that the Eighty-first Congress amends the law to provide a genuine modern parity formula reflecting present economic conditions.

B. Curbing monopoly: Returning to the question of price-cost relationship, it is obvious that a permanent solution to the problem requires some vigorous action in the field of monopoly. Today farmers are handicapped by having to sell their products in a highly competitive market, while doing most of their buying in a market dominated by the great monopoly combinations. This is the reason that in time of recession farm prices fall immediately, while industrial prices remain rigid. The monopolistic farm implement, automobile and tractor industries are able to maintain prices on a high level by curtailing production and firing the workers who are the farmers' customers. Thus the farmer has in the past, along with the wage earners, borne the brunt of business depression. Legislation to tighten up our antitrust laws and more funds for trust-busting purposes would therefore benefit the farmer by restricting monopoly pricing by industry.

C. Encouraging cooperative farm marketing and purchasing associations: Experience has proven that American farmers can obtain better prices for their products through the medium of farmer-controlled marketing cooperatives. These cooperative organizations help the farmer find better markets for his products at more satisfactory prices, and eliminate the heavy middleman profits of the grain and dairy trusts. Likewise, the farmer can purchase farm machinery and other equipment through cooperative purchasing associations to great advantage. In my opinion, the Federal Government should continue to encourage farmer cooperatives in every possible way, including the provision of adequate loan authorizations.

D. Controlling speculative trading: During recent years, speculators in grain and other farm commodities have manipulated prices of farm products by heavy speculative transactions on the exchanges. These speculators are social parasites who contribute nothing to production, and merely profit at the expense of farm prosperity and human misery. It seems to me that it is time that Congress should examine very carefully the function of the commodity exchange and should enact legislation to provide greater control over speculative trading in farm commodities and the artificial manipulation of farm prices.

E. Establishing a floor under food consumption: A second approach to the task of stabilizing farm prices would be to work from the point of view of increasing consumption of food. In the past agricultural economists have talked of overproduction in agriculture, and have proposed that production be curtailed in the same way that manufacturing industries restrict production and lay off workers in time of depression. Actually, this idea of agricultural overproduction is a myth—there has never been overproduction of either food or consumers goods in our economy. What has been called overproduction is now realized to be "under consumption," caused by lack of purchasing power in the hands of those whose wants have gone unsatisfied.

The obvious answer to this question of overproduction of food is to increase the consumption of farm products. I have been happy to discover that the United States Department of Agriculture has begun to think along these lines, and has been devoting some time and effort to work out a legislative plan to establish an ever normal diet to place a floor under national food consumption. According to press reports the plan would operate in the following manner: First, the Department of Agriculture would determine the quantity and cost of an adequate and nourishing diet for the average family. Second, the Department would specify what proportion of the personal or family income should be spent for food. Then a permanent system of food stamps would be established, and those persons whose incomes fell below the amount necessary to buy the normal diet could apply for free food stamps from the Government to supplement their income. These food stamps would be accepted by the stores as money, and would be redeemed from local banks by the Government.

By establishing a floor under food consumption in this manner, the farmer would have a steady market for all his products here in this country, and consumer demands would remain constant. This plan would make it possible to set definite agricultural production goals, which would be subject only to the uncertainties of the weather, and would supplement the AAA program for price maintenance. It would eliminate once and for all the uneconomic practice of destroying or dumping farm surpluses which has been the subject of much deserved criticism. It would pay off in terms of higher living standards and better health for the whole population.

Second. Maintenance of soil fertility: Soil conservation is a major problem and necessity for our country—a nation that has lost its top soil has lost the basis of its economy. During recent years our farmers have been menaced by a serious increase in soil erosion which is destroying the fertility of our land. According to Government figures, soil erosion has already ruined 50,000,000 acres of farm land in the United States, and has badly damaged another 50,000,000 acres. Today the scientists of the Department of Agriculture are predicting a new dust bowl in the marginal wheat lands of the Southwest which will, unless prevented, ruin additional millions of acres of land.

Soil erosion is largely the result of overplanting, single-cropping, use of marginal land, and the failure to use scientific methods of plowing and terracing. Methods have been devised for controlling erosion, but it is difficult to accomplish much through individual action. The bad practices of a neighbor may destroy a farmer's soil in spite of his own practices. Therefore, it is the responsibility of Government to take the lead in the fight against erosion and for maintaining soil fertility.

It is to the credit of the Roosevelt administration that it recognized the need for a soil-conservation program and acted to establish such a program. Farm researchers in the Department of Agriculture have developed the scientific techniques to impede erosion, such as crop rotation, contour plowing, damming and terracing, spring development, trashy fallow, and the planting of cover crops, alfalfa, and clover. The Soil Conservation Act of 1936 was adopted, which provides Federal benefits to farmers who cooperate in crop rotation, applying of fertilizer, and other conservation practices. As a result, tremendous advances have been made in the preservation of the Nation's most important natural resource—the soil.

Under enabling legislation, soil-conservation districts have been established in many areas under the administration of the farmers themselves, and demonstration farms have been set up with the aid and advice of technicians from the Soil Conservation Service.

However, there is still a need to expand the soil-conservation program. In my opinion, legislation should be passed along the following lines: First, the educational services of the Soil Conservation Service should be broadened, and Congress should accept the responsibilities of financing a more comprehensive program by providing more adequate appropriations for agricultural research and soil conservation; second, certain phases of conservation should be made compulsory such as the elimination of overcropping of marginal lands, since the abuses of absentee owners and the refusal of a few farmers to cooperate can impede the program and conceivably create a new dust bowl; third, a broad Federal program of flood control which avoids the mistakes of the so-called "Pick" plan and is designed instead on a regional basis should be set up immediately. Under such a regional plan as is envisaged in the Missouri Valley Authority the 1947 floods throughout the Midwest which destroyed over a billion dollars of property could have been avoided. A Columbia Valley Authority might have prevented much of the damage this year in Oregon and Washington and could certainly have dealt with the situation on a regional basis.

Third. The need for farm credit: The problem of obtaining credit at reasonable interest rates has always been an important one to the farmer. Short-term credit to purchase seed, fertilizer, farm machinery, and so forth, has been difficult to obtain from commercial banks and farmers in the past have been charged exorbitant rates of interest. This problem is especially pressing for low-income farmers and tenants. Long-term credit facilities are needed by the farmer, especially during depression periods, to provide debt relief and the refinancing of farm mortgages.

The farm-credit policies of the Roosevelt administration represented an intelligent approach to the whole farm credit problem. The Farm Credit Administration of 1933 which provided low-interest production and marketing credit to farmers through local credit associations was invaluable. The Farm Security Administration, set up in 1937, was one of the most valuable New Deal agencies to the low-income farmer. In addition to providing short-term marketing and production credit, it assisted tenants to buy farms, gave extensive guidance to sharecroppers and low-income farmers in scientific farming, set up cooperatives for purchase of machinery, and developed a broad social welfare program for farmers. In another field, it set up clean and well-run camps for the migratory agricultural workers in the industrialized farm areas. The Farm Security Administration was the first of the New Deal farm programs to fall under the economy ax.

During the depths of the depression, the Roosevelt Administration also bailed out the farmer and the banks by entering the farm mortgage field. The Federal Land Banks and associated Farm Loan Cooperative Associations were empowered to grant long-term loans to refinance existing mortgages, thus reducing interest rates from the excessively high predepression levels.

The credit policies of the New Deal farm program are in most cases commendable and have proved their worth, and I favor the extension of these facilities by additional loan authorizations. I also believe, in view of reduced interest rates on all classes of credit, that the Government should explore the possibility of refinancing at lower rates of interest existing mortgage indebtedness of farmers. Furthermore, the maximum possible control over all credit systems should be placed in the hands of the farmers themselves, and an independent bipartisan board should be established to administer all the cooperative credit agencies.

Fourth. Farm tenancy and home ownership: One of the dreams of every farmer is to own his own farm, and it is proper for Government to encourage the development of the individual-owned and operated farm unit. Farm ownership makes for greater independence of the individual, and better farming in our economy—the man who owns his own farm will take more pride in his work and better care of his property.

In spite of this universal desire for farm ownership, farm tenancy has been increasing in this country since 1880. At that time nearly 75 percent of the Nation's farmers owned their farms, but in 1935 only 58 percent were owners, with many of these farms heavily mortgaged. Due to depression and heavy debt, more and more farms have passed into the hands of bankers and the great life insurance companies as a result of foreclosures.

The Roosevelt administration made efforts to halt this rising tide of farm tenancy, climaxed by the passage of the Farm Security Administration Act of 1937. This act provided for the first time a Federal program to aid worthy tenant farmers to purchase their own farms.

The farm-tenant purchase program did not go out of existence when the Farm Security Administration was killed, but the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress has made every effort to destroy it. During the first session funds for tenant farm purchases were reduced from $35,000,000 to $15,000,000, and this cut was upheld during the second session although some additional funds were made available for the following fiscal year. I strongly favor the expansion of the farm-tenant purchase program, and hope that the Eighty-first Congress will appropriate adequate funds to make it effective.

Fifth. Farm security and rural welfare: The depression of 1929 focused national attention to the fact that the farm industry includes several million persons who live under conditions of poverty and far below the health and decency level. These less fortunate people are the sharecroppers of the South, migratory farm laborers, part-time farmers and tillers of submarginal land. According to Government reports, there were approximately 1,700,000 farm families, representing 8,000,000 persons, who were existing in 1935 on an annual family income of less than $500 per year. This means that about one-third of the farm families of the Nation were then living on a standard so low as to make them slum families. I might add that there were 2,500,000 rural families dependent upon some form of relief during that same year. Today, this condition of rural poverty is not so prevalent due to unusual farm prosperity, but all reports indicate that millions still live under substandard conditions and that rural poverty is certain to increase with another economic recession.

It is important, therefore, that the Government formulate a program to meet the problems of the underprivileged farmer—the forgotten one-third of our farm population. As has been pointed out, the Federal Government made a good start toward rural betterment when the Farm Security Administration was established in 1937. In addition to providing production and credit and farm purchase loans to tenant farmers, this agency carried out a broad welfare program. It gave guidance to sharecroppers and submarginal farmers in improved farm methods, established medical care cooperatives, conducted home management courses for the housewife, established labor camps for migrant farm labor, and generally interested itself in the welfare of the low-income farmer.

It was unfortunate that the Farm Security Administration became the target of so much ill-considered abuse and was thus destined to die under the economy ax. In my opinion, this agency should be reestablished and adequate funds provided for it to develop a broad program of rural betterment. In connection with such a program I favor:

First. Extension of the REA program to provide electricity to every farm family in the Nation. Today some 52 percent of farm homes have electricity, and our goal should be 100 percent.

Second. A broad educational program for low-income farmers to improve methods and introduce scientific farm practices.

Third. A Federal resettlement program to furnish good land to farm families now tilling submarginal acreages.

Fourth. Health insurance and improved hospital facilities for rural families and cooperative rural health and sanitation programs.

Fifth. Extension of old age and retirement benefits of the Social Security Act to farmers and farm laborers.

Sixth. Improvement of leasing arrangements between tenants and landowners.

Seventh. Enactment of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing bill, which includes funds for the construction of several million new farm homes and provisions for elimination of substandard rural housing.

FULL EMPLOYMENT AND AN ECONOMY OF ABUNDANCE

The legislative program which I have outlined relates directly to the farmer and his problems. However, it is well to remember that the prosperity of the farmer is directly linked to the prosperity of the rest of the population. It is true that some of my Republican friends try to tell us that the interests of the farmer and the worker are contradictory—that they belong to two antagonistic groups. But this argument is fallacious.

Such fallacious and vicious arguments are used to divide the farmer and the wage-earner—groups which should unite and cooperate in achieving common political and economic goals advantageous to both. It has been shown that there is a direct correlation between farm income and industrial wages. High farm income means more jobs for the workers and therefore higher wages, and high wages mean more customers for the farmer and therefore higher farm income. When wages fall, farm income falls also.

The following demonstrates this relationship between farm income and the wages of workers in industry. In 1929 factory pay rolls totaled $11,000,000,000, and at this same time total farm income also equalled $11,000,000,000. But when factory pay rolls dropped to $5,000,000,000 in 1932, farm income followed suit by falling to $5,000,000,000. To carry this parallel still further, when factory pay-rolls rose to $10,000,000,000 in 1937, farm income rose to $9,000,000,000. In 1945 farm income was up to $24,500,000,000, and total factory pay rolls were over $20,000,000,000. Today, both farm income and factory pay rolls are well above the $20,000,000,000-mark.

Thus we see that the prosperity of the worker and the farmer are interdependent. Likewise, the prosperity of the small businessman is dependent on that of the worker and farmer. Only when workers receive high wages can they buy the products of the farm and factory. Only when the farmer is prosperous is he able to purchase the products of industry. There can be no conflict of interest between the farmer, the worker and the small businessman—they depend on each other for prosperity. The only real conflict of economic interest is the antagonism between the people and the monopoly interests and Wall Street bankers. The monopolists exploit the farmer by charging exorbitant prices for farm machinery, the food trust depresses prices paid to the farmer for his produce, and the railroads highjack him by raising freight rates. The monopolist and his chain-store confederates create unfair competition for the small-business man, and try to place the blame on farmer cooperatives. The National Association of Manufacturers presses for vicious antilabor legislation, and seeks to destroy the wage gains made by organized labor. Thus the farmer, worker, and small-business men are of necessity natural allies against the monopoly enemy and their economic aspirations and hopes for security are bound together.

Although the farmer requires special farm legislation to meet his particular problems, he is also interested in the same things that the wage earner and the small businessmen desire. He has a vital stake in the formulation of a broad program of full employment and full prosperity for America. His welfare is directly dependent on national prosperity. He is therefore interested in any and all legislation that benefits the majority of the population. He is interested in the extension of social security, more adequate old-age pensions, housing and health legislation, the encouragement of small business, the St. Lawrence seaway and the Missouri Valley Authority. He has a long tradition of opposition to the eastern banking interests who control railroad rates and to the monopolists who produce farm machinery and control the commodity exchanges, and has long supported antitrust legislation. In short the farmer benefits from and will support all legislation to promote the good life in America and to lead toward the establishment of lasting peace throughout the world.

Statements and Letters in Reference to S. 1652

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. STYLES BRIDGES
OF NEW HAMPSHIRE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask consent to insert in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD certain statements and letters with reference to S. 1652, a bill introduced by myself and several colleagues and which is designed to aid in stabilizing the economy in America and friendly nations in the world.

There being no objection, the statements and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At this point I want to introduce in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter that I received from a great American and public servant, a man whom all veterans and fellow citizens honor, James F. O'Neil, the present commander of the American Legion. Jimmie O'Neil introduced a resolution at the New Hampshire Department of the Legion last year endorsing our bill. The resolution was passed unanimously, and it made New Hampshire one of the first departments of the Legion and of other veterans' organizations in the United States to endorse it:

The Honorable STYLES BRIDGES,
Chairman, Appropriations Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRIDGES: I wish to compliment you on your statesmanship, especially your economic statesmanship in formulating an "American doctrine" to build mutual prosperity between our communities in America and the communities in friendly countries that are trying to hold the line against communism. I should like to see this new peace plan of yours called the "Bridges Doctrine for Expanding Prosperity and Peace." I believe it is possible that your doctrine may go far to assure prosperity and peace for the United States and for the United Nations by integrating the economy of other countries with ours.

By utilizing the manpower and the skills of the veterans, you put your finger on what I believe is the spearhead to prosperity and Americanism against depression and communism. In their stand on Americanism, 20,000,000 living American veterans can't be wrong. From what I know of veterans, I can say that we have one more good fight left in us, and this is it. As you gentlemen in Congress have challenged us, I believe we can meet the challenge in peace with as much vigor and determination as we have met the challenge in war.

With pardonable pride in our own State, I also like your New Hampshire plan. In our compact State we can assure an ever expanding economy through expansion of small industry and modernization of agriculture, and through the large world port of Boston, adjacent to us, we have an ideal State to serve as a pilot operation and economic pattern for the other 47 States and friendly nations.

I believe I can speak for many of the Legionaires in our State, and I am confident that with the Legion program for community economic development, the Legion posts of our State will cooperate with civic pride to participate in your plan for economic development. Furthermore, as all veterans alike have served their neighbors and our Nation, I am confident that the Legionaires in our State will invite the cooperation of the members of other veterans' organizations to meet this new challenge to champion Americanism against communism through your economic-development plan.

The Army and the Navy were charged with being prepared to defend Pearl Harbor but obviously their lack of coordination paid its toll. I, for one, wish to prevent a Pearl Harbor in veterans' affairs. To that end I am confident that the Legion will cooperate with other veterans' organizations in our communities and in our States to help unify our people for the best interest of all.

I am impressed by the number of Legionnaires in the Congress who are cosponsoring with you your veterans RFC bill, which appears to be a good basis to afford veterans economic opportunities and housing and to complete an over-all veterans' program for the benefit of the veterans and of the Nation.

With my best wishes for your success in your plan to fight communism with prosperity, I am,

Sincerely,

JAMES F. O'NEIL.

Last year, in Cleveland, at the national encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, I was invited to speak on our Veterans Economic Development Corporation Act, which had already been endorsed by that outstanding organization. At that encampment, the delegates elected their present commander in chief, a famous soldier, a scholar, and a great leader of men—Ray H. Brannaman. I take great pleasure in introducing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from him which I highly prize:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1948.

Hon. STYLES BRIDGES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRIDGES: We wish to thank you and compliment you for having introduced in your behalf and that of 30 other Senators, S. 1652, the Veterans Economic Development Corporation Act. In our opinion, this bill will provide strong support for your plan to win the peace at home and abroad.

We are also gratified to learn that you have prepared a New Hampshire plan of projects which can be implemented under the provisions of S. 1652. Such State plans will aid the people of many communities, including veterans, by bringing new industries to the communities, expanding present businesses, modernizing agriculture, and by creating new industrial uses for agricultural products and other raw materials.

Representatives of friendly nations are interested in developing programs similar to your New Hampshire plan to enable their people to prosper and to hold the line against communism and war. It is not an overstatement to say that if applied here at home and abroad, such a plan would help win a bloodless victory.

Your championship in Congress of small business in the United States and the establishment of veterans in businesses and profitable careers has our strong support. The bill that you are sponsoring in the Senate, S. 1652, entitled "The Veterans Economic Development Corporation Act," will enable millions of veterans to catch up with the economic parade at home and abroad. This bill will interest the taxpayers particularly as no appropriation of taxpayers' money is contemplated. In addition, it is estimated that it will reduce taxes as it will save our taxpayers a billion dollars a year in the present cost of government.

The bipartisan support of this bill and its early passage is indicated by the companion bills introduced in the House by Representative ESTES KEFAUVER, of Tennessee, a champion of small business; Representative EDITH ROGERS, of Massachusetts, chairman of the important Veterans' Committee; Representative JESSE WOLCOTT, of Michigan, an authority on finance and chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee; the past chairman, Congressman SPENCE, of Kentucky; by Congressmen KEARNEY, of New York, and VAN ZANDT, of Pennsylvania, both former commanders in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The unusual support of this bill in the Senate is shown in the cosponsorship of S. 1652 by Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky; Senator BUTLER, of Nebraska, chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; Senator REVERCOMB, of West Virginia, chairman of the Senate Public Works Committee, and 30 other distinguished Senators besides yourself.

As the veterans' economic development corporation bill is not limited to veterans, your New Hampshire plan will help to implement this program in an orderly manner, marking a new milestone in the illustrious history of New Hampshire and of the Nation.

Sincerely,

RAY H. BRANNAMAN,
Commander in Chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
DEPARTMENT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
Concord, N. H.

The Honorable STYLES BRIDGES,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRIDGES: On behalf of the members of the Department of New Hampshire, Veterans of Foreign Wars, I want to thank you for preparing for action in the next Congress, the bipartisan bill entitled "The Veterans Economic Development Corporation Act," now popularly known as the little man's RFC, which was sponsored by you and 20 other distinguished Senators. The bill, termed by veterans organizations as one of the most important pieces of veterans' legislation ever to be introduced, will immediately help us to break the bottlenecks in housing, prepare stream-pollution programs, make our State the ideal playground of the Nation, assist in developing our small industries, modernize agriculture, and promote domestic and foreign trade. Your bill will enable veterans, as well as others, to prosper and become more secure by helping to further develop the economy of New Hampshire, New England, and of the Nation as a whole.

While our veterans were away from home in the war years, most of them dreamed of the day they could assume their rightful place in the community, the State, and the Nation. We feel that it is not only our privilege but is now our duty to help win the peace as we helped to win our wars. As the result of the stimulation that we have received by your introduction and promotion of the veterans RFC bill, as a means of implementing your New Hampshire plan, we feel that with the cooperation you have given us in the Congress, together with the development work in the communities under the New Hampshire plan, we can realize many of the objectives sought by forward thinking citizens of our State.

I feel the development of the New Hampshire plan, under your bill, is a partnership and you can certainly count upon our support in this plan which will benefit all the people throughout our great State of New Hampshire.

Incidentally, I am grateful to you for the representation in Washington that you have afforded our veterans in New Hampshire in their individual and collective problems and I appreciate your continued support.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND H. CHASE,
Department Commander.

When our "Little Man's RFC" bill was introduced concurrently in the Senate and the House, one of our cosponsors who is a national authority on finance, Chairman JESSE P. WOLCOTT of the important House Banking and Currency Committee, wrote an illuminating opinion on our bill. I quote excerpts from Chairman WOLCOTT's interesting statements, as follows:

"MEMORANDUM

"To: Senator STYLES BRIDGES, Chairman, Senate Committee on Appropriations.

"From: Representative JESSE P. WOLCOTT.

"Subject: The proposed act to establish 'The Veterans' Economic Development Corporation' to enable our veterans to recoup their economic losses, without increasing the cost of government.

"At home and abroad the Veterans Corporation, popularly called The Little Man's RFC, would create economic opportunities for veterans and others through broad lending powers along the lines of the present RFC. But in addition, the Veterans Corporation would afford skilled technical advisory service to self-liquidating projects that will employ veterans and to qualified veterans themselves. It would be a move toward matching veterans' skills against the unused production capacities of the Nation and our untapped abundant national resources to meet the phenomenal demand for American goods and services throughout the world.

"Although the proposed Veterans Corporation is charged specifically with solving veterans' short-range and long-range economic problems, at the same time it is designed to produce an economic profit to the Nation. It is estimated that it will reduce the cost of veterans' affairs by $1,000,000,000 per year by creating gainful employment; also, it may make it possible to save taxpayers other billions of dollars in direct expense. The Veterans Corporation is so designed that it should operate without cost to the taxpayers, as the spread between the rate of interest the Treasury pays the public for the bonds, and the interest rates charged on loans made by the Veterans Corporation will more than cover administration, losses from loans, and operating costs. The present RFC reports that, under similar conditions, it has returned more than $500,000,000 profit to the Treasury. It is estimated that with the wider distribution of loans made by the Veterans Corporation and with its skilled technical advisory and research services to protect the Government against loss, the Veterans Corporation should return a still greater profit to the Treasury than the present RFC.

"For the first time in American history, we have a specific foreign policy. Consequently, it is possible for the State Department, with the help of the Senate, to put teeth in our new foreign policy. We believe that the Veterans' Corporation provides the most immediate approach to this objective and in support of what Senator VANDENBERG, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says, this approach will help peace-living countries rather than peace-loving countries to bring lasting peace to the world. At a time when we no longer have a powerful army to reinforce our foreign policy, it is significant that 20,000,000 living American veterans, who with their families represent 60 percent of the people of the United States, constitute a potential new moral and economic force in the world. More than 13,000,000 of these living veterans are veterans of foreign wars. Our veterans were selected from the cream of 140,000,000 people for their physical, mental, and educational superiority and are now the finest essence of our people. Many of them are experienced and capable and, if properly utilized, are a source of a new domestic economic power. They are also a source of vast new power to reinforce our foreign relations, as many experienced veterans are eager to go as business and technical missionaries to countries that we have helped to liberate, including Korea, China, India, the Philippines, Iraq, Iran, Arabia, Italy, France, Turkey, and Greece. Our veterans are, potentially, the greatest army of good-will missionaries in all human history. Under the provisions of this legislation our veterans could help to tip the scales now between war and peace.

"The passage of this act is immediately necessary and urgent as no other Government or private agency can perform the functions to meet the emergency.

"The Veterans' Corporation would strengthen the hand of the Congress for several reasons:

"(a) It appeals to the taxpayers as it will save an estimated $1,000,000,000 per year in veterans' unemployment compensation and obviate the abuses of the 52-20 club.

"(b) Banking approves of the Veterans Corporation because, like the present RFC, it will make only loans that do not compete with private banks. It will help to balance the Federal budget. The American Bankers Association in their Journal of January 15 said: 'During a term of office in which economy and tax reduction will offer no new plums for veterans, the proposed "Veterans' RFC" (sponsored by Chairman Wolcott of the House Banking and Currency Committee and several Senators) will provide something which Members of Congress can loudly endorse. The Veterans Corporation should cost the taxpayers nothing, as all projects and enterprises will be self-liquidating and will show a profit to the Nation. It will utilize all existing facilities of Government without duplication and simplify veterans' affairs.' (The veteran had nine agencies of Government to give him the run-around after World War I, and now after World War II has 29 agencies of Government to confuse him.)

"(c) A good cross-section of labor leaders—in fact, all we have contacted—favor this bill. They recognize that it means the halfway mark in permanent full employment because veterans would otherwise compose half the unemployed labor force during depressions. It would prevent the inevitable conflict between the veterans' organizations and organized labor by opening new opportunities for fuller employment where both will profit.

"(d) The veterans' organizations are supporting this bill because it will enable veterans to recoup their losses in economic opportunities in competition with those who remained at home and it will provide self-supporting careers for disabled veterans. For example, veterans' organizations are urging the enactment of this legislation as it will immediately help to break the bottlenecks in veterans' housing and provide careers for veterans. The veterans' organizations also like the features that will enable capable veterans to trade abroad, to return as technical and business experts to help modernize many of the very countries they helped to liberate such a short time ago. They believe, also, that the program provided by the Veterans Corporation will be a powerful factor in strengthening our ties with other countries in the United Nations, thus helping to prevent war.

"This legislation will also enable us to plan ahead for the 2,700,000 now in training. Domestically, the Veterans' Corporation should spread the base of our economy, which has already suffered by the alarming loss of many small industries and businesses which, heretofore, have given America its phenomenal economic strength. Unless we act quickly, there is the recognized danger that our economy will become top-heavy, as big business must feed largely on small business. We believe, furthermore, that this legislation will be insurance against a recession; in fact, the best insurance now in sight.

"A statement, prepared by the experts of the Department of Commerce over the signature of Undersecretary Alfred Schindler, to Senator WAYNE MORSE of Oregon, concerning the Veterans' Corporation said: 'It is a well recognized fundamental of business economics that expanded commercial activity creates employment, and your bill, designed to incorporate the existing reservoir of young veterans in such expansion, offers the most intriguing possibilities of any piece of current legislation which has come to my attention. America, in the years ahead, needs alert young men in business and the men released by the armed forces are the natural source of this necessary manpower potential. It seems to me that your bill strikes a new and intelligent chord. Government support in a business-expansion program of the type you visualize is simply common sense.'

"The Commerce Department tells us that we now have hundreds of thousands of captured enemy trade secrets, patents and secret processes, many of which are immediately commercially profitable and suited to this program. The Interior Department tells us that millions of acres of good land are ready to be opened. There is a vast new opportunity in the further mechanization of agriculture and in industrial uses of agricultural products that they themselves can manufacture—establishing a better balanced economy.

"General Bradley said to Col. Richmond Harris: 'We must have an agency such as this Veterans RFC, as the Veterans' Administration, with its two hundred hospitals and enormous load, has all that it can handle with hospitalization, pensions, claims and insurance. We cannot handle the creation of employment opportunities for veterans; yet we receive thousands of letters blaming us for veterans' being obliged to work at substandard wages or not finding a job at all.

"In sponsoring this bill, we propose to nominate for appointment to the Board of Directors and to the Advisory Council of the Veterans' Corporation (with the advice and consent of the Senate) outstanding leaders, such as Herbert Hoover, who can direct and counsel this important agency to serve its new high purpose for the Nation. The Board of Directors would establish standards for loans. Under it, a staff of the best technical experts would have two primary responsibilities: to enforce the standards, both before and after the establishment of the projects or enterprises; and, to provide technical service to the organizations or individuals to protect the Government against loss by protecting the organizations or individuals against failure.

"After other American wars, new frontiers were developed with the help of veterans. From the days of the Cumberland Road, which George Washington and other veterans helped to build and which speeded the development of our rich Midwest after the Revolutionary War, veterans have engineered and worked to stimulate our Nation's growth. Veterans helped to open the plains beyond St. Louis after the War of 1812. After the War Between the States, veterans helped to engineer and build our railroads to the west coast and to develop the valleys along the Pacific seaboard. The Federal Government helped develop the frontiers. Now vast new frontiers—the greatest frontiers in all American history—are ripe for development: the new technological frontier at home and the vast new frontier where we can help modernize other friendly countries, (quoting the bill) 'thereby cultivating those countries to become increasingly our friends and customers,' thus preventing war and strengthening the United Nations. There is also Alaska, the most strategic world area in this atomic age of over-the-pole flying. Our study of Veterans' Opportunities in the Development of Alaska, that was made by Colonel Harris at President Roosevelt's direction, reveals that the Veterans' Corporation now offers us a great opportunity to guide the rapid development of that vast rich Territory through veterans and others who are loyal to our form of government. This program will offer protection against communism to us in that strategic Territory.

"Secretary of Commerce Harriman states: 'Without expanding world trade, our own economy must shrink.' The program provided by the Veterans Corporation should make possible the peaceful, mutually profitable penetration of many foreign countries by American experts and capable veterans who are interested in setting up projects and business enterprises or developing natural resources. This will strengthen our foreign policy as it will demonstrate how on-the-scene democratic business can succeed in economic democracy. This would be particularly significant in those areas where our system of democracy must compete for survival with totalitarian and despotic systems. In this connection, it is important again to note that there should be little or no concern about the loyalties of the men selected and approved for such penetration. The War and Navy Departments already have their complete case histories, and our veterans have been screened as to their loyalties to our American form of government. Furthermore, this overseas-economic-development program would be accomplished without the drain on our Treasury that additional foreign loans would impose.

"The experts in the State Department are giving us their hearty cooperation in making plans for the modernization of certain countries where the Veterans Corporation legislation will meet the emergency, as it is acknowledged that this Veterans Corporation bill has prospects of earlier enactment than any other legislation for accomplishing those objectives of economic development on the ground level in other countries.

"This legislation will undoubtedly stimulate an ever-expanding economy in industry, agriculture, unused natural resources and overseas trade sufficient to assure full employment in the United States for the decades covered by the term of this legislation."

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE PLAN FOR VETERANS

Mr. President, increasing the prosperity and security of every individual in the communities of my State is a subject of my interest. To help each person—the veteran and the nonveteran—to benefit from the wealth of new economic opportunities that are waiting to be developed under our traditional private-enterprise system, the system that has made us the greatest Nation in all human history, I designed the New Hampshire plan. As many other States are now modeling their plans along the lines of our plan, and as they have asked my help and detailed information in doing this, I shall describe the New Hampshire plan at some length here today.

In addition to helping our people develop careers, businesses, and professions, the New Hampshire plan affords opportunity for teamwork among our small businessmen, our veterans, our farmers, our community fathers, and our legislators. The veterans tell me that they look upon our State plan as a means to help them assume a new leadership in the economic development of the community, the State, and the Nation.

To implement the New Hampshire plan and the other State plans, I introduced in the Senate last July on my behalf and on behalf of 20 other Senators, S. 1652, "The Veterans' Economic Development Corporation Act," which has become popularly known throughout the country as the "little man's RFC." Companion bills were introduced concurrently in the House of Representative by chairmen of important committees and other distinguished Representatives. This bill, described by veterans' organizations as one of the most important pieces of veterans' legislation ever to be introduced, has one of the most auspicious beginnings of any proposed legislation in recent years.

Since the time we introduced the bill in this Eightieth Congress for the consideration of the veterans' organizations, small business organizations and others concerned with opportunities for the little fellow in our communities, we have been gratified by the support and enthusiasm our bill has received. With the encouragement of important organizations and many notable individuals, we are now preparing a final draft of the bill for action in the next Congress.

When I introduced this bill, I said that our country was seeking procedures for a full and wise return to a peacetime economy. Today I want to add that we are also seeking cooperation with other peace-loving nations of the world to establish a sure way to lasting world peace. This bill was introduced and is now being developed in direct connection with that twofold task.

PROSPERITY AND PEACE OR COMMUNISM AND WAR

There is another objective in our sponsoring this "Little Man's RFC." The Russian strategy of world Communist imperialism and conquest is based upon the expectancy that the economy of the United States will fail under inevitable recessions or depressions. The Communists know that with another depression on our hands, the economy of the United States could not support a large army, the largest navy and the largest air force in the world. Nor could we continue to make gifts of billions of our dollars to other democratic countries now trying to hold the line against communism, as we are already at the bottom of the dollar barrel.

It is the opinion of those of us who sponsor this legislation that the surest way to stop communism in this country is to increase prosperity for all our people by spreading the base of our economy and, especially, to strengthen the economic position of the little business man, the farmer, the merchant, the professional person and particularly our veterans.

Moreover, in developing increased trade with other countries under the provisions of this bill, "thereby cultivating those countries to become increasingly our friends and customers," we have the best argument in favor of Americanism and economic democracy against Communist imperialism and war. As you know, when a Russian citizen does business in a foreign country, that means the objectives of the Russian Government and Communist imperialism are being injected into the internal affairs of that country. But under the provisions of our "Little Man's RFC," an American citizen who engages in an enterprise or trade in other countries will be there to bring profit to the people of that country through full commercial intercourse and not to promote imperialism and aggression.

George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and our other founding fathers were solid businessmen. The grass roots of our unique American economy have been given strength by such men. Today, more than ever, we need men of their caliber. I can think of no greater new source of ability, resourcefulness and new leadership than our veterans, who were selected as the finest specimens of American manhood and womanhood. Through this bill and the New Hampshire State plan, we hope to enable our veterans to take the leadership in making all our people more prosperous and in reducing the threat of communism and war.

Since the early days of the Republic, when the "Granite State" was the first of the Thirteen Original States to establish a government wholly independent of Great Britain, our people have demonstrated leadership and resourcefulness at home and abroad. Once again history has repeated itself, and the eyes of the country are upon the progressive action that we have initiated in devising the New Hampshire plan. Through their traditional initiative and resourcefulness, our new body of veterans and our people are now destined for still greater progress as they lead the way toward the enrichment of all our people.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE PLAN (A SCHEMATIC OUTLINE)

This State plan is designed to develop, under the provisions of the "little man's RFC," the resources of the State to promote the prosperity, welfare, and health of all its people. Career opportunities for veterans as well as continued full employment for others would be fostered through the development of needed new businesses, the modernized productivity of agriculture, the utilization of unused natural resources, and the implementation of needed self-liquidating public projects.

The "little man's RFC," with authority to extend credit totaling $5,000,000,000, will direct its loans toward supplementing the loans of banks and other existing private lending agencies, and the capital needed will derive from existing public money. No appropriations from Congress will be necessary, as only profitable self-liquidating projects will be considered.

Planning activities would be on a State, county, regional, or community level. The State planning board, with the assistance of a know-how committee composed of technical experts, would plan for the physical development of the State, cooperating with other State agencies in the preparation of programs. It would also assist regional and county committees (which would plan for county and regional projects) and community planning boards, giving technical advice and assisting in the coordination of State, county, and community plans. It would further extend technical assistance to individuals, new businesses, and projects.

Since the veterans' economic development program is essentially a grass-roots program—designed to serve small business and industry and agriculture in the community—emphasis on planning would be on a community level. Thus, while the State planning board and know-how committee would engage in planning on a State-wide basis, their primary function would be to serve the interests of the communities and to bring to bear the cooperation of the Federal Government on local projects whenever advisable and necessary.

Because of this emphasis on local planning, the following outline on State and community planning will list specific opportunities for development and expansion under the section on community planning.

Foreign aid

Ambassadors, ministers, and technical experts of friendly nations seeking our help under the Economic Cooperation Administration and other forms of aid have shown great interest in applying this State plan to their own countries. In their opinion, the plan will speed modernization of their economy and enable the people in their communities to become increasingly self-sufficient. This economic development plan will increase two-way trade between the people in the communities of the United States and of other countries for the increasing profit and security of all the people.

It is the belief of American authorities that the application of this plan in the communities of friendly countries will help provide a firmer foundation upon which our financial aid at Government level to these countries will rest. Further, the State plan may be put into effect abroad without cost to the American taxpayers, as no appropriations of public money are required.

Community planning

1. Local planning board established, representing industry, finance, business, labor, sciences, the professions, veterans, religious groups, agriculture.

2. Planning board sets up a know-how committee.

3. Planning board outlines program of activity, receiving assistance in organizing and formulating programs from State planning commission or State know-how committee.

(a) Inventory to determine present and future economic needs, including preparation of town and agricultural maps on the following:

(1) Population distribution and trends.
(2) Property tax surveys.
(3) Land use.
(4) Zoning ordinances.
(5) Traffic studies.
(6) Recreational facility requirements.
(7) Health and welfare survey.
(8) Community center redevelopments.
(9) Highway maintenance.
(10) Fire protection.
(11) Water supply.
(12) Housing.
(13) School system.
(14) Farming, acreages, crop production, livestock.
(15) Utility services.
(16) Transportation service—airport, etc.

(b) Uses facilities of Federal, State, and regional agencies for fact-finding and making projective studies.

4. Opportunities for development and expansion.

(a) Local industries.

(1) Needed expansion of existing industries.

(2) Needed new industries: (a) Research for new products; (b) use of captured enemy patents and new processes; (c) use of natural resources; (d) new industrial uses for agricultural products.

(2) Housing to accommodate veteran students.

(3) Community recreation centers.
(4) Vocational and social guidance.

(5) Rural school program, consolidation and transportation.

State and regional planning

1. State planning board established, representing industry, finance, business, labor, sciences, the professions, veterans, religious groups:

(a) Supplements and implements work of existing State planning agencies.

(b) Cooperates with and serves community planning boards.

2. Planning board sets up a State know-how committee composed of technical experts in various fields.

(a) Know-how committee gives technical advice to planning board, to community know-how committees, to county or regional committees, to individuals, to new businesses and projects.

3. Planning board outlines program of activity, receiving assistance in organizing and formulating programs from State know-how committee or State planning commission.

(a) Takes inventory to determine present and future economic needs of State and geographical area, preparing State, regional, and county maps and statistical studies.

(1) Uses facilities of Federal, State, and regional departments and agencies for fact-finding and making projective studies.

4. Planning board relates county, community and intrastate regional plans to one another, thereby eliminating overlapping, confusion and unprofitable enterprises and projects.

5. Planning board cooperates with other States on regional projects in same geographic area, such as power developments, land conservation, etc.

(Specific opportunities for development and expansion outlined in detail in section on community planning.)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELLSWORTH B. FOOTE
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of being a Member of Congress is that one comes in contact with great men. Such a man is E. WALLACE CHADWICK, who has represented the Seventh District of the great State of Pennsylvania during the present Congress, and who I regret to learn will not return to the Eighty-first Congress.

It was my privilege to serve with him on the Judiciary Committee. He is a man learned in the law. His observations concerning matters before the committee demonstrated that he had a keen, analytical mind and was possessed of rare judgment. He always had the interest of his country uppermost in his thoughts and was not swayed by political considerations when dealing with the vital issues of the day. He is the personification of conscientiousness.

The country needs men of his caliber serving in the Congress in these crucial days.

Truth Is the Best Weapon Against False Propaganda

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 18 (legislative day of Thursday, June 17), 1948

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, when a Member of Congress is attacked by the printed or spoken word without the same avenues of reply Congress has wisely provided for use of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the United States mails for an opportunity to refute and clarify false words and wild charges made.

It has been well said that truth and facts as officially recorded are the best weapon for false charges and statements concerning the voting records of Members of Congress by irresponsible and reckless persons who have no regard for truth and honesty.

Because of false statements made by a certain well-known Hallock, Minn., publisher, Clifford Bouvette, in his weekly newspaper, the Kittson County Enterprise, my farmer friends in that area have insisted that I prepare an article giving the true facts of my voting record on REA appropriations and circulate it in Kittson, and perhaps also nearby counties. I have acceded to their wishes.

Editorials of a false nature concerning my voting record in Congress also have been prepared and printed in the Lake Bronson (Minn.) Budget by its editor and publisher, Victor L. Johnson.

I have sent communications ot both editors asking for space in their newspapers to correct the false information given to their subscribers relative to my voting record. No reply has been received from Clifford Bouvette in response to my telegram of June 16, nor was any response received from Victor L. Johnson in reply to my air mail letter of June 17. Therefore it is necessary to publish my record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and make copies of my remarks available to the subscribers of these two publications and other citizens of Kittson County and nearby counties, so they can know the truth as to the position taken by their public servant, which in this case, happens to be myself, Representative HAROLD C. HAGEN of the Ninth District of Minnesota.

The copy of my telegram to Mr. Bouvette follows:

My attention just called to your issue of February 18, 1948 and subsequent remarks that I have voted against REA and AAA appropriations. Your statements are grossly in error and you falsify the true record as I have never voted against REA or AAA appropriations during my terms in Congress. I ask that you give me space in your next week's issue to answer your false statements and present the factual true record of my votes relative to REA and AAA legislation. Kindly air mail your reply.

The copy of my air mail letters to Mr. Johnson follows:

My attention has just been called to your issue of May 27 in which you state that "HAGEN is on record as against the triple A and REA." Your statements are grossly in error and you falsify the true record as I have never voted against REA or AAA appropriations or programs during my term in Congress. I ask that you give me space in your next week's issue to answer your false statements and present the factual true record of my votes relative to REA and AAA legislation. Kindly air mail your reply.

At a later date, I wrote to Mr. Bouvette as follows:

CROOKSTON, MINN.

Mr. C. W. BOUVETTE,
Publisher, Kittson County Enterprise, Hallock, Minn.

DEAR MR. BOUVETTE: In the Enterprise for February 18, 1948, published by you, on page 1, column 1, is this statement evidently written by you personally:

"It may interest county farmers to know that Congressman HAGEN voted against REA appropriations."

On page 6 of the same issue of your paper are these statements:

"Congressman HAGEN voted against the measure REA when last considered by Congress and now of course his promise to vote for it is hard to swallow.

"When Congress last considered this bill, it was included in President Truman's budget to Congress and provided for the entire and customary appropriation. It was men like Congressman HAGEN and others, who voted against our farmers denying the President's request for REA funds and so seriously cutting them down that thousands of miles of REA lines, the Nation over, could not be built."

You then correctly explain that REA funds are a loan and not a gift. Then you add:

"Why should a Congressman vote against a thing like that on the one hand, and then contend that he is honestly representing the farmers? HAGEN also voted against the triple A appropriation."

For the present I shall pass over the false charge on triple A, and will merely advise that the official records show that I voted for AAA funds and increased AAA funds in every instance.

Furthermore, in your issue of June 4, as part of an editorial, you made another false statement, as follows: "Likewise, Congressman HAGEN * * * voted in opposition to the farmers rural electric bill." I presume you mean the REA program.

As to the false, defamatory and libelous statements regarding my votes on REA, my friends have strongly suggested that I make legal demand under the laws of the State of Minnesota and any Federal laws that may be pertinent that you immediately retract and correct said false, libelous and defamatory statements in your next issue, printing same with the same prominence and headline that you used in the original libelous story. This demand I could make under the provisions of law.

It seems inconceivable that you committed this libel innocently. Even a casual inquiry of any official records would have shown you that your statements about me were false.

However, it is more important to me to bring the true facts to the people of Kittson County rather than to gain any monetary compensation because of proven libel.

Therefore I bring to your attention the true and accurate official facts concerning my voting record relative to REA.

So you see, Mr. Bouvette, that every vote I have cast since entering Congress in 1943 has been for more money for REA, for all AAA programs, and for every progressive farm measure.

I request that you publish this letter and the attached pertinent facts concerning my voting record in the next or an early issue of your publication. This you assured me you would do when I saw you personally at the Kittson County Fairgrounds on the afternoon of Thursday, July 1.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
United States Representative in Congress, Ninth District of Minnesota.

To further complete the report relative to my REA voting record, I herewith insert an article which I have recently prepared as a speech and later revised for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It follows:

EVERY FARM HOME IS ENTITLED TO LOW-COST ELECTRICITY

Mr. Speaker, since I first came to Congress in 1943, it has been my pleasure to know that the lights have been turned on in more than 11,000 farm homes in my congressional district as a result of appropriations to the Rural Electrification Administration, for which I consistently voted.

The 15 counties of my congressional district have had the lion's share of these funds allocated to Minnesota. For instance, in the fiscal year ending July 1, 1948, Minnesota's share of the $225,000,000 in loan funds Congress made available to REA for the period amounted to $14,100,000. My district, one of nine in Minnesota, got over one-fourth of Minnesota's total allocation of $3,561,000. These recent funds, for which I voted and which I helped local REA cooperatives to secure, after the funds had been provided by Congress, will build 5,092 additional miles of lines, serving 4,640 additional consumers in my district this year and next.

From the time I entered Congress in January 1943, up to the end of the session of Congress in 1948, I had supported REA legislation and funds which had allocated to my district many thousands of miles of REA lines to service many more thousands of farm families. The appropriations for the Ninth Minnesota Congressional District, for this purpose during the past 6 years I have served in Congress have totaled many millions of dollars. This has helped increase the standard of living of my constituents.

I stated then, and repeat it now, that I was not satisfied to stop at that point. There are still many farm homes and small businesses in small inland communities without electric power. I will continue to fight, as long as I am a Member of Congress, for the further extension of REA. The program as presently set up provides a strong framework upon which we must build even greater rural prosperity.

But there is still much more to be done in order that Minnesota's Ninth District may have electricity and be able to produce more farm products with less manpower and at less cost.

That I am prepared, able, and willing to lead this campaign and effort in Congress for additional REA funds can be shown best by reprinting herewith the words of a newspaperman of my district. H. Z. Mitchell of Bemidji. He wrote an editorial for his newspaper, the Daily Pioneer, which in part was as follows:

In every case, Congressman HAROLD C. HAGEN has vigorously supported REA, since he first became Congressman on January 6, 1943.

Mr. HAGEN'S first membership was in the Seventy-eighth Congress which sat from January 6, 1943, to December 19, 1944. The only recorded REA vote was reported on June 23, 1943, on page 6361 of volume 89 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This was on H. R. 2481 appropriating money for the Department of Agriculture for 1944. The roll call was on a motion to raise the appropriation for REA during that war year from twenty million to thirty million, and this page shows that HAGEN voted in favor of the amendment for this $10,000,000 increase. His "aye" vote is shown in the official record.

The Seventy-ninth Congress met in 1945 and 1946 and there were no record votes on REA during that time, but Representative HAGEN by voice vote supported all REA appropriations and efforts to increase them.

The Eightieth Congress met January 3, 1947, and recessed June 19, 1948.

On July 18, 1947, the House considered H. R. 3601, the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill for 1948.

The House that day voted on a motion by Representative RANKIN that the bill be recommitted with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 53 to increase the appropriation for rural electrification loans from $225,000,000 to $250,000,000.

On page 9302 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for July 18, 1947, the roll call on this motion is printed. HAGEN voted to increase the funds for REA as shown on this page of the official record.

On February 24, 1948, during House debate on H. R. 5525, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, Representative JOHN RANKIN, of Mississippi, moved that the bill be recommitted to the committee with instruction to include the following amendment: "Rural electrification: For loans in accordance with the provisions of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as amended, $300,000,000."

Representative HAGEN voted for the motion to provide $300,000,000 additional funds for REA expansion. This fact may be read on page 66 of the Rural Electrification publication for April 1948.

On April 1, 1948, a motion was made providing that the REA appropriation be raised from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 for 1949.

The reason for increasing the amount of money which could be loaned to REA co-ops was that during the war construction of many electric lines was not possible, and there is a tremendous backlog of work to be done and more money was needed. The increase passed the House by a vote of 199 to 154. HAGEN voted for the increase as shown on page 3995 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 1, 1948.

Never has HAGEN failed the farmers of his district and the Nation in supporting moves to increase the electrification of farms. The official votes as described above are the only votes ever taken on this vital subject while he has been Congressman and his REA votes are 100 percent for the farmers of his district, State, and Nation.

The above statement is what a prominent daily newspaper editor thinks of my REA record.

EIGHTIETH CONGRESS BEST FRIEND OF REA

Pleased though I am with the REA results in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congress, what we were able to do in the Eightieth Congress, Republican controlled, sets some new records.

Before this year is over, the sums for Minnesota will be greatly increased from the four-hundred-million appropriation we have made for the fiscal year, which started July 1, 1948. That appropriation, which I supported, is one hundred million above the President's request. In addition, we appropriated $5,450,000 for REA administrative expenses.

Why did we provide for more than the Democratic administration requested?

It is because Congress is sold on the value of this program and wants REA to be able to place orders for material which it believes will be more abundant than the administration anticipates. REA appropriations are not down the drain. They are actually loans which these locally owned and managed cooperatives pay back to the United States Treasury. The record of their repayment is good.

Last year, Congress let REA keep $325,000,000 it had left over from the previous year unspent because it was not able to find materials to spend it on. In addition, we provided it with $225,000,000 more, a total of $550,000,000. A little later, as materials became more abundant, we provided it with an additional deficiency appropriation of $175,000,000, making a grand total of $725,000,000, which was all it had asked. As already pointed out, for next year we gave it more than the President asked. My voting record will show that in all of these cases I supported the amounts finally granted.

While we have doubtless provided it with more money than it will be able to spend or perhaps allocate in full, to the local cooperatives, it is my feeling that unless the money is available to REA, orders cannot even be placed for future delivery of materials now in short supply.

This action will not provide electricity for every farmer as soon as he wants it, or for all those who have long been subscribers. I wish it could. The job is too big for that. Much will depend upon the decisions of the management of the respective cooperatives and upon their ability and diligence in finding materials and labor. Since all local plans must be approved by the Washington REA headquarters, much depends on the plans submitted to it by the local co-ops. Congress can only provide the money for the loans. The rest is up to the REA. Where the lines are built and when is not the business of Congress but of these locally owned and managed business enterprises.

PLENTY OF MONEY BUT SHORT ON MATERIALS; AND WHY

One thing which has disturbed me recently is propaganda put out by some parties to the effect that consumers wanting electricity and signed up for it do not have it because Congress has not provided the money. The foregoing facts are a complete refutation of this falsehood. The real fact of the matter is that it has been a shortage of materials and not of money that has slowed down this worthy program. And why has there been a shortage of materials? During the war such a shortage was quite understandable. But, why a shortage now?

On March 23, 1948, Members of Congress were advised by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, that our total exports of electrical machinery and apparatus, July 1, 1946, through June 30, 1947, totaled $454,698,000. Much of this, of course, was given away by our Government under our so-called foreign policy and reciprocal trade program, under which we have undertaken to subsidize the world and buy friends everywhere. The administration has even exported many millions of dollars' worth of electrical equipment to Russia.

Congress has, time and again, demanded that these exports of electrical machinery and apparatus be halted. Congress has demanded that the administration stop the export of war materials, steel, oil, farm machinery, and many other things to Russia and to Soviet-dominated countries. Nothing in short supply can be exported without a license granted by the Secretary of Commerce, appointed by the President. But, these exports continue, and the President says they should.

The Department of Commerce has prepared two sheets of tables, each measuring 16 by 23 inches, listing 95 foreign countries and the dollar values and items of electrical equipment furnished each country in recent months.

Scarce wire, generators, magnetos, batteries, boxes, insulation, metal conduits, transformers, sockets, fuses, lighting fixtures and parts of all kinds, have gone to these 95 foreign countries, including such places as Ethiopia, the Belgian Congo, Afghanistan, Ceylon, Mozambique, Kuwait, Cameroons, Curacao, Surinam, the Fiji Islands, and a lot of other places most people cannot even find with an atlas, in addition to all the nations we have recently been fighting, to neutrals, and anyone else wanting something we have, for free, or with loans we provide which will never be repaid.

Some of my constituents will have to wait a little while until the boys in the State Department and Commerce Department run a power line out to a few more Eskimo igloos or to cannibal thatched huts, in the wilds of the Congo. Of course, if the people here at home get impatient, they can change a few faces in the executive department when the opportunity arises in November. And they probably will. In the meantime, they can look with satisfaction upon the record of Congress in meeting the needs of our own people for electricity, so far as the authority of Congress has permitted.

In conclusion, let me repeat that the present Congress, a Republican Congress, is the stanchest supporter of REA of any in our history. This is attested by the fact that it has voted more money for REA than any previous Congress, in fact, more than the previous four Congresses. In 2 years the present Republican Congress has voted eight hundred million which is 42 percent of all funds voted in the 15 years of REA's history. Here are the figures since the beginning:

REA funds voted by Congress

Fiscal year:	Amount
1935–36	$13,928,288
1937	46,500,000
1938	30,000,000
1939	140,000,000
1940	40,000,000
1941	100,000,000
1942	100,000,000
1943	10,000,000
1944	20,000,000
1945	25,000,000
1946	300,000,000
1947	250,000,000
1948	400,000,000
1949	400,000,000
Total	1,875,428,288

Go to the Polls on Primary Day, August 3—Cost of Government Last Year, $1,155 Per Family, More Than Cost of Food

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MAX SCHWABE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, about one-third of the time of each producing citizen is spent to support the horde of Government employees. With 14,500,000 persons on the Federal pay roll in one form or another and increasing at the rate of 600 per day, it behooves all who want to reduce this colossal bureaucracy to go to the polls on primary day in Missouri, August 3, and vote for candidates pledged to say "No" to the various pressure groups. All good Republicans and Democrats should enter the primary of their choice and vote for the candidate who has dedicated his efforts toward saving free enterprise and keeping men free. It cannot be done unless the spending spree is checked and drastically curtailed.

Last year all government in America cost the taxpayers $54,000,000,000. Federal spending has reached such astronomical proportions as to be virtually meaningless to most persons. But stop and consider that we spent more for government than for food. Our food bill last year was $47,000,000,000. Federal expenditures last year amounted to $1,155 per family, as compared with $121 in 1929. The tremendous cost of government amounted to more than all the income of all the people living west of the Mississippi River. In 1929 just two-thirds of the income of one Western State, California, was sufficient to finance the entire Federal Government.

With so much at stake I hope that every qualified voter will go to the polls and participate in the nomination of candidates. Remember, it is the primary that selects the men we elect to office. Let no man or woman able but unwilling to take the time to go to the polls and vote in the primary election complain that we have inferior men in office or that government costs too much. Such people have no right to complain even should we lose our Republic.

Construction of the Upper Harbor in Minneapolis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER H. JUDD
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following testimony before the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Army Civil Functions:

EXTENSION OF THE MISSISSIPPI 9-FOOT CHANNEL ABOVE ST. ANTHONY FALLS, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

STATEMENT OF HON. WALTER H. JUDD, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

Mr. CASE. We have the pleasure this afternoon of having with us three of our colleagues from Minnesota and some witnesses. They have certain projects which are proposed by the Corps of Engineers in the State of Minnesota.

Dr. Judd, do you wish to start off with a statement?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. CASE. We will be very happy to hear you.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, this project is known as extension of the Mississippi River 9-foot channel above St. Anthony Falls. The city of Minneapolis was built around these falls.

It is a project that was authorized in 1937 by the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Later the plan of cooperation with the city of Minneapolis was revised and the project was reauthorized in the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1945 with a tacit understanding that construction was not to begin until the war was over.

I want to say frankly that last year and the year before I urged my own city not to press for appropriations for the project because, important and necessary as I believe it to be, I thought that the very most important thing for our whole country's welfare was to cut down our national expenditures to the bone, balance our budget, start substantial payments on our national debt, and give some tax relief from wartime rates.

Besides, labor and materials were in very short supply, and very expensive. So it seemed to me advisable that the construction of all new projects be suspended during this emergency, and I personally voted against all increases for such purposes in the appropriations bills.

Nevertheless, a lot of increases were voted by the Congress for projects in other areas that I believe were less necessary and valuable than this. Then the President comes along with his new budget and asks us for a marked increase for next year for such projects all over the country.

Mr. Chairman, if there is to be any new construction of this sort, this St. Anthony Falls project can qualify as among the top dozen in the country, from the standpoint of need, usefulness, and economic soundness. I feel, therefore, that we should present the essential facts about it and ask for appropriations to get it started.

First, the need. The reason this project is necessary is because of the way in which nature has constructed the Mississippi River in the city of Minneapolis.

The river flows through half of the city of Minneapolis with low-level banks. Then it goes over two main falls with a total drop of 75 feet, and flows through the rest of the city in a narrow gorge about 100 feet deep.

We have put over $150,000,000 into building a 9-foot channel to the foot of the falls, and it comes to a dead stop there where it is not possible to build adequate docks or storage. It is like building a railroad into a city without any terminal. There are only two ways by which we could build a terminal. One would be to cut away the banks. That has been done as far as is possible or safe, because the University of Minnesota is on one bank, and a group of big hospitals is on the other bank. The only other way is to build dams with locks up through the falls to the area lying above the falls, where we have 3 miles of smooth water with low banks on each side of the river—a total of 6 miles of frontage for harbor development that the engineers tell us will make one of the finest internal harbors in the whole world.

The land along those banks was originally occupied mostly by sawmills. The property is no longer used for that purpose. It has deteriorated and can be bought cheaply, making an ideal area for development.

Obviously the project would be valuable for the city of Minneapolis, but I think equally important for the whole Northwest, and for the whole Mississippi River development and traffic.

We have built a great navigation project running from New Orleans to Minneapolis, and yet there is no terminal for the third largest city on the whole river. There is no way to load and unload cargo or to build storage for coal and oil stocks which we have to build up in the summer. I have just recently returned from Minneapolis, and there is a tremendous oil shortage up there now with the temperature 45 degrees below zero last Thursday just north of Minneapolis.

Last fall the Army engineers cooperated with us and with their icebreaker we kept the river open a month longer than usual. Otherwise we would have been completely up against it for fuel already, and the winter only two-thirds gone. If this extremely cold weather continues, I don't know how our people are going to make it.

Farmers who had stored fuel oil for their farm machinery for planting crops in the spring are having to use these supplies now in order to keep themselves and the neighbors warm. With the tremendous demand which is being made for our agricultural products for ourselves and the rest of the world, this becomes of critical importance. You cannot run modern agriculture without gasoline and oil.

When the project was originally proposed 20 years or so ago the engineers thought that we might ultimately develop a maximum tonnage of 1,700,000 tons per year. The average tonnage for the last 4 or 5 years is between 4,000,000 tons and 5,000,000 tons.

Mr. CASE. That is up to what point?

Mr. JUDD. The whole north half of the river above the junction of the Missouri River and the Mississippi.

Mr. CASE. Do you have that much tonnage that actually reaches that point below the falls?

Mr. JUDD. No; we do not. Mr. Strong can give you these figures. My point is that we simply cannot bring up the much larger quantities we find we now need to store for the long winters when the river is frozen and the traffic is stopped, unless we get a harbor where we can build docks to load and unload, and adequate storage facilities for the fuel oil, coal, grain, and other products.

Mr. CASE. Are you familiar with the engineering details of the proposed project?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; I am reasonably familiar with them.

Mr. CASE. How many lifts would be required?

Mr. JUDD. Two major lifts.

Mr. CASE. What is the depth of the channel at St. Anthony Falls?

Mr. JUDD. The 9-foot channel goes right up to the bottom of the falls.

This document that I have here, House Document 449 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, covers the details of the dams, the locks, the bridges that have to be altered, and so forth.

Mr. CASE. Do you know the total cost of the project?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; the total estimated cost is about $16,300,000. Of that $1,100,000 is to be contributed by the city of Minneapolis to provide for the alteration of the railroad bridges. The city also agreed it would (1) make the necessary alterations to highway bridges and publicly owned utility structures, (2) furnish free of cost to the United States Government all necessary funds, easements, and rights-of-way, and (3) furnish free of cost all spoil disposal areas necessary for new work and subsequent maintenance.

Mr. CASE. Has the city taken steps toward doing that?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; it has. We have on hand $1,100,000 which was required as an outright grant from the city to the Government for the project.

In addition it was estimated that $650,000 would be required for the city to alter the public utilities and the highway bridges, and actually we have almost twice that much. We have almost two and a quarter million dollars in the bank waiting to begin work.

Mr. CASE. Is that sufficient to do this work?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; more than sufficient. The city raised it by issuing bonds at the rate of $300,000 a year. It has taken longer to get construction started than we expected, and the original $1,750,000 we planned has been raised to almost $2,250,000.

Mr. CASE. Do you know at what stage the plans for this project are?

Mr. JUDD. I understand that they are about one-third completed.

There is in the budget $176,000 for continuation of the planning.

We would like to secure about $4,000,000, which is the amount that could be used profitably and efficiently in this first year. It has to be done in stages. The engineers have to dredge the channel and to complete the lower dam and lock before they can begin the upper one.

We would like an appropriation of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, and put with that the city's contribution. That would make about $4,000,000, which is all we could profitably use this year.

Mr. TIBBOTT. And you think you could complete all of the planning and start the project?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; because the planning that is already completed is for the lower lock, the first stage of the construction.

Mr. CASE. Is the channel actually a 9-foot channel all the way up to St. Anthony Falls at the present time?

Mr. JUDD. It is. I will ask Mr. A. D. Strong, secretary of the Upper Mississippi Waterway Association, to answer in detail.

Mr. STRONG. They have been bringing up an average of nearly 5,000,000 tons a year to the Northern Pacific bridge.

Mr. CASE. The reason I ask that is because we do have another project on which there is a budget estimate for additional funds for development of the river between the Missouri River and Minneapolis, Minn., and the suggestion that the estimate provides for rectification of damages to levee districts as determined, guide and guard wall extensions, channel excavation and alinement, and I am just wondering if the channel really is built up to that point.

Mr. JUDD. It is already in operation.

Mr. CASE. I mean to the extent that you are warranted now in going ahead with getting Congress to appropriate $16,000,000 to get this work done.

Mr. JUDD. Yes; it was ready several years ago for this extension of the channel. May I also refer that to Mr. Strong, who knows more about it than almost anyone else. He has been working for years on development of the whole upper Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, I have here three letters which I would like to place in the record, one from Edwin A. Hendricks, chairman of the committee on commerce, markets, and harbors of the city of Minneapolis; one from the Jaycees, the Minneapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce; and one from Mr. Emmett Salisbury, president of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. CASE. Without objection, they may be placed in the record at this point.

(The letters referred to are as follows:)

CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS,
OFFICE OF CITY CLERK,
January 26, 1948.

Hon. ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Chairman, Civil Functions Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ENGEL: We urge immediate action of Congress to provide funds for the extension of the 9-foot channel from the Falls of St. Anthony to approximately the northern limits of the city of Minneapolis.

Your honorable body has approved this project with the understanding that the city is required to furnish funds sufficient to defray its share of the expense therof, amounting to $1,100,000 cash, plus the expense necessary to relocate all public facilities. The city now has this amount immediately available.

For 30 years the city of Minneapolis has been actively engaged in attempting to secure this greatly needed improvement of the river; it has made many appearances before committees of Congress, and engineers of the United States Army.

The completion of this improvement will greatly stimulate industry in the Northwest; it will greatly facilitate the river transportation of commodities to that section of the country, particularly solid and liquid fuels.

When this harbor is completed, it will increase the present facilities for harbor purposes in the city of Minneapolis from one-half mile in an inferior location to nine additional miles of ideal river frontage.

Mr. A. D. Strong, of Minneapolis, is appearing before your committee in the interests of the city of Minneapolis and the Northwest and will present this communication for your consideration.

We hope and trust that you will give Mr. Strong and this letter careful attention and consideration.

Very truly yours,
EDWIN A. HENDRICKS,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, Markets, and Harbors.

MINNEAPOLIS JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
316 Frontenac Building, Minneapolis 2, Minn.

This is to certify that at a special meeting of the board of directors of the Minneapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce held on the 22d day of January 1948, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas the Congress of the United States after study through the United States Army Engineers Corps has already approved the extension of the 9-foot channel in the Mississippi River above St. Anthony Falls to the northernmost limit of Minneapolis, Minn.; and

Whereas this project is recognized as being a necessary factor in the industrial development of the entire upper Midwest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Minneapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce strongly urges that Congress appropriate funds to complete as quickly as possible the aforementioned project.

In witness whereof, I, Philip B. Harris, president of the Minneapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce, have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said organization this 22d day of January 1948.

[SEAL] PHILIP B. HARRIS,
President.

MINNEAPOLIS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Minneapolis 2, Minn., January 23, 1948.

Hon. ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Chairman, Civil Works Subcommittee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ENGEL: I am pleased to write this letter relative to Mr. A. D. Strong, secretary of the Upper Mississippi Waterway Association, who plans to appear before your subcommittee in connection with hearings on appropriations for the upper harbor on the Mississippi River in Minneapolis.

In this connection, it is my pleasure to advise you that the board of directors of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce advocates the starting of construction on the upper harbor at the earliest possible date and that a special committee of the board has been empowered to exert every effort in behalf of the achievement of such an objective.

Mr. Strong is a member of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, and being intimately informed on problems relative to the upper Mississippi waterway is, I feel, an excellent representative of our point of view. I bespeak your interest in the presentation which he will make and will sincerely appreciate any courtesies which you may be able to extend to him in connection with the current hearings.

Sincerely,
EMMETT SALISBURY, President.

The House Committee did not include an appropriation for this or any other new project in its bill for the fiscal year 1949. But it was agreed informally that if the Senate added this item and other new projects to the bill, the House would go along. The Senate, largely due to the efforts of Senator JOSEPH BALL, did include an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the first year's work on St. Anthony Falls project and the House accepted it. So after years of effort, the long-needed upper harbor development at Minneapolis is now assured.

1948 Sugar Distribution and Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, recent complaints against the Sugar Act of 1948 and operations under it seem to be based upon a lack of information with respect to the facts regarding the relative levels of prices of sugar and other commodities and the provisions of the Sugar Act itself. On behalf of the sugar-beet producers of my district and in fairness to the entire sugar industry, I should like to set forth the facts and refer to some of the pertinent provisions of the law.

The wholesale price of refined sugar at the end of price control in 1947 was $8.40 per hundredweight and continued unchanged until early January 1948. The original determination of the 1948 consumption requirements made on January 2 was 7,800,000 tons. This greatly exceeded the rate of distribution during the months that followed and the wholesale price of refined sugar declined to $7.50 per hundredweight. In an effort to bring the determination in line with actual distribution, the original determination, pursuant to the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1948, was reduced first on February 26 to 7,500,000 tons and again on May 25, to 7,000,000 tons. As a result of these adjustments, stating sugar requirements more nearly in line with the rate of actual distribution, confidence in the market was restored and distribution increased. As distribution increased, the price of raw sugar strengthened and during the last days of June the announced price of wholesale refined sugar recovered 25 cents per hundredweight of its previous losses. The present announced price of $7.75 per hundredweight is to be compared with $8.40 when sugar was under price control.

Sugar was the first commodity to be brought under price control at the beginning of the war and was the last commodity to be released from control after the war was over. Consequently, sugar prices did not soar as did other prices during the early war and postwar periods. Moreover, when wartime controls were removed, sugar prices did not increase, whereas prices of nearly every other commodity bounded sharply upward when released from wartime restrictions. As a result of these conditions, sugar is now one of the cheapest commodities in the market. As compared with prewar levels, sugar is nearly 35 percent cheaper than the prices for other commodities produced by farmers. It is about 25 percent cheaper than prices for the commodities farmers buy, and is about 25 percent cheaper than all foods at retail. Against this picture of relatively low sugar prices, the consuming public has more than twice as much money to buy sugar with now as it did in the prewar period.

Raw sugar prices had declined approximately 17 percent by May 1948. Refined sugar prices had declined by 8 percent in the same period. Even taking into account the recently announced recovery in these prices, they still represent a decline of 8 percent for raw sugar and 6 percent for refined sugar below the level of a year ago. Retail prices have failed to reflect the declines in wholesale prices and therefore, there is no justification for any increase in the retail price of sugar as a result of the recent partial recovery in prices of raw and wholesale refined sugar.

While sugar prices have been falling, other prices and grower costs have been rising. While this drop in sugar prices has been occurring, prices for all farm products have gone up about 5 percent; prices for commodities bought by farmers have gone up nearly 9 percent; and retail food prices have increased from 5 to 15 percent. The price of beverages has gone up 13 percent in the year, and the price of cereals and bakery products has increased 10 percent. In line with the upward trend of everything else, wage earners have received increases approximately in line with these price rises, with the result that they have been able to maintain their high purchasing power.

These declines in sugar prices have occurred despite the mandate of Congress in the Sugar Act of 1948 that quotas shall be maintained so as to establish and keep sugar prices at fair and reasonable levels as between producers and consumers. Perhaps the best standard to judge the general fairness and equitableness of sugar prices between the interests of producers and consumers, as spelled out in the act itself, is the relationship between sugar prices and living costs in the first 10 months of 1947, when sugar was still under price control. If this relationship had been maintained, the wholesale price of refined sugar now would be nearly 9 cents per pound. In other words, the present market levels are more than a cent a pound below levels indicated by the Sugar Act.

At the same time that the producers of sugar have been hard pressed by increases in costs and reductions in the price for their product, those who distribute sugar have enjoyed a greater margin. The distributor's spread or margin, as indicated by most recently available official figures, shows an increase of approximately 16 percent in the past year, and is nearly two and one-half times what it was in the prewar period.

The effect of lower sugar prices and higher production costs is liquidation in the domestic sugar-producing industry. Sugar beet acreage for the United States as a whole shows a decrease of 14 percent from last year. In Ohio, Nebraska, and Colorado the decrease is over 30 percent. In Michigan sugar beet acreage has dropped 36 percent from the 10-year average. In the sugarcane areas, where adjustments cannot be made so quickly, growers are faced with serious losses.

The facts show that the only valid criticism that can be made against the administration of the Sugar Act is that prices are not being maintained at levels which will meet the standards of the act and which will maintain the domestic sugar-producing industry at the levels contemplated by the law.

The above facts are taken from the following comparative table of statistics compiled from Government publications:

Red Lake-Clearwater River Project Now Under Way But Still Needs Support

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, June 16, 1948

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, final authorization of the Red Lake-Clearwater flood-control project marks the end of a 40-year effort by many persons in northwestern Minnesota. This project means much to the future of the Red Lake-Clearwater River area.

For many years, attempts were made in Congress to get authorization for funds to begin the Red Lake-Clearwater project.

However, it was not until the Eightieth Congress when funds were actually appropriated to initiate the first phase of the project.

Because of my own personal efforts and the splendid cooperation of Senators JOSEPH H. BALL and EDWARD J. THYE, of Minnesota, and others, we were able to get an initial appropriation of $400,000 in 1947 to start the project. In leading up to this successful step in the long fight to get congressional approval of this project, I have had splendid support from dozens of local officials and citizens. All of them have contributed with their efforts in various ways toward the success which has been gained.

I could name many but I hesitate to do so because I might overlook some who added and contributed sometime during the 40-year fight in behalf of this project. However, I do want to mention my predecessor in Congress, the Honorable R. T. Buckler, who contributed of his time and effort in behalf of the project during the 8 years that he served in the United States Congress. During that time, as his secretary, I had the pleasure and great opportunity to cooperate with him in the efforts we made to get authorization for the project.

A celebration to dedicate the project is scheduled to be held on Friday and Saturday, July 9 and 10, 1948. At that time, many outstanding officials of Minnesota and North Dakota and elsewhere will be present in various functions of a 2-day program, starting at Grand Forks, N. Dak., on July 9. The high lights of this program are as follows: Flight in a C–47 Army airplane over the Red Lake-Clearwater River area by local, State, and national officials; a banquet to be held at Grand Forks, Friday evening, July 9; Saturday, July 10, a motor caravan, starting at Grand Forks, with stops at Crookston and Red Lake Falls, en route to Thief River Falls, where an official luncheon will be held at the Trinity Lutheran Church. The program on that occasion will be as follows: The invocation will be given by Rev. G. S. Thompson, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church. Following the luncheon, the guests are to be introduced. Short talks will be made by Mr. E. V. Willard, Deputy Commissioner of Conservation, State of Minnesota; Mr. Chester S. Wilson, commissioner of conservation, State of Minnesota; Hon. Harold C. Hagen, United States Representative in Congress from the Ninth District of Minnesota; and Hon. JOSEPH H. BALL, United States Senator from Minnesota. Mr. L. W. Rulien, Pennington County attorney, will be chairman of the program.

After the luncheon, the group will go out to the site of the ceremony to dedicate the project. This will be at the River Valley Store, near Highlanding, about 20 miles east and slightly south of Thief River Falls. The program on that occasion will be held under the auspices of the Red Lake River Development Association, with District Judge Paul A. Lundgren, president of the association, presiding. The scheduled program will be as follows: The invocation will be by Rev. Halvard Lee of Trail, Minn., followed by introduction of the Army Engineers present. Colonel W. K. Wilson, Jr., of the St. Paul District Office of the Corps of Engineers, will then present the project to the State of Minnesota, followed by dedication remarks of Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl, of Minnesota.

This will be followed by responses from Peter Graves, secretary, Red Lake Indian Agency, Redby, Minn.; Ole O. Melby, president, Red Lake Drainage & Conservancy District, Oklee, Minn.; Hon. HAROLD C. HAGEN, United States Representative in Congress from the Ninth District of Minnesota, and Hon. MILTON R. YOUNG, United States Senator from North Dakota.

Visiting guests will then be introduced, and several musical selections will be rendered by the Eagles Quartette of Thief River Falls.

Hon. EDWARD J. THYE, United States Senator from Minnesota, will then give the main address of the afternoon, followed by music provided by the Red Lake Falls Municipal Band and a war dance by the Red Lake Indians.

In a colorful ceremony, Congressman HAGEN will be adopted into the Red Lake Tribe of the Chippewa Indians with Judge Paul Beaulieu presiding.

The final music for the celebration will be by the Thief River Falls Municipal Band.

Farmers of the Red Lake-Clearwater River area will be interested in the series of events and actions during the past year which resulted in the second appropriation received from Congress of $1,000,000 in June 1948. This amount was included in H. R. 5524.

In this connection, I want to pay special tribute to Senator BALL for his splendid cooperation and help in connection with getting appropriations for the project.

The following are statements, letters, communications, and newspaper articles which will give a running story of some of the activities in support of this appropriation:

STATEMENT OF HAROLD C. HAGEN, UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS, NINTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA, BEFORE THE CIVIL FUNCTIONS SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS OF UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, JANUARY 21, 1948

I have received a great number of letters from farmers and townspeople in the Red Lake-Clearwater River area, in which they express genuine gratitude for the appropriation approved last year toward the deepening, widening, and straightening of the river channels and the construction of whatever work is necessary to adequately control the flow of water throughout the seasons and thus prevent serious flood damage.

Floods have made life miserable for the farmers in the area adjacent to the two rivers for more than 40 years, and in spite of the fact that they were reduced to almost poverty by their misfortunes, they did not at any time give up hope that the Federal Government would some day do something about it. They have been doggedly sticking it out—working toward the day when the completion of the flood-control project would make their farms the envy of the Northwest. With your help and that of the United States Congress, that day is near at hand.

The completion of this project will accomplish many things:

1. It will halt the destruction of crops during a time when the world is crying for more food.

2. It will open up many thousands of acres of new and good land for crop production.

3. It will create a channel deep enough to provide a flow of water the year around, and alleviate the bad effects of dry years.

4. It will insure an adequate supply of water to the towns and cities on the banks of the two rivers.

The cities of Thief River Falls, St. Ralaire, Red Lake Falls, Crookston, and East Grand Forks, Minn., are totally, and Grand Forks, N. Dak., is partially dependent on these rivers for their water supply. When these rivers have been dry, the towns and cities were subjected to serious fire hazards, and problems of sanitation menaced the health of the whole area.

5. It will assist in preventing pollution.

The United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics has stated in a report that from 1919 to 1939 the farmers in the flood area sustained a loss of more than $3,384,000, and that the average annual loss is in excess of a quarter of a million dollars a year.

The approval by this committee of the amount stipulated in the budget—$1,200,000—will enable the War Department to continue work on this project so that it will, in a year or so, be completed. This is not an expenditure, gentlemen. It is an investment which will pay off handsomely in years to come, and will bolster our national economy at a time when increased food production is the key to many of our national problems.

I respectfully urge the members of this committee to recommend the appropriation of the amount requested in the budget, $1,200,000 for this project.

JANUARY 31, 1948.

Mr. PAUL LUNDGREN,
Attorney at Law,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

DEAR PAUL: Late this morning, I appeared before the Subcommittee on Civil Functions of the House Committee on Appropriations relative to the Red Lake-Clearwater River project. I pleaded for the approval of the $1,200,000 requested by the Budget Bureau for additional work on this project.

For your information, though I presume you already have these details, the total estimated cost of the project is $2,736,200. Previously appropriated for planning and initial construction work is approximately $509,800, of which $400,000 was for the initial construction job for which contracts have been let.

If the $1,200,000 now requested is granted, there will be a further necessary appropriation of more than $2,000,000.

I have every belief that the Committee will approve of the amount which we are asking for; but if they should cut it down any, it might be well to consider the advisability of sending down a delegation to appear before the Senate Committee. However, if they do cut it just slightly, it might be just as well to let it go through, because I am satisfied we will get the rest of the necessary appropriation next year.

As I concluded my oral testimony, I received permission to file a written statement which will be included in the hearings.

I think there is a very friendly feeling toward this project on the part of the committee members.

As soon as we get any information relative to the committee's action, I will let you know.

With all good wishes,
Very cordially yours,
HAROLD C. HAGEN,
United States Representative in Congress.

FEBRUARY 25, 1948.

Senator WILLIAM DAHLQUIST,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

DEAR BILL: The Subcommittee on Civil Functions of the House Appropriations Committee has approved the amount of $900,000 for the Red Lake-Clearwater River project. Mention of this is found on page 11 of the report which has just now become available.

There is a balance, of course, left over from the last year's appropriation of $39,000. This totals $939,000.

This should give us an opportunity to get another big portion of the project under way perhaps later this year. Our hope, of course, is to get sufficient funds next year to complete the project and I am satisfied this can and will be done.

It occurred to me that an effort might be made in the Senate to get the amount increased to what the Budget Bureau recommended—$1,200,000. On the other hand, the House committee treated us very nicely and it might be the better part of wisdom to just work with the Senators from Minnesota so that this amount of $900,000 will not be cut in the Senate. What do you think about it?

At any rate, I strongly suggest that you contact the Minnesota Senators concerning the project.

With all good wishes.

Cordially yours,

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Member of Congress.

CLEARBROOK, MINN., February 28, 1948.

Hon. HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Congressman, Ninth District,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HAROLD: Thanks for copy of the message you sent to Senator Dahlquist, in regard to the action of the House subcommittee in voting $900,000 for the Red Lake and Clearwater River project.

It is almost too good to believe, HAROLD. Thank God, and the work you and others have done to put this worth-while project over the top.

Such "bread" cast upon present waters will bring abundant future returns to you and others interested.

Personally I agree with you; let good enough alone for the present. Next year will give us the balance.

Colonel Wilson has announced that they will be ready to let the contract on the Clearwater River by July 1, 1948.

Very sincerely,

ALBERT ANDERSON.

MARCH 1, 1948.

Mr. EDDIE ARVESON,
Trail, Minn.

DEAR FRIEND: You will be interested in the enclosed copy of H. R. 5524 and the committee Report No. 1420, in which you will find provisions for an appropriation of $900,000 in new funds for the Red Lake-Clearwater River project.

Reference to this project can be found on page 11 of the report.

All of this is most gratifying to you and to me because of our keen interest in this project for many years past.

With all good wishes.

Cordially yours,

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Member of Congress.

A similar letter, dated March 1, 1948, was also sent to Carsten Mead, Red Lake Falls, Minn., a member of the Tri-State Waters Association. Mr. Mead has also been very active in the support of the Red Lake-Clearwater River project.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
CORPS OF ENGINEERS,
DISTRICT ENGINEER, ST. PAUL DISTRICT,
St. Paul Minn., March 4, 1948.

Hon. HAROLD C. HAGEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAGEN: Reference is made to the Red Lake and Clearwater Rivers, Minn., flood-control project which was authorized by the Flood Control Act approved December 22, 1944, and for which construction funds were first made available by the last Congress.

I am pleased to advise you that a contract covering approximately one-third of the excavation which will be required for the improvement of the Red Lake River has been awarded to the Al Johnson Construction Co. of Minneapolis, Minn., who is at the present time moving in his plant and equipment preparatory to starting work.

The above amount of work is all that can be accomplished with the construction funds made available to date. However, this office is in a position to award contracts for additional work on the project within a comparatively short time after Congress has made additional money available for the project.

Sincerely yours,

W. K. WILSON, Jr.,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers,
District Engineer.

The following article appeared in the Thief River Falls Times for May 27, 1948:

WORK NOW WELL STARTED ON RED LAKE RIVER JOB—DRAGLINE HAS WORKED ITS WAY 1,000 FEET DOWN RIVER DURING PAST 2 WEEKS

Work in progress the past 2 weeks on the channel improvement project in Red Lake River, starting from a point 3 miles up the river from River Valley, has resulted in the channel being deepened for a distance of about 1,000 feet down the river, and is now proceeding at the rate of about 100 feet per day, L. J. Oberg, resident engineer on the project, said Wednesday night.

Slightly more than 6 feet of dirt was removed from the bed of the river this week by a drag-line operation, and the material thus removed is being depcsited on the river bank, to be leveled off later.

The contract is being executed by the Al Johnson Construction Co. of Minneapolis, which has a crew of eight men working with the dragline. The machine is being used at present one 10-hour shift a day.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12, 1948.

Senator WILLIAM DAHLQUIST,
Thief River Falls, Minn.:

House passed conference report today containing one million for Red Lake-Clearwater River project. Kindly advise others interested.

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Member of Congress.

That my work as Congressman and my efforts in support of the Red Lake-Clearwater River project are appreciated by others besides those at home is shown by the following letters:

BETHANY LUTHERAN CHURCH,
Seattle, Wash., May 18, 1944.

Congressman HAROLD HAGEN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have noted with much satisfaction that you have filed for reelection on the Republican ticket. Since you did this previous to any action pro or con by our Ninth District Convention, you merit our full confidence.

I have also followed your record as first-term Congressman from our district. On the basis of this record there is no question in my mind but that you have served our people exceptionally well and that your place and influence in Congress is already well established.

Especially do I want to commend you for your sincere and effective efforts in Congress for our Red Lake River project. You deserve much credit for the progress already made. We want you to see this project through in the near future.

If there is anything that I can do to assist you in your campaign for reelection I will be glad to respond. With my best wishes, I am,

Most sincerely yours,

E. L. TUNGSETH, Pastor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12, 1948.

Hon. HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Representative in Congress,
Ninth District in Minnesota,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND HAROLD: It is with genuine pleasure that I accept, for Mrs. Fredrickson and myself, your very cordial invitation to attend the dedication ceremony for the Red Lake-Clearwater River project to be held on Friday and Saturday, July 9 and 10. I shall take great personal satisfaction in being present at this important event.

May I say to you, HAROLD, as I have often stated to others, that if it had not been for your assiduous efforts and able leadership, first in obtaining the authorization and later in securing the appropriation of funds, this multiple-purpose improvement upon which actual construction is now about to begin would not yet have been brought to a fruition. In so saying I am not unmindful of, nor do I minimize, the work of others over a period of more than a generation in seeking the same end result. I merely want to emphasize that every accomplishment is in a large measure due to a major contributing factor, and in the Red Lake-Clearwater River project you have been that major factor.

I congratulate the people of the Ninth District and others who will be the beneficiaries of this improvement upon having such an efficient public servant, and wish you every success in your future endeavors to represent the district, State, and Nation.

Sincerely yours,

FRED FREDRICKSON,
Washington Representative, Greater North Dakota Association and North Dakota State Water Conservation Commission.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
June 14, 1948.

Hon. HAROLD C. HAGEN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR HAROLD: I will be more than happy to accept your kind invitation to attend the dedication ceremonies for the Red Lake-Clearwater River project.

I know something of the tremendous amount of work that you did in getting this project and would like to inform the people of your district, as best I can, about your very effective work on this.

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senator.

While the project is well under way, there will be many more minor details that will come up from time to time—more money will be needed, and if I return to Congress, and I hope to be reelected, I will be in a position to take care of them.

That the newspapers of the Red Lake-Clearwater River area appreciate my efforts is indicated by the following editorial from the East Grand Forks Record for August 8, 1947:

Congratulations and a vote of thanks are due to the officers of the Red Lake River Development Association and to Congressman HAROLD HAGEN, who have worked so long and so hard on the Red Lake-Clearwater Basin project. The first appropriation of $400,000, to be spent on channel clearance, virtually assured that the funds will be forthcoming to complete the remainder of the project, since this first grant indicates that Congress recognizes the need for flood control and water conservation in the basin. The most encouraging thing is that the work will start before another drought is upon us, so that we have reasonable assurance of a steady water supply even if next year or the year after matches the hot, dry summers of 1934 or 1936.

Farmers in the Red Lake-Clearwater River area will be interested in the following factual data compiled by the United States Corps of Engineers relative to the Red Lake-Clearwater River improvement project:

RED LAKE AND CLEARWATER RIVERS PROJECT BEING CONSTRUCTED UNDER DIRECTION OF CORPS OF ENGINEERS (ST. PAUL DISTRICT)

Site: Improvement on the Red Lake River extends from a point 4.7 miles downstream from High Landing (154.3 miles above the mouth) to the outlet of Lower Red Lake, a distance along the improved channel of 34.2 miles.

Improvement on the Clearwater River extends from a point 5 miles upstream from Plummer (41.5 miles above the mouth) to a point just above the mouth of Ruffy Brook (mile 79.1) a distance of 37.5 miles along the Clearwater River.

Drainage area: At lower end of project, Red Lake River, 2,300 square miles; Clearwater, 464 square miles; at upper end of project, Red Lake River, 1,951 square miles; Clearwater, 204 square miles.

Channel: Bottom width, Red Lake River, 41 to 49 feet in portion under contract, 76 to 85 feet for remainder; Clearwater, varies from 31 to 49 feet.

Design channel capacity: lower end, Red Lake River, 1,520 second-feet; Clearwater, 1,510 second-feet; upper end, Red Lake River, 1,000 second-feet; Clearwater, 850 second-feet.

Improvement of structure at outlet of Lower Red Lake: Control gates: Three hand-operated 16-foot lift gates, one (existing) stop-log bay. Discharge capacity: 1,000 second-feet when lake is at normal elevation.

Costs: Total Federal cost, Red Lake River, approximately $2,200,000; total Federal cost, Clearwater River, approximately, $1,700,000; total non-Federal cost, approximately, $190,000.

Authority: Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944.

Resident engineer for construction: Mr. Lawrence J. Oberg, engineer.

Contractor for stage I: Al Johnson Construction Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; estimated contractor's earnings, $307,900; stage I consists of approximately 12 miles of channel excavation on the Red Lake River from the lower end of the project at mile 154.3 near High Landing to mile 165.9 above the mouth.

As indicated above, the total Federal cost of the Red Lake-Clearwater River project is $3,900,000, plus the total non-Federal cost—local sponsors and civil units—of approximately $190,000. Since the Federal Government has so far appropriated $1,400,000, there is an additional amount of $2,500,000 still to be appropriated to complete the project. As the United States Congressman from the Ninth District, I will do everything I possibly can and, judging by my previous success, I feel certain that we can secure this appropriation during the next Congress.

Government Programs Aid Alaska First Division

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this means of informing the people of the First Division of Alaska about some of the Government activities which will be carried on in that region during this fiscal year because of favorable action during the session of the Eightieth Congress which recently adjourned. Likewise, I shall call attention to legislation which will be generally of benefit to all Alaska, including the First Division.

We are very hopeful that because of the representations made before the House Appropriations Committee the Coast Guard district in Alaska will soon be reestablished. It is altogether likely that a First Division location will be selected. The Coast Guard has given assurances that a survey will be made during the summer. It will be remembered that the Coast Guard had a separate district in Ketchikan that functioned to the best interests of all concerned and, I submit, with greater efficiency than is possible under the present arrangement under which Alaska is merely an appendage of another district.

Surveys are to be started during the summer season in connection with the plan to hard-surface the Haines Cut-off. Forty-one thousand dollars was appropriated for this purpose. Here I desire to reiterate the prediction I so often have made and which promises to be an actuality before long—the highway leading from Haines to the Alaskan Highway, thus connecting southeastern Alaska with the main highway system of the Territory, is a traffic artery which from now on will always be of first-rate importance in Alaskan transportation.

In the field of navigation improvements, work will be continued on the dredging of Wrangell Narrows. In the civil-functions bill there was an appropriation of $1,038,400 for this purpose.

Work is proceeding on the 200-bed sanatorium at Mount Edgecumbe and a deficiency appropriation of $716,000 was made for this project to meet higher building costs.

At Ketchikan, the Alaskan communications system intends to replace the present inadequate transmitter building. Some housing for ACS personnel will be built and improvements in utilities are planned.

And at Juneau, also, the ACS will be actively engaged this year in furthering the modernization program. Housing and utilities construction are planned for Juneau.

Elsewhere in southeastern Alaska the Alaskan communications system will be busily engaged.

For example, Skagway will benefit by reason of this construction program. I am informed the plan is to build a repeater station and a powerhouse there. Skagway is the key point for the Juneau-Skagway-Whitehorse telephone circuit. A start will be made there also on buildings to house family units and utilities.

At Lena Point an operating structure will be put up. There will be living quarters and a powerhouse in connection with the new arterial connection extending from southeastern Alaska to Canada, interior Alaska, and the United States. As part of this arterial service, the ACS plans living quarters for operators, and a powerhouse, between Juneau and Haines.

At Sitka, also, the ACS has a building program scheduled. A powerhouse is to be built there to service communications equipment.

Southeastern Alaska will share in increased forest highway funds which were appropriated for Alaska in an amount exceeding $200,000 in the regular 1949 appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture. An additional direct appropriation of $400,000 and $450,000 in contract authorization was made in the second deficiency bill for 1948, bringing the total to $1,150,000 for rehabilitation, reconstruction, construction, and maintenance of highways in Alaska's national forests. At the time this statement was prepared the administrative agencies had not made allotments as to specific highways.

The Forest Service received in the Agriculture Department appropriation bill $50,000 to be used for research.

The Geological Survey has several projects outlined for southeastern Alaska. They are:

First. Geological mapping and study of mineral possibilities on northern Chichagof Island. An area of 4,000 square miles will be covered this summer.

Second. Continuation of the study of the mineralized area adjacent to Juneau.

Third. Completion of the survey of limestone resources on Hecta Island and adjacent parts of Prince of Wales Island covering an area of about 100 square miles.

Fourth. Topographic mapping parties will be working in the vicinity of Craig on the west side of Prince of Wales Island and in the vicinity of Eastern Passage, east of Wrangell; field work in mapping is planned for the Juneau vicinity and the northwest part of Chichagof Island in the general vicinity of Pelican.

Fifth. Stream water investigations are planned for Auke Creek, Peterson Creek, Gold Creek, Sheep Creek, and Dorothy Creek, all near Juneau; Cascade Creek at Thomas Bay near Petersburg; Medvetcha River—Sawmill Creek—near Sitka; Purple Lake Outlet near Metlakatla; Perseverance Creek and Manzanita Creek on East Behm Canal; Winstanley Creek on East Behm Canal; Fish Creek at Thorne Arm; Swan Lake Outlet at Carroll Inlet, and Mahoney Creek at George Inlet, all these being in the southern part of the Division.

Sixth. Reconnaissance of streams of Southeastern Alaska to determine program of subsequent water resource surveys.

Federal cooperation in the operation of the Ketchikan Fishing Laboratory was assured when the necessary money was voted by Congress.

Mention should be made of the passage by Congress and approval by the President of my bill which permits the leasing of 80-acre tracts in Tongass National Forest. This greatly enlarges the acreage which can be leased, and extends the leasing period. This legislation, it is hoped, will assist particularly in development of tourist facilities.

And finally, although surely not last on the list in order of proper priority, is the decision of the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, to establish the $250,000 Alaska station at Juneau, or at nearby Douglas.

Here are listed some of the programs of general application:

First. Assessment work on mining claims has been suspended between the period of July 1, 1948, and July 1, 1949.

Second. An energetic health program for Alaska was approved by Congress with an appropriation of $1,115,000 being made for protection, treatment and control of diseases in the Territory. A tuberculosis unit was authorized by this Congress and cash and contract funds were appropriated. This will be an institution of 400 beds, the largest in Alaska. It will be built at or near Anchorage. Experts say this hospital, together with others now operating or soon to be in operation, will go a long way toward curbing the menace of tuberculosis in the Territory.

Third. The Alaska game law enforcement appropriation was increased to $225,000.

Fourth. A bill was passed by the Congress and approved by the President enabling the Territorial legislature to institute when it so desires a general property tax freed from the previous Organic Act restriction which required all property be taxed according to its actual value; obviously it was not possible to determine the actual value of all mining claims. Under the new law mining claims may be taxed at the price paid to the Government or at a flat rate to be fixed by the legislature. The new law also permits but does not compel municipalities to tax at the rate of 3 and not 2 percent and allows the legislature to enact a uniform and general property tax at a rate of 2 percent instead of 1 percent.

Fifth. Another of my bills which is now law permits veterans of World War II to apply their military service up to 2 years for residence and cultivation requirements in settling on homesites and headquarters sites. This benefit was already in effect insofar as homesteads and 5-acre tracts were concerned.

Sixth. Title to the Army vessel Hygiene has been transferred to the Territory of Alaska. The ship will now be permanently available to the Territorial department of health as a floating medical and health center.

Seventh. One of my bills which passed Congress on the closing days of the session has general application to all the States and Territories. It places a minimum floor of $100,000 on the amount which will go to any Territory or any State under the hospitalization construction law already in effect. By means of this law Alaska will receive $100,000 instead of $41,400.

Eighth. Government aid in shipping has been continued until March 1, 1949.

Ninth. The necessity for making export declarations for shipment of goods between continental United States and Alaska and vice versa has been eliminated.

Tenth. Another of my bills which is now law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue unrestricted deeds to tracts of land within Alaska townsites to natives of Indian, Aleut or Eskimo blood. Once the deeds are issued the land can be sold or otherwise disposed of by the native owners and is made subject to municipal taxation.

Eleventh. Funds in the amount of $200,000 have been made available to the Fish and Wildlife Service for the operation of an exploratory vessel.

Twelfth. For continuation of agriculture research program, Congress made available $185,940 in cash plus $300,000 in contract authority for construction of buildings and utilities.

Thirteenth. The Interior Department bill contained $250,000 for establishment of a Bureau of Mines experiment station.

Résumé of Work of Senate Judiciary Committee, Eightieth Congress, First and Second Sessions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I believe that my colleagues and constituents, as well as many others, would be interested in a brief résumé of the work of the Senate Judiciary Committee in the two sessions of the Eightieth Congress, in particular concerning the impact of the legislative reorganization law upon our committee's jurisdiction and activities. I therefore ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, to be published shortly after the recess of Congress, a summary on this subject which I am now having prepared by the staff, in addition to an over-all review which I have made of the record of the Eightieth Congress.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST AND SECOND SESSIONS

ORGANIZATION OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

(A) Historical development of the Judiciary Committee

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary was first designated a standing committee by the Senate resolution of December 10, 1816, which required that the committee be appointed at the commencement of each session of Congress. This requirement was later changed by Senate rule XXVI, adopted January 11, 1884, to provide that the standing committees be appointed at the commencement of each Congress rather than at each session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 15: 307 and 367). The functions which have been the concern of this standing committee for more than 130 years are now among those which under Public Law 607, Seventy-ninth Congress, have been given to a new committee with a far more extensive jurisdiction.

(B) Jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following 18 subject groupings are referred to the new Committee on the Judiciary:

1. Judicial proceedings, civil and criminal, generally.
2. Constitutional amendments.
3. Federal courts and judges.
4. Local courts in the Territories and possessions.
5. Revision and codification of the statutes of the United States.
6. National penitentiaries.
7. Protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.
8. Holidays and celebrations.
9. Bankruptcy, mutiny, espionage, and counterfeiting.
10. State and Territorial boundary lines.
11. Meetings of Congress, attendance of Members and their acceptance of incompatible offices.
12. Civil liberties.
13. Patents, copyrights, and trade-marks.
14. Patent Office.
15. Immigration and naturalization.
16. Apportionment of representatives.
17. Measures relating to claims against the United States.
18. Interstate compacts generally.

Committee membership is limited by the Legislative Reorganization Act to 13 Senators. Furthermore, under this act each of these Senators is limited to membership on two standing committees with the exception that Senators of the majority party, who are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia or of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, may serve on three standing committees (sec. 102 (o) (4)). These limitations concentrate a high degree of responsibility on the committees and their members.

Prior to the amendments to Senate rule XXV the subject matters listed in the 18 groupings above were referred largely to the following standing committees:

(a) Committee on Claims, consisting of 13 Senators.

(b) Committee on Immigration, consisting of 14 Senators.

(c) Committee on the Judiciary, consisting of 18 Senators.

(d) Committee on Patents, consisting of 8 Senators.

The combined membership of these committees (53 members) and their staffs when compared with the present committee membership of 13 makes apparent the need for a high degree of efficiency and organization if there is to be thorough consideration of legislative matters.

(C) Internal organization of the Judiciary Committee

1. Membership of the Judiciary Committee: ALEXANDER WILEY, Wisconsin, chairman; WILLIAM LANGER, North Dakota; HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan; CHAPMAN REVERCOMB, West Virginia; E. H. MOORE, Oklahoma; FORREST C. DONNELL, Missouri; JOHN SHERMAN COOPER, Kentucky; PAT MCCARRAN, Nevada; HARLEY

M. KILGORE, West Virginia; JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi; WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Washington; J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, Arkansas; J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Rhode Island.

2. Standing subcommittees of the Judiciary Committee: Patents, Trade-Marks, and Copyrights, Mr. WILEY, chairman; Mr. MCGRATH. Immigration and Naturalization, Mr. REVERCOMB, chairman; Mr. MCCARRAN. Federal Charters, Holidays, and Celebrations, Mr. DONNELL, chairman; Mr. KILGORE. Constitutional Amendments, Mr. REVERCOMB, chairman; Mr. MCCARRAN. Improvements in Judicial Machinery, Mr. FERGUSON, chairman; Mr. MCCARRAN. National Penitentiaries, Mr. LANGER, chairman; Mr. DONNELL, Mr. MCGRATH.

(D) Procedures of the Judiciary Committee

1. Procedures under section 133 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946: Each standing committee is required by the Reorganization Act to fix regular meeting days for the transaction of business and to keep a complete record of all committee action, including record votes on all questions on which record votes are demanded.

Measures and recommendations shall be reported only by a majority of the committee actually present. It then becomes the duty of the chairman to report promptly to the Senate and take steps necessary to bring the matter to a vote.

2. Judiciary Committee Rules of Procedure: The statutory requirements are supplemented by the rules of the committee, the more pertinent of which are the following:

Rule 1: Five members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of such business as may be considered at any regular or special meeting of the committee, subject, however, to the provisions of section 133 (d) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. No member of the committee shall for the purpose of determining the existence of a quorum of the committee be deemed to be present unless he be personally present.

Rule 4: No vote cast in the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, by proxy shall be counted.

Rule 6: The committee shall, so far as practicable, require all witnesses appearing before it to file in advance written statements of their proposed testimony at least 24 hours before hearing, and to limit their oral presentations to brief summaries of their argument. The committee staff shall prepare digests of such statements for the use of committee members.

Rule 7: All hearings conducted by the committee or its subcommittees shall be open to the public except (1) executive sessions for marking up bills, or (2) for voting, or (3) where the committee by a majority vote orders an executive session.

Rule 15: Whenever there shall be referred to the committee a bill providing for the payment of a claim against the United States based on either tort or contract, the committee may report to the Senate an original resolution referring such claim to the Court of Claims pursuant to the provisions of 28 United States Code 257: Provided, That two or more such claims may be made the subject of a single resolution.

(E) Program of the Judiciary Committee

(A) Scope of judiciary activities at close of the second session, Eightieth Congress:

(1) Percentage of legislation referred to the Judiciary Committee:

(a) Of the total number of House bills and resolutions sent to the Senate, the percentage referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary was approximately 42 percent.

(b) Of the total number of Senate bills and resolutions introduced, the percentage referred to the Committee on the Judiciary was approximately 30 percent.

(c) Of the total number of Senate and House bills and resolutions received by the Senate, the percentage referred to the Committee on the Judiciary was approximately 33 percent.

(d) Number of bills and resolutions received, 1,518.

(e) Number of bills and resolutions reported favorably, 612.

(f) Number of bills and resolutions indefinitely postponed by action of the full committee, 297.

(g) Number of bills and resolutions acted upon, 909.

(h) Number of bills and resolutions becoming law (private and public), 454.

(2) Reports requested on legislation: Number of reports requested from Government departments and agencies on legislation referred to the committee, 1,640.

(B) Hearings and executive sessions of the Judiciary Committee:

(1) Number of hearing sessions conducted on legislation, 138.

(2) Approximate number of witnesses (all hearings), 1,012.

(3) Number of executive meetings of the full committee on legislation and nominations, 68.

(4) Number of executive meetings of subcommittees on legislation, 153.

(5) Number of meetings held by conferees, 28.

(C) Reports of the Judiciary Committee:

(1) Bills and resolutions reported by the committee, 612.

(a) Number of printed reports on bills and resolutions, 610.

(2) Number of documents, hearings, etc., printed for the use of the committee, 17.

(D) Nominations referred to the Judiciary Committee:

(1) Number of nominations referred to the committee, 140.

(2) Reports of the Judiciary Committee on nominations: Number of nominations reported favorably, 108; number of nominations reported unfavorably, none; number of nominations withdrawn, 1; number of nominations pending at the close of first session, 2; number of nominations pending at the close of second session, 27.

(3) Hearings of the Judiciary Committee on nominations: Number of recorded hearings on nominations, 94. (The figures do not include routine unrecorded hearings.)

EXAMPLES OF COMMITTEE WORK

The committee conducted extensive and comprehensive hearings on the issues involved on portal-to-portal under the Fair Labor Standards Act, and reported out the bill which subsequently became Public Law 49 (see in the following for summer assignment of work on overtime-on-overtime). Eleven days of hearings were held, totaling 828 pages of testimony. Considering the legal problems involved, and the complexity of the testimony, this was one of the big jobs of the Eightieth Congress.

The committee undertook the consideration of some of the largest claims bills ever considered by any Congress of the United States. Noticeable examples of these are the following:

(a) S. 1260, a bill to provide for the settlement and payment to certain motor carriers of claims against the United States for damages resulting from Federal possession, control, and operation in time of war of the carriers' transportation systems and properties; to provide for just compensation to such carriers for the use of such transportation systems and properties during such possession, control, and operation; and for other purposes. At one stage of the consideration of this bill it was estimated that the amount involved was over $30,000,000. Hearings were held on 5 days, and the bill as amended, which set up a commission to consider the claims, was ultimately passed.

(b) H. R. 4044, a bill to amend the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended; to create a commission to make an inquiry and report with respect to war claims; and to provide for relief for internees in certain cases. Four days of hearings were held on this legislation which involved the claims (against Japanese seized assets of 6,000 internees and 27,000 prisoners of war. The bill was enacted into law and the commission will be set up in the near future.

(c) Legislation enabling the Japanese evacuees in World War II to prosecute their claims against the Federal Government.

The committee considered S. 1567 (companion bill H. R. 1639), a bill to provide the venue in actions brought in United States district courts or in State courts against interstate commerce carriers by railroad for damages for wrongful death or personal injuries. Hearings on this legislation were conducted for 5 days, consisting of 299 printed pages.

A subcommittee of the full committee gave complete study and consideration to the three lynching bills (S. 42, S. 1352, and S. 1465), holding public hearings on 6 days, consisting of 198 printed pages. Approximately one-half dozen executive sessions of the full committee were held to redraft the antilynching legislation which was ultimately reported favorably to the Senate floor. In many of its aspects, this new lynching bill is entirely novel and it is quite certain that it will be given serious consideration by later Congresses.

In the second session of the Eightieth Congress the committee undertook the Herculean task of full and complete consideration of the so-called tidelands legislation, being Senate Joint Resolution 14 and S. 1988, dealing with titles to lands and resources in and beneath navigable waters. It is believed that the extent of the hearings on this legislation exceeds those of any committee of either House for some years, with the possible exception of Appropriations. Full-length hearings were held on 19 days, and the ultimate printed hearings comprise two sections of 1,703 and 335 pages, respectively. This bill was reported favorably by the committee to the Senate floor and the amount of committee labors which were expended in the preparation and conduct of these hearings were prodigious.

It was with pleasure and interest that the committee considered Senate Joint Resolution 91, and the companion resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 200, being resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of the President, and the Vice President. Hearings were held for 2 days, and the resolution was reported favorably to the Senate floor. This legislation is especially interesting in that it will provoke comment and discussion for many years amongst political observers and political scientists, and will undoubtedly be reintroduced in future Congresses. It is interesting to note that cognizance of this legislation was taken in party platforms of one of the political conventions.

The committee was pleased to consider in this Congress, Senate Joint Resolution 76, and somewhat similar legislation in the form of Senate Joint Resolution 67, the former being a bill to propose an amendment, to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women. After hearings, and proper discussion before the full committee on April 29, 1948, this measure was reported favorably, with slight amendments, to the Senate floor. Undoubtedly, this legislation will become some day a landmark in the entire enfranchisement of women in our political structure.

Perhaps the most important and purely judicial legislation of the Eightieth Congress was the enactment into law of H. R. 3214, a bill to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary." After extensive hearings for 5 days, and numerous executive sessions of the subcommittee, the bill was reported favorably to the Senate floor and ultimately passed both branches of Congress and was signed by the President. The hearings consisted of some 600 to 800 typewritten pages. The bill itself consisted of approximately 200 printed pages and the report consisted of 16 printed pages. Undoubtedly, this action of the committee will be a landmark in the legal profession for many years to come.

Related to the above legislation was the consideration by the Committee of H. R. 3190, a bill to revise, codify, and enact into positive law, title 18 of the United States Code, entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure." This bill, with the previous one, is the culmination of many years of arduous labor by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and certain publishing houses, such as the West and Thompson companies. The final fruition of their many years of labor was accomplished toward the end of the second session of the Eightieth Congress, and this committee was happy to be a part in this very important codification work.

One of the most important assignments which, unfortunately, the committee was forced to consider in the closing minutes of the second session was H. R. 5852, a bill to protect the United States against Un-American and subversive activities (the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill). Hearings on this bill were in progress for 4 days and, in addition, 4 other executive sessions were held. The testimony ran to approximately 1,000 typewritten pages, and the mail received by the committee was estimated to run in the neighborhood of 40,000 pieces, including letters, telegrams, and post cards. Because of the exigencies of the time element, it was impossible for the committee to make a final consideration on this most important though controversial legislation. A new draft of the bill, however, was prepared by the committee and there seems to be a likelihood that it will be given consideration at a later date.

No example of the committee work would be complete without proper reference to the arduous work load contained in the ordinary nominations. By its jurisdiction, the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary is charged with scrutiny of nominations to the Federal judiciary for United States attorneys and United States marshals. On each of these nominations it is imperative that the committee conduct or supervise a complete examination and investigation of the nominee's background from many points of view. This includes such elements as the character of the nominee; his professional reputation; his training; his ability to carry out the duties of his office; and with special emphasis, his complete and unabridged loyalty to his Government.

In the case of judges, hearings are always held, for it is the opinion of the committee that the judiciary of the country must remain inviolate, and that ample opportunity must be given for proponents and opponents to come forward and have their say on that particular nomination. Although it is true that the majority of the hearings on the judicial nominees are of the pro forma classification and do not entail a large burden on the Senate members and committee staff, nevertheless, there is a sufficient number of sometimes voluminous hearings. Without mentioning names, two examples are called to our attention. On one of these examples hearings were held on 13 days, consisting of some 1,684 typewritten pages. On the second illustration, hearings were held on 7 days, consisting of 826 typewritten pages. Before closing, there should be mentioned one other committee chore in relation to this committee. This concerns the problem relating to reports on those few occasions when reports on nominations are made in written form to the Senate. It is possible, and has happened, that the staff of the committee must prepare, not only a majority, but a minority report, for submission to the Senate.

In reporting out a number of so-called corporate charter bills, the committee initiated certain over-all principles which it is hoped will effect a standardization of congressional policy relating to Federal charters.

No example of committee work would be complete without some mention of the tremendous amount of time and energy consumed by the mail, including telegrams, telephone calls, and the personal interviews. No statistics on these burdens are available, but generally it can be said that the committee mail requires one-half day's work upon the part of the dictator and a full day's work upon the part of the transcriber. The telephone calls, ranging from simple inquiries on the status of bills to complex legal problems, consume three outgoing lines and the time of two on the clerical staff. Personal callers require not only proper, courteous attention but valuable time from other committee duties.

On July 26, 1947, the Senate passed Senate Resolution 137, which directed the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to make a full and complete investigation of our entire immigration system. Pursuant to Senate Resolution 137, a special subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary was appointed, a staff activated, and a program of study and investigation inaugurated.

The initial phase of this investigation was concerned with the problem of displaced persons in Europe. As an approach to the study of this problem, subcommittee members and staff members made a personal inspection tour of various displaced-persons camps in Europe, and also assembled information with reference to the situation in the United States, insofar as the same is pertinent to the reception of displaced persons into this country. Interviews were held with, and testimony taken from, officials of military government, immigration and consular services, Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization, and from personnel and residents in displaced-persons camps and centers. A report representing the findings and recommendations of the subcommittee was prepared and submitted to the Senate on March 2, 1948, together with a proposed bill for admission of displaced persons into the United States. The bill, as finally passed by Congress and approved by the President, June 25, 1948, is now Public Law 774.

In conjunction with the general investigation of our immigration system, the staff of the subcommittee has assembled considerable background material, consisting of a résumé of our immigration laws and regulations, a history and development of our immigration policy, suggested changes in our immigration laws, and extensive statistical data, and is now working on an analysis of the organization and procedures of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Visa Division of the Department of State.

Hearings are now being conducted with representatives of various private organizations for the purpose of securing information and suggestions pertaining to all phases of our immigration system, including the administration of our immigration and deportation laws and practices thereunder and recommendations for changes in the present laws. It is estimated that 50 such organizations will have been heard upon the conclusion of the hearings. On July 15, 1948, hearings with representatives from the Visa Division, United States Department of State, are scheduled to begin, and starting July 20, 1948, representatives from the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service will be heard, with a view toward obtaining the thoughts and ideas of these agencies with respect to possible changes and improvements in our present immigration and naturalization laws and regulations.

Some field investigations will probably be made by the staff during the course of the next 2 or 3 months. The information secured on these trips will materially aid the subcommittee in presenting its recommendations to the Senate in its general immigration report.

A study is being made of possible procedures to be employed in the handling of the 15,000 cases which will be referred to the subcommittee under the provisions of section 4 (a) of the displaced-persons law (Public Law 774) and of the several thousand cases to be referred to the subcommittee under the provisions of H. R. 3566 (Public Law 863).

Other activities of the subcommittee during the Eightieth Congress include the following: Assistance in the drafting of proposed immigration bills, both private and general, and the handling of a large number of referral items from senatorial offices.

The following is a statistical listing of some of the more important measures considered and acted upon by the committee:

(1) Immigration

S. 518: Present law provides for loss of citizenship by a naturalized citizen if he resides in a foreign state for a specified time and for the loss of nationality of certain United States nationals unless such persons acquire permanent residence in the United States prior to reaching 23 years of age. This measure would have extended the time so that the above classes of persons, whose returns were presumably delayed by World War II, could have retained their former status. June 24, 1947, reported, Senate Report 352.

S. 1463: Puts steamship lines on a parity with air lines so far as elimination of unnecessary duplication of information on manifests (passenger lists) is concerned. July 16, 1947, reported, Senate Report 596. July 23, 1947, passed Senate. July 25, 1947, House Judiciary Committee discharged and bill passed House. July 30, 1947, approved, Public Law 274.

S. 2242: Authorizes during the two fiscal years following the passage of this act the admission into the United States of certain European displaced persons for permanent residence, and for other purposes. Immigration visas not to exceed 202,000 may be issued without regard to quota limitation to the displaced persons found eligible. March 2, 1948, reported, Senate Report 950. June 2, 1948, passed Senate. May 4, 1948, H. R. 6396, similar bill, reported by House Judiciary Committee, House Report 1854. June 11, 1948, S. 2242 passed House, amended. June 12, 1948, Senate asked for a conference and House agreed to a conference. June 18, 1948, House agreed to conference report, House Report 2410. June 19, 1948, Senate agreed to conference report. May 24, 1948, passed Senate. May 25, 1948, companion resolution, House Joint Resolution 406, reported by House Judiciary Committee, House Report 2026, but Senate Joint Resolution 217 passed House in lieu of House Joint Resolution 406. May 28, 1948, approved, Public Law 558.

H. R. 2157: Portal to Portal Act—Relieved employers from certain liabilities and punishments under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, the Walsh-Healy Act, and the Bacon-Davis Act. February 25, 1947, reported, House Report 71. February 28, 1947, passed House. March 10, 1947, reported amended, Senate Report 48. March 10, 1947, reported amended, Senate Report 48. March 21, 1947, passed Senate amended. March 21, 1947, Senate asked for a conference. March 25, 1947, House agreed to a conference. May 1, 1947, House agreed to conference report, House Report 326. May 1, 1947, Senate agreed to conference report. May 14, 1947, approved, Public Law 49.

H. R. 3999: Authorizes the adjudication of claims of persons of Japanese ancestry against the United States for losses arising out of their forced evacuation from the west coast, Alaska, and Hawaii during World War II. June 27, 1947, reported, House Report 732. July 23, 1947, passed House, June 16, 1948, reported amended, Senate Report 1740. June 18, 1948, passed Senate amended. June 19, 1948, House agreed to Senate amendments. July 2, 1948, approved, Public Law 866.

H. R. 4044: Establishes three-man Commission to survey, classify, and report on types of claims against enemy assets held by the United States. Also directed to adjudicate and authorize payment of claims for detention benefits to civilian citizens of the United States interned on American sovereign soil, and to military personnel for violation of Geneva Convention while prisoners of war. Further authorizes Federal Security Administrator to pay specified additional compensation to employees of civilian contractors captured by the Japanese. July 17, 1947, reported, House Report 976. January 26, 1948, passed House. June 16, 1948, reported amended, Senate Report 1742. June 18, 1948, passed Senate amended. June 19, 1948, House asked for a conference. Senate agreed to a conference. Senate and House agreed to the conference report, House Report 2439. July 3 approved, Public Law 896.

H. R. 6116: Extends from August 8, 1948, to April 30, 1949, the time for filing title claims to vested alien property by friendly foreign nationals. April 30, 1948, reported, House Report 1843. May 18, 1948, passed House. June 7, 1948, reported amended, Senate Report 1532. June 18, 1948, passed Senate amended. June 19, 1948, House agreed to Senate amendments. July 1, 1948, approved, Public Law 874.

(7) Other jurisdictions of committee

The foregoing indicate the general scope of the activities of the committee during the first and second sessions of the Eightieth Congress. In addition to the foregoing, the committee had measures referred to it relating to the following categories:

1. Protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.
2. Holidays and celebrations.
3. Civil liberties.
4. Apportionment of Representatives.

PROPOSED RECESS ACTIVITIES

1. A comprehensive survey of proposed patent, copyright, and trade-mark legislation.

2. Preparation and publication (in committee-print form) of a guide to immigration and the displaced-persons statute.

3. Compilation of a directory of all Federal judges including names, locations, vacancies, etc. It is also intended to publish this in the form of a committee print.

4. Comprehensive survey of the dispersion of wealth in the United States. It is hoped that this will constitute an important economic beacon to the country and to the committee in its study of antitrust and related matters.

5. Preparation of a symposium on legal problems faced by the committee and by the American legal profession. It is intended that the symposium should consist of the finest activities that have been published recently or will soon be published in the American Bar Association Journal and in similar highly esteemed legal periodicals.

6. Research leading to the ultimate printing of a memorandum on proceedings involving perjury committed before congressional committees which will complement a similar completed study in proceedings involving contempt of Congress and its committees.

7. Extensive hearings and study of S. 2728, a bill to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes (overtime on overtime).

8. Survey of certain problems incident to the court of claims. A special subcommittee for this purpose has been constituted and extensive hearings are anticipated. The scope of the survey will involve such considerations as the following:

(a) is the Court of Claims functioning efficiently and expeditiously;

(b) should the Court of Claims be continued;

(c) if it should be continued is there legislation that would improve its operations;

(d) is there a better method or jurisdiction that could handle the matters now within the cognizance of the Court of Claims, and

(e) is the Court of Claims overstaffed or understaffed?

9. A study designed to formulate rules for the reference of certain claims to the United States district courts. It is the intention that a two-man subcommittee will be designated and authorized to hold necessary hearings to accomplish this purpose. This committee would also inquire into the reasons for any unwarranted delay in handling claims referred to the Court of Claims.

10. A comprehensive view by the committee staff of the entire problem of handling claims with carefully drafted recommendations to the chairman for improvement in the Eighty-first Congress.

11. A survey of committee powers and jurisdiction with a view to the effect of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

12. Scouting and digest of committee bills of general application which warrant reintroduction in the Eighty-first Congress. Especial emphasis will be placed in those bills relating to improvements in the judicial machinery.

13. An extensive study of the entire field of immigration and naturalization with the view toward statutory improvement and renovation in the Eighty-first Congress. It is intended that hearings will be held, almost without interruption, on the many facets of this large vexing problem.

14. A review, classification, and clerical processing of all the private bills not enacted into law. For example, private claims which died in committee without action because of incomplete data or lack of departmental reports will almost invariably be reintroduced. The files must be systematized so that the department reports of the Eightieth Congress might be forwarded to the comparative dockets of the Eighty-first Congress for the convenience of the claimant and in the interest of simplicity and nonduplication.

Government Programs Aid Alaska Second Division

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible at this time to determine with any final degree of accuracy how all the money appropriated by Congress for expenditure in Alaska will be allocated. However, it is possible to estimate roughly what will be done in the several sections of the Territory, and I thought it would be of interest to people in the Second Judicial Division to learn what programs are planned for that region. I should like also to make available for their benefit a summary of the general program for Alaska.

Since communications are of great importance in this area of magnificent distances, everyone there will be glad, I am sure, to learn that the Alaska Communication System is going ahead with its rehabilitation and construction program.

At Cape Nome, approximately 17 miles from Nome, the ACS plans to build a receiver station to house communication equipment. Some utilities and housing will also be constructed there.

The Congress made an appropriation of $14,600,000 to the Department of the Navy for continuation of exploratory work in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4. This money will continue to be available until 1951.

The Geological Survey will continue mapping and geological studies in the areas adjacent to the petroleum reserve, and also will continue the program of studying permafrost conditions.

The Congress authorized construction of four tuberculosis-control stations in Alaska. Each one will be built at a cost of $100,000, and each will have 20 beds.

Kotzebue has been selected as the site for one of these control stations.

Barrow has been designated as the place where the other Second Division control station will be erected.

The Congress authorized construction of a seawall at Nome to protect Federal and other property against damaging storms. It is anticipated that an appropriation for actual construction will be made by the next Congress.

Here are listed some of the programs of general application:

First. Assessment work on mining claims has been suspended between the period of July 1, 1948, and July 1, 1949.

Second. A health program for Alaska was approved by Congress, with an appropriation of $1,115,000 being made for protection, treatment, and control of diseases in the Territory. A tuberculosis unit was authorized by this Congress, and cash and contract funds were appropriated. This will be an institution of 400 beds, the largest in Alaska. It will be built at or near Anchorage. Experts say this hospital, together with others now operating, or soon to be in operation, will go a long way toward curbing the menace of tuberculosis in the Territory.

Third. The Alaska game-law enforcement appropriation was increased to $225,000.

Fourth. A bill was passed by the Congress and approved by the President enabling the Territorial legislature to institute when it so desires a general property tax freed from the previous Organic Act restriction which required all property be taxed according to its actual value; obviously, it was not possible to determine the actual value of all mining claims. Under the new law mining claims may be taxed at the price paid to the Government or at a flat rate to be fixed by the legislature. The new law also permits but does not compel municipalities to tax at the rate of 3 instead of 2 percent and allows the legislature to enact a uniform and general property tax at a rate of 2 percent instead of 1 percent.

Fifth. Another of my bills which is now law permits veterans of World War II to apply their military service up to 2 years for residence and cultivation requirements in settling on home sites and headquarters sites. This benefit was already in effect insofar as homesteads and 5-acre tracts were concerned.

Sixth. Title to the Army vessel Hygiene has been transferred to the Territory of Alaska. The ship will now be permanently available to the Territorial department of health as a floating medical and health center.

Seventh. One of my bills which passed Congress on the closing days of the session has general application to all the States and Territories. It places a minimum floor of $100,000 on the amount which will go to any Territory or any State under the hospitalization-construction law already in effect. By means of this law Alaska will receive $100,000 instead of $41,400.

Eighth. Government aid in shipping has been continued until March 1, 1949.

Ninth. The necessity for making export declarations for shipment of goods between continental United States and Alaska and vice versa has been eliminated.

Tenth. Another of my bills which is now law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue unrestricted deeds to tracts of land within Alaska town sites to natives of Indian, Aleut or Eskimo blood. Once the deeds are issued the land can be sold or otherwise disposed of by the native owners and is made subject to municipal taxation.

Eleventh. Funds in the amount of $200,000 have been made available to the Fish and Wildlife Service for the operation of an exploratory vessel.

Twelfth. For continuation of agriculture research program, Congress made available $185,940 in cash plus $300,000 in contract authority for construction of buildings and utilities.

Thirteenth. The Interior Department bill contained $250,000 for establishment of a Bureau of Mines experiment station.

Red Lake Band of Indians of Minnesota to Receive $50 per Capita Payment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, for the second time during the Eightieth Congress, I am glad to report to the membership of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians that each enrolled member will receive a payment of $50 from their own tribal funds sometime this fall.

Late in 1947, a payment of $50 also was distributed, following approval by Congress of the legislation I had introduced early last year.

Several members of the Red Lake Indian group wrote me during the past spring asking that this payment be made. It was pointed out that the money would be needed to buy food and clothing this fall before cold weather set in.

Among those who recently expressed support for the per capita payment legislation were the following:

Peter Graves, venerable and able Secretary-treasurer of the Red Lake Indian Council, Redby; Paul H. Beaulieu, long a leader on the reservation at Red Lake; Dan Raincloud, Ponemah; and Louis F. Stately, Redby.

In support of my bill, H. R. 5355, Mr. Graves submitted a copy of the resolution adopted by the General Council of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians at a meeting held on January 25, 1948 at Red Lake, Minn.

The resolution follows:

Whereas the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians are experiencing hard times on account of high prices of commodities such as food and clothing and even the Indians who are getting relief from the county and State are being hard pressed by the abnormal high prices of food; and

Whereas it is urgent that Congress provide by act to distribute to the Red Lake band some of their tribal funds deposited in the Treasury of the United States: Now, therefore, be it hereby

Resolved, That the honorable commissioner of Indian affairs, the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress of the United States are requested by this council on behalf of the Red Lake band of Chippewa Indians that a per capita payment of $50 be made to each member of the Red Lake band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Indian reservation or from any tribal funds deposited to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That the Honorable HAROLD C. HAGEN, Member of Congress, is hereby requested by the council to introduce in the House of Representatives a bill to authorize a per capita distribution of $50 to the Red Lake band of Chippewa Indians.

Unanimously requested.

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify this to be an exact copy of resolution No. 1, in council proceedings dated January 25, 1948.

BAZIL LAWRENCE,
Chairman.
PETER GRAVES,
Secretary.
RED LAKE, MINN., January 30, 1948.

Chiefs who are members of the general council are: August King, John J. Spears, Charles Jordan, William Sumner, Ben Ricebird, Bazil Lawrence, Spencer Whitefeather.

The officers are: Bazil Lawrence, chairman; Peter Graves, secretary-treasurer.

Many other members of the tribe as well as white citizens and officials of nearby areas previously have expressed, their approval of the legislation.

It was a great pleasure for me to get this approved by the United States House of Representatives and later by the United States Senate and then the President.

Senator JOSEPH H. BALL took charge of the measure in the Senate and by alert action late in the session was able to get approval in the Senate. He did a great job and tribal members have expressed their appreciation for his splendid work and for his friendly and sympathetic attitude and efforts in aiding to solve Indian problems in general. Senator EDWARD THYE also fully cooperated.

Tribal members will be interested in reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD official report on the passage of the bill in the House on June 18. It follows:

PAYMENT OF $50 EACH TO MEMBERS OF RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5355) authorizing a per capita payment of $50 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAGEN]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw as much as may be necessary from the fund on deposit in the Treasury of the United States arising from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber within the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota, according to the provisions of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 137), to the credit of the Red Lake Indians in Minnesota, and to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of $50 to each of the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, living at the date of the passage of this act, immediately payable upon the passage of this act, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That the money paid to the Indians as authorized herein shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other parties: Provided further, That before any payment is made hereunder, the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota shall, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, ratify the provisions of this act and accept same."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The favorable report of the House Committee on Public Lands, before which I appeared at hearings on the proposal, will be of interest also.

It follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5355) authorizing a per capita payment of $50 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

This bill, if enacted, will authorize a per capita payment of $50 each to members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians. These payments will be derived from a capital fund in which are placed proceeds from the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

In April 1948, approximately $1,000,000 was on deposit in this fund. The $50 payment to each member of the band will mean an expenditure of approximately $130,000. Since the lumber and timber proceeds increase the fund by about $100,000 each year and due to the fact that the lumber mills are operating a large portion of this expenditure will be regained during the coming year from funds derived from the sale of tribal timber.

Similar legislation was passed last year to meet the winter hardships suffered by the Indians in this area. Higher prices and the need for winter clothing and other necessary provisions to carry the Indians through the coming winter severities justify the enactment of this legislation.

Information available to the committee indicates that there is no objection to the enactment of this bill on the part of the Department of the Interior and the Committee on Public Lands is unanimous in its recommendation for passage.

Social Security

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, the earlier the problem of financing old-age assistance is recognized and acted upon the easier it will be to solve. The cost of retirement is high, both for individuals and for nations. But the more time we have, the more care we can exercise in selecting the most efficient type of old-age security and the most intelligent social engineering practices.

First, I want to discuss the old-age assistance program, particularly as it affects West Virginia. This session of Congress changed the matching formula to provide that the Federal Government contribute three-quarters of the first $20 and 50 percent of amounts in excess of $20 up to a maximum Federal contribution of $30. If West Virginia would fully utilize the Federal contribution by matching funds, it would provide $50 monthly payments for recipients.

The bill appropriating $185,000,000 which permits the Federal Government to make larger contributions to the States for old-age assistance was vetoed by President Truman. However, I am pleased to remind you that this Congress overrode the veto overwhelmingly.

For the years 1946 and 1947 the average payment per recipient under old-age assistance was $35.31. The payments made in West Virginia were only $19.57. West Virginia's average was the seventh lowest. The aid to dependent children on an average payment per family for 1946 and 1947 was approximately $62.23. The payment in West Virginia was $38.58. This payment was the eighth lowest of any State in the country. The average payment per recipient under aid to the blind in 1946 and 1947 was $36.67, and the payment made by West Virginia was $21.90. This payment was the fifth lowest in the United States.

There is room for material improvement in these payments in most all of the States by increasing the States' matching funds.

To give an idea of old-age assistance payments in the country, they range from Colorado and California, respectively paying $60.55 and $57.06 average to recipients, down to West Virginia $20.29, Kentucky $16.50, Mississippi $15.77, average to each recipient.

Now, we will discuss the old-age and survivors insurance program.

It is to be noted that old-age and survivors insurance is paid as a matter of contractual right by virtue of pay roll taxes collected, whereas old-age assistance is paid by contribution from the Federal Treasury and the Treasury of the respective States.

The current high cost of living has brought increasing demands for larger benefit payments under the old-age and survivors insurance program. The problem of increasing these benefits is complicated by many factors, however, and can only be understood by a knowledge of some of the basic features of this particular program as distinguished from other programs operating under our social security system.

The Social Security Act consists of eight distinct programs but the Federal Government operates only the old-age and survivors insurance. The other seven programs are operated by the States with the Federal Government cooperating and contributing funds.

Stated simply, here is how the old-age and survivors insurance works. Every pay day workers in covered jobs pay 1 percent of their wages—not counting wages over $3,000 a year—as a premium on their old-age and survivors insurance. The employer pays an equal sum and the employer sends both taxes to the Government. Legislation enacted in August of 1947 provided that the tax remain frozen at 1 percent each through 1949, increase 1½ percent each in 1950, and to 2 percent each, or a total of 4 percent, in 1952. These contributions to the fund out of which the benefits are paid are solely dependent upon the extent to which the worker receives wages from covered employment and are not related to the worker's age, or to the size of his family, which will be entitled to benefits at his death. This contributory plan of pay-roll taxes was adopted in 1937 although the original schedule of pay-roll taxes has been revised by Congress on several occasions.

The benefits paid out of this fund are computed on a formula and these benefits extend not only to the employee but to his wife and children as well. Under the present program the insured employee draws monthly payments upon retiring at 65, and a wife draws half the amount of the husband's benefit. The employee benefit, called the "primary" benefit, or "monthly retirement benefit," is based on his average monthly wage up to $250. This benefit is computed by taking 40 percent of the first $50 of his average monthly wage and adding 10 percent of the next $200. Then 1 percent of this total is added for each year in which the employee was paid $200 or more a month on a covered job. Benefits cannot, of course, be estimated definitely until a worker retires, but here is an illustration of what a man with a wife and one child would receive upon the man's retirement at 65 after earning an average wage of $200 a month for 10 years:

40 percent of the first $50 of average monthly wage ($200)	$20.00
10 percent of the balance ($150)	15.00
The basic benefit	35.00
Add 1 percent for each year insured (10 percent)	3.50
The monthly benefit	38.50
Wife's benefit if she is over 65 (one-half monthly benefit)	19.25
Child's benefit until 18	19.25
Total	77.00

In addition to these benefits are survivor's benefits which are paid in the event of the death of the employee.

No actuarial figuring is necessary to show that the cost of benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance fund will eventually be many times as large as it is today. This is true because the proportion of people over 65 will be greater in future years than today, and because a rapidly increasing number of them will be eligible for retirement benefits. Exactly, however, what the future costs to this program will be cannot be more than roughly estimated because of the uncertainty of these and other factors such as the proportion of men and women in covered employment who will reach the age of retiement, the number of persons with fully insured status, the proportion of persons eligible for benefits who will not retire but will elect to work rather than to retire, and so forth. These are but a few of the problems which must be considered before raising the benefit formula under old-age and survivors insurance. We recognize that benefits should be increased, but at the same time it should be clearly understood that to raise these benefit payments arbitrarily without regard to the impact on future costs to the system would be the first step to complete destruction of this social-security program.

During the Eightieth Congress the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, introduced a social-security bill (H. R. 6777) which would extend the coverage under old-age and survivors insurance to approximately 3,500,000 persons not now covered.

Increasing the tax in 1950 from a total of 2 percent to 3 percent, and to 4 percent in 1952, will assuredly afford material increases in all payments. Thus the system is being made available to more people and provisions are being made for more substantial payments.

It is the objective of all of us to expand and improve the program just as rapidly as possible. However, it is the sacred duty of the Congress to provide absolute security and see that the tax money collected through the years is administered in a manner that will assure ample payments can be made when the time for retirement arrives.

Government Programs Aid Alaska Third Division

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, great things are in store for Alaska this year as the result of action taken during the session of Congress so recently concluded. I know of no more appropriate form than this to acquaint the people of the Third Judicial Division of Alaska with some of the projects which are contemplated which will concern them directly, and other undertakings and laws which although of general application will, I am sure, be of real interest to that section of the Territory which is growing faster than any other.

For the sake of clarity and brevity I list in the following some of the good things in store:

First. Construction of the long-sought Turnagain Arm Road, joining Anchorage with the Kenai Peninsula. The Congress appropriated $11,370,000 for this project.

Second. The international airport at Anchorage to be built at a cost of $8,000,000. The airport will be maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. Only one other civilian airport in the United States was built and is being maintained by the CAA—the National Airport at Washington, D. C.

Third. Building of a 400-bed tuberculosis sanatorium in or near Anchorage will be commenced in the reasonably near future. Congress authorized this great institution at a cost of $6,000,000.

Fourth. The Alaska Railroad received $17,000,000 in cash and $12,000,000 in contract authority for its great rehabilitation and reconstruction program.

Fifth. An additional $1,000,000 was made available to continue building the Kenai-Lake-Homer road.

Sixth. The sum of $140,000 was appropriated for further work on the Anchorage-Potter Highway.

Seventh. Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated for farm roads and the farmers of the Third Division will, of course, receive their share.

Eighth. There is an item of $750,000 for hard-surfacing the first 27 miles of the Glenn Highway. Eventually 183 miles of the road are to be so surfaced. Looking toward this, an appropriation of $183,000 was made for necessary surveys.

Ninth. One million five hundred thousand dollars for reconstruction of the Tok Cut-off.

Tenth. Permanent transmitter building and family housing and utilities for the Alaska Communication System at Adak.

Eleventh. A start on required family housing and utilities for the ACS at Anchorage.

Twelfth. Similar installations at Fort Randall, which is located at Cold Bay.

Thirteenth. Like installations at Northway.

Fourteenth. ACS construction of housing and utilities at Naknek.

Fifteenth. Construction of a receiver-station building and powerhouse for the ACS at Kodiak.

Sixteenth. Development of Whittier port facilities by the Army so that the average monthly capacity, exclusive of petroleum products, will be increased to 40,000 tons. On the construction list are a fire station, third ship berth, warehouse, railroad spur and warehouse, salt-water fire system.

Seventeenth. Extensive construction at Fort Richardson and Elmendorf Field.

Eighteenth. Construction by Army engineers at Adak of telephone exchange, improved radio communications facilities, barracks, family housing, and utilities.

Nineteenth. Construction by the Navy at Adak of ship repair facilities, cold storage buildings, storehouses, a permanent naval radio transmitting and receiving station.

Twentieth. Construction by Navy at Kodiak of naval air mobile ground-control approach unit—a radar "talk-down" system for landing aircraft—plus a naval radio station.

Twenty-first. Increased forest highway funds for Chugach National Forest—a total of $1,150,000 will be available in cash and contract authorization for rehabilitation, reconstruction, construction, and maintenance for forest highways in Tongass and Chugach National Forests.

Twenty-second. Geological survey:

(a) Investigation of coal resources in Homer area on Kenai Peninsula—40-square-mile study.

(b) Investigation of gold lode district in Willow Creek mining district north of Matanuska Valley.

(c) Geological mapping and appraisal of petroleum possibilities in Katalla-Yakataga area on the Gulf of Alaska and later completion of survey of petroleum possibilities of the Iniskin-Chinitna district near the base of the Alaska Peninsula, and initiation of appraisal of petroleum possibilities in the Alaska Peninsula-Cook Inlet region.

(d) Volcano investigations in Alaska Peninsula-Aleutian Island region—expansion of small volcano and earthquake observatory at Adak military base—mapping of Pavlof Volcano.

(e) Geologic mapping of Unalaska Island.

(f) Topographic mapping around Yakataga, Kenai Peninsula near Homer, along general route of Glenn Highway from near Palmer to Copper River.

(g) Operation of gaging stations at Power Creek near Cordova; Kenai Lake outlet at Cooper Landing; Trail River, Grant Lake outlet and Ptarmigan Creek, all at or near Lawing; Russian River at Lower Russian Lake; Ship Creek and South Fork of Campbell Creek near Anchorage; Eklutna Lake outlet near Eklutna; Little Susitna River near Palmer; and Cottonwood Creek near Wasilla.

(h) Start of ground water investigations in the Matanuska Valley and Anchorage regions and possible other localities in the third division.

(i) Stream surveys Little Susitna River and chain of lakes near Wasilla; Willow Creek; Lost Creek near Seward; Power Creek near Cordova; Grant Lake and creek near Lawing and Ptarmigan Lake and creek near Lawing; Lost Lake and creek near Cooper Landing and Ship Creek near Anchorage.

Twenty-third. Postmaster General given permission to contract for delivery of mail by boat from Seward to Aleutians via Unalaska in amount of $250,000, an increase over present allowance of $125,000.

Twenty-fourth. Construction of a 20-bed tuberculosis control station to be constructed at Kanakanak.

Here are listed some of the programs of general application:

First. Assessment work on mining claims has been suspended between the period of July 1, 1948, and July 1, 1949.

Second. An energetic health program for Alaska was approved by Congress with an appropriation of $1,115,000 being made for protection, treatment, and control of diseases in the Territory.

Third. The Alaska game law enforcement appropriation was increased to $225,000.

Fourth. A bill was passed by the Congress and approved by the President enabling the Territorial legislature to institute when it so desires a general property tax freed from the previous organic act restriction which required all property be taxed according to its actual value; obviously, it was not possible to determine the actual value of all mining claims. Under the new law mining claims may be taxed at the price paid to the Government or at a flat rate to be fixed by the legislature. The new law also permits but does not compel municipalities to tax at the rate of 3 and not 2 percent and allows the legislature to enact a uniform and general property tax at a rate of 2 percent instead of 1 percent.

Fifth. Another of my bills which is now law permits veterans of World War II to apply their military service up to 2 years for residence and cultivation requirements in settling on home sites and headquarters sites. This benefit was already in effect, insofar as homesteads and 5-acre tracts were concerned.

Sixth. Title to the Army vessel Hygiene has been transferred to the Territory of Alaska. The ship will now be permanently available to the Territorial department of health as a floating medical and health center.

Seventh. One of my bills which passed Congress in the closing days of the session has general application to all the States and Territories. It places a minimum floor of $100,000 on the amount which will go to any Territory or any State under the hospitalization-construction law already in effect. By means of this law Alaska will receive $100,000 instead of $41,400.

Eighth. Government aid in shipping has been continued until March 1, 1949.

Ninth. The necessity for making export declarations for shipment of goods between continental United States and Alaska, and vice versa, has been eliminated.

Tenth. Another of my bills which is now law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue unrestricted deeds to tracts of land within Alaska town sites to natives of Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo blood. Once the deeds are issued the land can be sold or otherwise disposed of by the native owners and is made subject to municipal taxation.

Eleventh. Funds in the amount of $200,000 have been made available to the Fish and Wildlife Service for the operation of an exploratory vessel.

Twelfth. For continuation of agriculture research program, Congress made available $185,940 in cash plus $300,000 in contract authority for construction of buildings and utilities.

Thirteenth. The Interior Department bill contained $250,000 for establishment of a Bureau of Mines experiment station.

Truman Condemns Democrats in Both Houses of Congress for Their Votes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, President Truman has vigorously condemned the Congress for overriding his veto of House Joint Resolution 296, a bill to maintain the status quo in respect of certain employment taxes and social-security benefits pending action by Congress on extended social-security coverage.

The voting record shows that House Joint Resolution 296 could not have been overridden had it not been for the large vote of the Democrats in both branches of the Congress.

Thus the President has seen fit to criticize not only the Republicans but the Democrats for supporting this salutary and highly essential legislation.

I insert the official voting record of the Republicans and the Democrats with reference to the passage of House Joint Resolution 296, and also the record vote of both the Republicans and Democrats on overriding the veto of President Truman:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 296

Passed House February 27, 1948, by vote of 274 to 53:

	Yes	No
Republicans	197	4
Democrats	77	48
American-Labor	---	1
Total	274	53

Passed Senate, amended, June 4, 1948, by vote of 74 to 6:

	Yes	No
Republicans	39	2
Democrats	35	4
Total	74	6

Passed House over veto June 14, 1948, by vote of 298 to 75:

	Yes	No
Republicans	209	5
Democrats	89	69
American-Labor	---	1
Total	298	75

Passed Senate over veto June 14, 1948, by vote of 65 to 12:

	Yes	No
Republicans	37	2
Democrats	28	10
Total	65	12

With reference to H. R. 5052, an act to exclude certain vendors of newspapers or magazines from certain provisions of the Social Security Act and Internal Revenue Code, the President again criticizes the Congress for overriding his veto. Here again the vote to override the veto of H. R. 5052 had the overwhelming support of the Democrats in both branches of Congress.

Here is the voting record in the House of Representatives and in the United States Senate on the passage of H. R. 5052; also the vote in both branches of Congress on overriding the President's veto:

H. R. 5052

Passed House March 4, 1948, by voice vote.

Passed Senate March 23, 1948, by voice vote.

Passed House over veto April 14, 1948, by vote of 307 to 28.

	Yes	No
Republicans	206	2
Democrats	101	24
American-Labor	0	2
Total	307	28

Passed Senate over veto April 20, 1948, by vote of 77 to 7.

	Yes	No
Republicans	48	0
Democrats	29	7
Total	77	7

The voting record speaks for itself.

Veterans' Affairs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, during the Eightieth Congress 498 bills and resolutions were referred to the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs for consideration. The full committee held 106 meetings and the subcommittee 56 hearings. A total of 56 bills, 1 House joint resolution, 1 House concurrent resolution, and 2 Senate bills were reported favorably to the House. Of this number 36 are now public law, 6 additional passed the House, and 1 was vetoed.

It is to be noted that a great number of bills directly benefiting the veteran were considered by committees other than the Veterans' Affairs Committee. Numerous appropriation bills were passed, totaling approximately $14,000,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration.

While a great number of important measures affecting the veterans were passed by the Congress, time and space does not permit the tabulation of all of them.

Most of the bills tabulated here are those of major importance, specifically pertaining to veterans and a few others, which I think would be of interest.

This Congress, comprising war veterans, recognizes its patriotic responsibility in seeing that the millions of men and women who served in the armed forces are treated fairly and generously as our grateful Nation demands.

This Congress enacted 188 laws directly benefiting war veterans and meeting a wide range of needs. Proper treatment of war veterans, the disabled, the widows, and the orphans is a sacred trust of the Congress that it has faithfully kept.

All of the laws enacted by this Congress for the benefit of war veterans were passed after President Truman stated in a message to Congress on January 6, 1947, that, "except for minor adjustments, I believe our program of benefits for the veterans is now complete." The Director of the Veterans' Administration has filed reports against scores of measures introduced into Congress affecting veterans. In these reports, the Director has stated that the proposed legislation was not in accord with the President's program.

But notwithstanding the position taken by President Truman, as expressed in his message and as represented by the Director of the Veterans' Administration in his reports to Congress on veterans' bills, the leadership of this Congress found that the program for veterans' benefits was far from completed. We acted in the interest of the veterans.

Veterans are chief beneficiaries of the comprehensive legislation enacted by this Congress which has resulted in the biggest housing boom in the history of our Nation. War veterans are receiving priority in all construction financed in part by the Government.

On February 23, 1948, I introduced a bill, H. R. 5497, which provided for material increases in compensation and pension rates to veterans of World Wars I and II, and to their dependents. This bill was not considered by the committee. Public Law No. 868, approved July 1, 1948, in a great many respects is similar to my bill.

This tabulation is motivated in part by the fact that 2 years ago my position on veterans' legislation was grossly misrepresented by persons seeking political advantage. This record speaks for itself:

Public Law 277; Seventy-eighth Congress; Soldiers' Ballot Act provided ways and means to permit soldiers to vote a full ballot from any place in the world. Passed House February 1944. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 346: Seventy-eighth Congress (G. I. bill of rights); passed the House May 18, 1944: Provides Federal aid for the readjustment in civilian life of veterans of World War II. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 494: Seventy-eighth Congress; passed House November 27, 1944: Provided mustering-out pay for veterans of World War II. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 268; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House July 18, 1945: Authorized Government guaranteed loans to veterans for purchasing or constructing homes, farms, and business property. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 4761; Seventy-ninth Congress, Housing Stabilization Act to expedite low-cost housing (veterans' housing). Passed House March 7, 1946. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 336; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House March 26, 1946: Providing additional appropriation for veterans housing and related expenses. ELLIS voted "Yes" in committee and in the House.

Public Law 474; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House April 15, 1946: Provided for an increase in pay for personnel of the armed services. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 704; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House June 11, 1946: Provided terminal-leave pay for enlisted personnel of the armed forces. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 697; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House July 26, 1946: Provided needed additional facilities other than housing to educational institutions furnishing courses for veterans of World War II. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 679; Seventy-ninth Congress; passed House August 1, 1946: Authorized Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the Administration of certain training programs for veterans. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 270; Eightieth Congress; passed House June 30, 1947: Increased pensions for Spanish-American War and Civil War veterans and their dependents by 20 percent. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 254; Eightieth Congress; passed House July 7, 1947: Provided for cashing of terminal-leave bonds. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 411; Eightieth Congress; passed House February 3, 1948: Provided increased subsistence allowance to veterans pursuing certain courses under the GI bill. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 512; Eightieth Congress; passed House May 4, 1948: Provided additional subsistence allowance and raised ceilings on wages and allowances of certain veterans. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 796; Eightieth Congress; passed House June 3, 1948: Authorized transfer without consideration of temporary housing for veterans to educational institutions. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 284; Eightieth Congress; passed House July 21, 1948: Exempted from taxation, compensation of servicemen up to $1,500. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 324; Eightieth Congress; approved April 15, 1947: Extend for an additional 5-year period the privilege of renewing 5-year term United States Government life insurance for World War I veterans. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 876; Eightieth Congress; approved July 2, 1948: Increases compensation rates for disability incurred in peacetime service to 80 percent of rates payable for similar disabilities incurred during wartime service. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 5; Eightieth Congress; approved February 21, 1947: Improved conditions for veterans to acquire and adjust life insurance. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 1; passed House March 27, 1947; Eightieth Congress: A bill to reduce income taxes. ELLIS voted "Yes." NOTE.—H. R. 1 was vetoed by President Truman and Congress failed to override veto. ELLIS voted "Yes" to override veto.

Public Law 377; Eightieth Congress; approved August 6, 1947: Includes by statute institutional on-farm training among types of full-time training afforded World War II veterans. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 115; Eightieth Congress; approved June 25, 1947: Authorized an increase for revolving fund from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000 for purpose of making advancements to disabled veterans of World War II taking vocational training. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 338; Eightieth Congress; approved August 4, 1947: Increases the minimum monthly subsistence allowance payable to disabled World War II veterans who are taking vocational training and who have service-connected disabilities. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 3950; passed House July 8, 1947; Eightieth Congress; a bill to reduce income taxes. ELLIS voted "Yes." NOTE.—H. R. 3950 provided for income-tax reduction of $4,800,000,000; 7,400,000 low-income taxpayers were dropped from tax roll; 72 percent of reduction went to persons with incomes under $5,000. This bill was vetoed by President Truman, but veto was overridden by Congress and taxes were reduced. ELLIS voted "Yes" to override veto.

Public Law 288; Eightieth Congress; approved July 30, 1947: Authorizes the acquisition of land at Clarksburg, W. Va., for veterans hospital. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 868; Eightieth Congress; approved July 1, 1948: Increases service-connected death rates of compensation for widows and dependents. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 748; Eightieth Congress; approved June 24, 1948: Establishes by statute a presumption of service connected for certain enumerated chronic and tropical diseases which are shown to exist within 1 year from discharge. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 398; Eightieth Congress; approved July 19, 1948: Provides for increase of 20 percent in rate of pension for veterans of Indian wars and their dependents. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 429; Eightieth Congress; approved March 3, 1948: Amends the National Service Life Insurance Act to extend for 2 years the time within which eligible persons may apply for payment of automatic (gratuitous) insurance service benefits. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 702; Eightieth Congress; approved June 19, 1948: Authorizing assistance to World War II veterans in acquiring especially adapted housing which they require by reason of the nature of their service-connected disabilities. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 762; Eightieth Congress; approved June 24, 1948: Grants pensions to unremarried widows of Spanish-American War Veterans. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 877; Eightieth Congress; approved July 2, 1948: To increase compensation of veterans 60 percent or more disabled and who have dependents. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 729; Eightieth Congress; approved June 19, 1948: Authorizes $1,000,000 annually to Veterans' Administration for prosthetic research. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 864; Eightieth Congress; approved July 1, 1948: Creating secondary market for housing loans made under the GI bill to facilitate home building. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 3814; passed House January 19, 1948; Eightieth Congress: Now pending in Senate, authorizes $5,000,000 appropriation for establishment of a hospital for Negro veterans at the birthplace of Booker T. Washington. ELLIS voted "Yes."

H. R. 6439; passed House June 16, 1948; Eightieth Congress: Now pending in Senate, directs Veterans' Administrator to make complete investigation of so-called West Virginia plan for the construction of low-cost housing. ELLIS voted "Yes."

Public Law 900; Eightieth Congress; July 3, 1948: Provided for an increase of $460 per annum for postal employees and $330 per annum for other Federal workers. ELLIS voted "Yes."

The New Committee on Armed Services

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WALTER G. ANDREWS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article prepared for publication in the Army and Navy Journal, in which article I set forth what, in my opinion, are the main considerations which make the new Committee on Armed Services a better legislative vehicle than the two former Committees on Military and Naval Affairs:

On August 2, 1946, the President signed the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. This date marks the birth of the new Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives. It also marks the demise of the historic, long-established Committees on Military and Navail Affairs of the two Houses of Congress.

This date has some significance. I invite attention to the fact that the merger of the old Committees on Military and Naval Affairs into the new Armed Services Committee took place almost a year before the National Securty Act of 1947 (the Unification Act) became law. It was, then, the first important move toward statutory unification of the services.

The Military Affairs and Naval Affairs Committees had long and distinguished histories. Created in 1822, they legislated for the armed forces for 124 years. But there had always been a fundamental weakness in their operation. The Naval Affairs Committee had always concerned itself exclusively with matters pertaining to naval and Marine Corps affairs. The Military Affairs Committee had always confined itself exclusively to Army and Air Force affairs. There was no official liaison between the two. So, by 1946, they had become the very symbol, the epitome, within the Congress itself, of the uncorrelated, the intensely competitive, the individualistic approach to service problems that existed before unification.

That this situation existed in the Congress itself was, in some regards, even more damaging than the absence of central control over the services in a single department of the Government. It is fully understandable that Members of Congress themselves, after many years of service on one of the two service committees, became one-branch-of-the-service conscious. Years of close association with the legislative needs of one particular branch made this unavoidable. Quite naturally, a competitive situation arose within the Congress—aided and abetted by the services, of course—in the handling of the legislation of the armed forces.

When the two old Committees on Military and Naval Affairs were merged, it became quickly evident that a broad, over-all outlook on service matters could be insured only through the creation of subcommittees charged with all Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps matters in a particular subject field, such as personnel, procurement, pay, retirement, education, and training. Twelve such subcommittees were therefore created. Members were appointed thereto even before the Eightieth Congress had convened. The basic concept was functional—not service—organization; no longer was there to be any congressional subcommittee or committee charged exclusively with the legislative problems of one service. Each of the new subcommittees was charged with all service legislative matters within certain subject fields.

The benefits of this new organization became quickly apparent after the Eightieth Congress convened. For the first time in the history of the Congress, members from the old Naval Affairs Committee found themselves working with Army procurement matters. Members from the old Military Affairs Committee were now confronted by Navy procurement matters. Both were now working in full concert on Air Force procurement and Marine Corps procurement matters. So it went. It was a new approach, and it was applied to questions of pay, retirement, promotion, ROTC, and the civilian components, the Medical Departments, the service Academies, and so on.

It was a stimulating experience, those first several months, watching and participating in the broadening outlook this new system produced. Almost at once former Naval Affairs Committee members became aware that different standards of pay, promotion, retirement, etc., applied to the Army than to the Navy, and former Military Affairs members became conversant with the details of the legislative authority which had been long in effect for Navy personnel but not for Army personnel.

A whole variety of discrepancies and inequities between the services came suddenly into bold relief. They were the natural result of 124 years of separate legislating by the old committees. It was discovered that Navy personnel had certain retirement rights of great value which the Army had been denied. It was found that certain property disposal limitations had been imposed upon the Navy but not upon the Army. Variations of great importance in the service promotion systems were suddenly high lighted within the committee itself—all these things for the first time in the history of Congress. Marked differences in methods of training the Reserves, of operating ROTC programs, of administering the Military and Naval Academies showed up before these busy, functionally organized subcommittees. And results began to flow therefrom, long before the Unification Act was passed.

In fact, months before the unification law the committee, through its subcommittees, began to require the Army to comment on Navy legislation pending before the committee. Navy views were sought on Army legislation. The same procedure was followed in respect to Air Force legislation. So legislative unification—or, at least, unified control over service legislative problems—had become commonplace long before the Congress completed the unification law which attracted so much later attention.

There was, for example, the new procurement law reported to the House of Representatives by the House Committee on Armed Service months before the Department of Defense was created. It brought all service procurement into one law, correcting a large variety of discrepancies which had long damaged interservice relationships as well as confounded private citizens who attempted to supply service procurement needs. It happened again in the drafting of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947. A new promotion system for all the services was thereby established. Here again, all the services' problems were aired and debated before former naval affairs and former military affairs members serving on the same subcommittee. Scores of basic differences between the services were eliminated before the bill was completed. Some had been the source of great bitterness between the Army and Navy for years. A middle ground on the points at issue was sometimes sought and attained. And some long-standing benefits were withdrawn from the Army that had never been available to the Navy. Some benefits were withdrawn from the Navy that had never been available to the Army. And care was taken to insure that the new benefits conferred by the law were granted equally to all the services. Serious discrepancies in rank were ironed out; the rate of promotion was equalized insofar as possible; conditions of entrance into the services were made more uniform.

This emphasis on uniform standards applicable to all the services extended, before unification, even into the differing school systems of the services. A series of sessions was held by one subcommittee with the services very early in 1947. Detailed explanations were obtained in regard to all service schools, from the most basic through the most advanced. Extensive questioning followed naturally, in the new committee, as to the feasibility of combining into joint schools the training of cooks, truck repairmen, certain radiomen, and so on, months before unification became an accomplished fact.

Also antedating unification was the Army-Navy Medical Service Corps bill, giving permanent service status to the various professional groups allied to medicine within the services. There was also the Army-Navy Nurse Corps bill. And many others.

In many important respects, these novel developments within the new Committee on Armed Services set the pattern for things to come in the subsequently created Department of Defense. It gave the services an object lesson, so to speak, as to the manner in which the Congress desired unification to work in the future. It helped a great deal. The services soon began to iron out their basic differences in legislation before bills came to the Congress in preference to airing the differences publicly before the committee. This was indeed a departure from the time-honored practice of "dog eat dog" in the Congress, each service striving to out-do the other in obtaining legislative benefits. The effect of this was to bring the services closer together within the executive branch. A clearer, and therefore more sympathetic, comprehension by one service of the needs of the other became necessary in order to move service legislation through the Congress.

It was generally understood by as early as March 1947 that the new Committee on Armed Services would refuse to deal with legislation on a one-service basis. Bills before the committee prompted by only one of the three services would elicit testimony, upon committee request, from all of the services in order to insure that the legislation would not be objectionable or discriminatory to the other branches. A few of these experiences were highly educative. We soon noted an improved presentation of bills by the departments, a readiness to give and take among the services, a much greater awareness of one another's difficulties and needs.

And over the months that followed, this tendency steadily developed, until the practice is now firmly established for the committee and the departments to deal on a unified basis with service legislative matters. This is truly unification in action. Actually, in my opinion, unification has worked better in the legislative sphere than anywhere else in Washington. The reason is simple. The Committee on Armed Services have compelled it.

The new staff of the committee has been significant in these developments. These men were selected by the committee membership on a merit basis alone, without regard to political affiliations. Each of them served in World War II. One served in the Navy; two in the Army; two in the Marine Corps; one in the Air Force. They are young and vigorous. They are civilians to the core, but their recent, practical experience in varying capacities with the services has brought military and naval realism and understanding into their important activities with the committee.

Before the reorganization of the Congress which authorized congressional committees to employ such assistants, committee work was done on a hit-and-miss basis, oftentimes by special short-term employees hired for specific tasks, oftentimes by persons selected on a political basis. Even though there was a surprising number of capable men affiliated with the old committees under this haphazard system, nevertheless the system provided no continuity, no means by which committee staff members could grow into their assignments and become, in truth, experts in their respective fields.

The result was unavoidable. In the old Military Affairs Committee, much of the committee work had to be done by a Regular Army officer. A similar situation developed in the old Naval Affairs Committee. To the layman, this may not appear to be unsound. But in practice, it results in congressional reliance upon the departments, sometimes to the detriment of sound, unbiased consideration of legislation. These officers, I know personally, were outstanding men. They were eminently qualified and prodigious workers. Without them the committees simply could not have functioned properly under the old committee system. But their activities unavoidably thrust the departments too far—far too far, actually—into the mainsprings of the legislative work of the committees. It made the committees' efforts to find a suitable middle ground between service need and national need even more difficult, if possible, then it is under the best of conditions. It brought War and Navy Department attitudes within, not to, the committees.

This situation is now infinitely improved. The staff members of the committee hold career appointments. They are independent of political and departmental influences. They work exclusively for the committee and are therefore situated in such manner that the committee has available at all times impartial, independent, informed advisers on the great basic issues constantly arising in legislative form. Legislative analyses, briefs of important measures, pointed searching questions of Service witnesses have now become the rule on all bills before the committee. The committee now has, for the first time, a group of nonpartisan men to whom it can turn for its information on legislation—not to the departments. And the committee has persons immediately available, in its career staff, to assist in connection with debates on the floor of the House of Representatives. Thus, it has become possible for the committee to divorce itself from departmental influences from within, keeping them beyond the perimeter of the committee itself, as sound legislation requires.

I do not mean to infer any untoward activities by the departments in connection with these matters. Such activities were as necessary as they were unavoidable in the past. But I do emphasize that it is virtually impossible for military and naval personnel to function independently of the official attitudes of their respective military and naval chieftains, and I therefore attach great importance to the professional staff process.

As to the progress made under the new system, I can point only to the record of the Eightieth Congress—the only Congress in which the new Armed Services Committee has functioned. But the record is surprising. One of every seven laws passed by the entire Congress emerged from the Armed Services Committees. And each was considered carefully; it was not a shotgun process of acting on bills in a helter-skelter manner.

The laws passed were significant in scope as well as in number. They included the draft bill, affecting the entire Nation; the promotion bill, affecting all officers in the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps; the procurement bill, covering all procurement of all the services; the military justice bill, reconstructing the Army court-martial system; the WAC-WAVE bill, placing women into the Regular service for the first time in history; the retirement bill, reworking Army retirement and providing, for the first time, for Reserve retirement as well; the Army-Navy Nurse Corps bill, establishing for the first time a permanent corps for the nurses of the Army and Navy; the inactive duty training pay bill, providing for inactive duty training pay for Army and Air Forces reservists; the bill authorizing the construction of a 65,000-ton aircraft carrier by the Navy; a 70-air-group authorization (which failed of passage in the Senate); a universal training bill (which failed of passage in the House of Representatives); increase in pay of midshipmen and cadets and reconstruction of the boards of visitors to the Military and Naval Academies; public-works bills for the Army and Navy, authorizing world-wide construction projects such as testing ranges for guided missiles, housing in Alaska, and similar undertakings of great importance to the national defense program. There are many more. I cite these only as examples of the scope of the work of the committee in its first Congress. Actually, 128 laws were passed, of the eight-hundred-odd passed by the entire Congress. The committee held over 350 separate meetings throughout the Congress, an average of more than one for each legislative day of the Congress.

In addition to this legislative work, four investigations were completed by subcommittees during this Congress. One covered the petroleum requirements of the armed forces. Its report, based on over 2 months of testimony from some 50 witnesses from Government and industry, has been widely publicized as the most comprehensive and thorough study of the subject yet made by a congressional committee. Over 4,000 copies of the report have already been distributed upon request.

An investigation was made of synthetic-rubber facilities available in the Nation to determine what should be done with them as a national reserve for use in the event of another emergency. This study produced the Rubber Act of 1948, a bill vitally important to the national security, for rubber was perhaps the most critical item in the Nation when World War II began. Then, there was an investigation of disability retirements of officers and enlisted men in the services. Numerous legislative recommendations ensued which will result in corrective legislation in the Eighty-first Congress. Some 2,500 questionnaires were sent throughout the Nation during the course of this investigation, addressed to retired officers of the Army and Navy in grades of colonel and captain and above.

There was also an investigation of service facilities in the San Francisco, Calif., area. The ensuing report went to the very heart of unification, recommending a large number of actions, some of which have already been implemented by the services since the report was rendered.

All this augurs well for the future. The committee is efficient; it applies itself industriously to the task at hand; the committee members have had years of experience in dealing with service problems, and service rivalry on the congressional level has been eliminated. Members of the committee staff have performed in a highly satisfactory manner, and with each passing month will become increasingly valuable as acknowledged experts in their various legislative fields.

So much has been accomplished during the Eightieth Congress that I cannot see how the tempo of requests for service legislation can or should be maintained. However, I have no fear that the committee will function in a vacuum. Committee responsibility does not cease with the enactment of legislative measures. Equal importance must be given to the manner in which those enactments are administered by the respective service departments. Continuing research, studies, observations, and investigations are vital parts of the committee function and must be pursued. So, while much has been accomplished the field for constructive endeavor remains fertile. And effective unification, efficient service administration, and sound, well-considered legislation will continue to be the end product.

Government Programs Aid Alaska Fourth Division

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thought this would be an appropriate means to inform the people of the Fourth Division of Alaska about some of the programs that are going ahead there during this fiscal year as the result of legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress. Without attempting to give a detailed account of all the various projects that soon will be started, I do wish to call attention to some of the more significant.

One of the last acts of the Congress before adjournment last month was to approve a deficiency bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the construction of a great new airport which will be located near Fairbanks. I am informed that bids will soon be called for so that construction of the airport may start with the least possible delay. It will be built and maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

At the University of Alaska will be located a geophysical institute where Federal Government agencies and private institutions will have opportunity to do basic research under the advantageous conditions found there. The Congress appropriated $975,000 for the geophysical institute plant. This will be the first scientific institution in the United States so located that investigations will be made on the spot relating to the Arctic and sub-Arctic. Construction of the Coast and Geodetic Survey observatory and auxiliary buildings will be undertaken, adding to the opportunities for scientific research.

At this moment the Department of National Defense has not made firm allocations for specific projects from funds granted by the second session of the Eightieth Congress. But it can be stated that many millions of dollars will be spent at Ladd Field and at Eielson Field. Among the projects listed for favorable consideration is construction of housing and other utilities at Eielson Field and at Ladd Field. It is also intended to erect a fire station and a school at Ladd Field.

At Big Delta there will be considerable building for the Alaska Communication System station.

And at Bethel an ACS transmitter building and powerhouse are slated for construction.

This year will mark the start of the first real road program in Alaska's history. The sum of $2,250,000 has been allocated for hard surfacing the first 70 miles south of Fairbanks of the 365-mile Richardson Highway. Additionally, $347,000 has been set aside for surveys.

The dream of interior pioneers for a highway connection between Fairbanks and Wiseman will soon be realized. The Congress made available $300,000—plus $5,100 for surveying—for constructing the first 44 miles of this road out from Livengood.

The Fairbanks-Chena Hot Springs Road will be a reality before long. The ARC now has $105,000 for road surveys on this project.

For surveying from Big Delta to Boundary, a distance of 203 miles, there has been an allocation of $203,000.

The Fourth Division will share in the $200,000 appropriation for farm roads.

The Geological Survey has a big program ahead. It will continue to investigate the coal fields in the Nenana River area. It will conduct geological mapping and mineral resources appraisals in the Kuskokwim region adjacent to Nyac. An area of about 3,000 square miles will be covered. The Geological Survey will continue its permafrost program in the vicinity of Fairbanks and the Nenana River. Likewise, there will be geological mapping in the Tanacross area and in the vicinity of Big Delta. The Geological Survey will operate a gaging station on the Chena River and will make a groundwater investigation around Fairbanks.

At least one of the newly authorized tuberculosis control stations will be in the Fourth Division. The station already approved will be located at Bethel and will be built at a cost of $100,000. It will contain 20 beds.

A special appropriation was made to the Bureau of Reclamation for the first time to conduct power surveys in Alaska. It has been announced that some of this work will be carried on in the Fourth Division.

From the strictly legislative standpoint, it might be mentioned that the Fourth Division is now somewhat larger than previously, because of the transfer of land near the Canadian border in accordance with the provisions of a bill introduced by me. Also another of my bills conveyed to the city of Fairbanks from the United States Government a lot which was desired by Fairbanks municipal authorities for school purposes.

Money expended in one section of the Fourth Division will naturally benefit directly or indirectly all other sections. And that is true of Alaska as a whole. This Congress appropriated over $200,000,000 for Alaska in the fiscal year ahead.

Here are listed some of the programs of general application:

First. Assessment work on mining claims has been suspended between the period of July 1, 1948, and July 1, 1949.

Second. An energetic health program for Alaska was approved by Congress with an appropriation of $1,115,000 being made for protection, treatment, and control of diseases in the Territory. A tuberculosis unit was authorized by this Congress, and cash and contract funds were appropriated. This will be an institution of 400 beds, the largest in Alaska. It will be built at or near Anchorage. Experts say this hospital, together with others now operating or soon to be in operation will go a long way toward curbing the menace of tuberculosis in the Territory.

Third. The Alaska game-law enforcement appropriation was increased to $225,000.

Fourth. A bill was passed by the Congress and approved by the President enabling the Territorial legislature to institute, when it so desires, a general property tax freed from the previous organic act restriction which required all property be taxed according to its actual value; obviously it was not possible to determine the actual value of all mining claims. Under the law, mining claims may be taxed at the price paid to the Government or at a flat rate to be fixed by the legislature. The new law also permits but does not compel municipalities to tax at the rate of 3 and not 2 percent and allows the legislature to enact a uniform and general property tax at a rate of 2 percent instead of 1 percent.

Fifth. Another of my bills which is now law permits veterans of World War II to apply their military service up to 2 years for residence and cultivation requirements in settling on homesites and headquarters sites. This benefit was already in effect insofar as homesteads and 5-acres tracts were concerned.

Sixth. Title to the Army vessel Hygiene has been transferred to the Territory of Alaska. The ship will now be permanently available to the Territorial Department of Health as a floating medical and health center.

Seventh. One of my bills which passed Congress on the closing days of the session has general application to all the States and Territories. It places a minimum floor of $100,000 on the amount which will go to any Territory or any State under the hospitalization construction law already in effect. By means of this law Alaska will receive $100,000 instead of $41,400.

Eighth. Government aid in shipping has been continued until March 1, 1949.

Ninth. The necessity for making export declarations for shipment of goods between continental United States and Alaska and vice versa has been eliminated.

Tenth. Another of my bills which is now law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue unrestricted deeds to tracts of land within Alaska townsites to natives of Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo blood. Once the deeds are issued the land can be sold or otherwise disposed of by the native owners, and is made subject to municipal taxation.

Eleventh. Funds in the amount of $200,000 have been made available to the Fish and Wildlife Service for the operation of an exploratory vessel.

Twelfth. For continuation of agriculture research program, Congress made available $185,940 in cash plus $300,000 in contract authority for construction of buildings and utilities.

Thirteenth. The Interior Department bill contained $250,000 for establishment of a Bureau of Mines experiment station.

The Eighteth Congress Approved the Largest Peacetime Appropriations for National Defense in the History of the Nation

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the Eightieth Congress, despite its determination to economize, wisely decided that our armed services should not be hampered in providing an adequate national defense. As a result, over $15,000,000,000 was appropriated during the second session of the Eightieth Congress to meet the needs of the Army, Navy, and Air Corps.

The Army received over $7,000,000,000, the Navy, nearly $5,000,000,000, and the Air Force, over $3,000,000,000. The total appropriations of over $15,000,000,000 represent the largest peacetime appropriations in the history of the Nation. The attitude of the Eightieth Congress in approving this large sum is indicative of the fact that while economy in Government is necessary, it should not be achieved at the expense of our national defense.

It is interesting to observe that the appropriation for the Army amounting to $7,318,607,163 represents cash of $5,798,607,163, while food for occupied Germany is listed at $1,300,000,000. Of the total Army appropriations, the sum of $220,000,000 is for contract authority.

The Navy Department received over $4,375,000,000 to be expended as follows: Naval Appropriations Act, over $3,500,000,000 in cash; cash for aircraft procurement, $315,000,000; cash under public works appropriations, $51,000,000; contract authority for aircraft procurement, nearly $600,000,000; with an additional $50,000,000 for contract authority for public works.

The Eightieth Congress, in approving the 70-group Air Force, authorized the negotiation of contracts for over $1,500,000,000, and at the same time provided cash appropriations of over $1,500,000,000 for a total appropriation of $3,191,911,000.

The following is a résumé of national-defense legislation enacted during the second session of the Eightieth Congress:

Bill No.	Short title	Public Law No.
H. R. 774	Authorized the disposition of condemned ordnance.	421
H. R. 1275	Payment of claims for medical treatment of persons in naval service.	511

Report on the War of Ideas in Europe and Asia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, when I returned from study trips last fall to 22 countries in Europe and 3 in Asia in connection with the work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I made an oral report to the committee on November 14, 1947, during its hearings on the Emergency Foreign Assistance Act. Because of numerous requests for the report and because the observations and recommendations made then are, I believe, just as pertinent and sound today, I include the report from the hearings of the committee:

STATEMENT OF HON. WALTER H. JUDD, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I want to join my colleagues in expressing appreciation for the great privilege, as a member of this committee, of going on study trips this fall, to Europe and to Asia, and for the chance to visit the front lines in the midst of the social, economic, and political war which Russia and her stooge governments and parties in various parts of the world have declared on us and on everything we believe in and stand for.

The outcome of this warfare is still in doubt. Their totalitarian philosophy, and even more totalitarian practices, have made a great deal more progress, in my judgment, than we are inclined to think.

The Soviet's war for men's minds and hearts and for control of their lives, goes on 24 hours a day. Most Americans assumed that when the Japanese and the Germans surrendered, the war was over, just like the final whisle in a football game, and there was nothing to do but to go home. This never was that kind of war.

SUCCESS OF SOVIET PROPAGANDA IN EUROPE

During our trips to Europe and the Far East, all of us I am sure noted many illustrations of the success they have had with their propaganda—for example, the cleverness with which in both Europe and Asia the Communists have attacked us at the one point where they could more successfully turn many people against us than at any other, namely, by playing on their fear of Germany and of Japan. The only way to turn against us the Poles and Czechs and French, who historically have been so well disposed toward us, is to persuade them that we are building up Germany, giving priority to her, the aggressor, over those nations which were her victims. The propaganda, which the Soviets carry out day and night, reiterates skillfully that we are preparing Germany to become again a great military state, to be our buffer, or even ally, in the war against Russia which we are alleged to be preparing. The fact that we know the charges are wholly untrue should not blind us to the fact that they are making headway. They hammer away at it constantly, and we found Frenchmen, Poles, and Czechs, even Norwegians, Danes, and Dutch, who all their lives have been among America's best friends, profoundly disturbed, wondering whether we really are building up Germany and giving her preference as an enemy over those nations which have been and still are our allies. If the propaganda succeeds, the people in those countries who have suffered so from German aggression will go with Russia, not with us.

The same thing in Asia. The propaganda goes on that General MacArthur is building up Japan as an ally or a buffer against Russia, giving her priority over China. It has a very devastating effect in China; because the one thing which, more than any other, could turn the Chinese against us would be if they came to believe we are making a deal to build up Japan as a military power or giving her preference over them, after all that Japan did to hurt them and us, and all China did to help us.

MISINTERPRETATIONS OF MARSHALL PLAN

Then there is the propaganda that our so-called Marshall plan is for selfish and sinister motives; that we are exporting to Europe only to ward off a depression in the United States; that we are doing it to capture European markets for American capitalists and then these capitalists will put everybody in shackles in Europe as they assert has been done in America. If they knew how hard it is to get the support of big business for such a program as this, I do not think they could get away with the story that it is just a capitalistic trick. When they claim that capitalists went to war to eliminate Japan and Germany and their competition in the world markets, and that now the same capitalists are working to restore Japanese and Germany industry, it does not make sense. But they are utterly cynical in their propaganda. The main thing is not whether it is true, but whether they can make people believe it is true—until they can get into power.

It was interesting in some of the countries whose economies were just about to fall to pieces, to find their greatest worry was not about what is happening to them right now, but about the terrible depression which they are told is about to hit the United States. Some of them do not have enough to carry them through the end of this year without help from us, yet they seem less critical of their system which has brought them to such disaster, than of ours which is certainly better off than theirs but which they are sure is just about to collapse. Why? Because Karl Marx, somewhere over on page so and so, said that after a great war there always comes a great depression in the capitalistic system, and therefore a depression just must take place here.

It was difficult to persuade them that our American economy would be far better off if we did not export anything at all to them in the next 3 or 4 years, even supposing they were able to pay for it; that if they and we do not want us to have a depression, then we certainly ought not to adopt the Marshall plan or this interim aid bill; and that the surest way to get a real depression in America is to overexpand our productive capacity on farms and in factories in order to export to them and build up their production till they won't need our supplies, leaving us with overexpanded productive capacity, then unemployment and then depression.

If they want help under the Marshall plan, then they and we have to take the risk of such a depression here in 4 or 5 years. If they so greatly fear a depression in America, then they should not ask us to grant their requests under the Marshall plan.

AMERICAN ACTIONS TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

They want us to help them now, thereby increasing the danger of an American depression; yet at the same time they half believe the Communist propaganda that we are helping them in order to stall off a depression, and to make them semicolonies of the United States.

Those on our subcommittee have heard me put to the members of almost every cabinet group we met, this proposition: "If we do not help Europe, we are called selfish isolationists; if we do offer to help, then we are selfish imperialists. But we must either help or not help. So whatever we do or do not do, whether we give or do not give, it is interpreted as indicating we have selfish and sinister motives. Just what can we do to convince you we do not have any such evil designs on Europe?"

A member of the Norwegian Cabinet, when we were talking about this, said the basic reason most people in Europe do not understand us is because they have not lived in America, as he said he had for 6 years. He said they have no concept of the basic generosity, almost sentimentality, of the American people; that seldom have they ever known any European country to do anything except on the basis of what it intends to get in return. "Therefore," he said, "they think your help is too good to be true; it just cannot be that a country would consider pouring out $20,000,000,000 in goods and money unless there is in the scheme somewhere an opportunity for it to make great gain in money, territory, or power."

When people tend to feel there just must be some dark ulterior motive somewhere, and the Communists are telling them 24 hours a day that there is such a motive and that it is to establish United States control over Europe, then you can be sure that the propaganda makes great headway, especially when we ourselves do so feeble a job of telling them the truth.

CHANGE IN COMMUNIST PARTY LINE

I think the recent Warsaw declaration of the Communist Parties of Europe, when they established the so-called Cominform, may indicate a basic change in the party line. The Communists have run up against the hard fact that in some places there is a force which gives promise of being stronger than theirs, and that force is nationalism. They can get a lot of Frenchmen to go the Communist way as long as they think it is an economic philosophy, but when they discover it puts Russia ahead of France, then many of the French followers are likely to put France first, and many of the supporters of communism in Italy prove to be first Italians. Witness the recent swing back in some countries from international communism to nationalism.

Therefore, under the Warsaw declaration, the Communists switch from emphasis on internationalism to a frank appeal to nationalism. Where previously the line has been that first loyalty of all Communists everywhere must be to the workers of the world, this new manifesto indicates that from now on adopting communism is to be portrayed as the way to promote the interests not of a class, as heretofore, but of individual nations. Frenchmen must join to save France from American capitalism. The Poles, even while utterly enslaved by the Russian puppets, are told communism will serve their Polish nationalism.

The Communist strategists see that the nationalistic feelings of the people of a country have turned them toward us as a means of getting help to save their country. The Communists now frankly try to capture that nationalism for themselves, utilize it instead of opposing it. They are smart; they reverse themselves overnight when they think it is to their advantage.

THREE STAGES IN COMMUNIST TACTICS

The technique in Europe and America by which they try to take over a country, or an organization, is the same as I saw it in China way back in the twenties. You may be interested in the way the Chinese describe it. They say the Communist procedure or technique has three stages, three "heads," described by three terms in which the Chinese word "t'ou," meaning "head," appears.

The first stage is called "k'ou t'ou," which has become the English word "kowtow." It means to bow the head, even to the ground. This is the stage of cooperation, infiltration, working for a united front, or for a coalition. They profess to be interested solely in working for the downtrodden, the peasant, the minorities. They harp on all the injustices or discriminations or imperfections that can be found in the existing society. They find out what each group desires most and adopt that as their slogan—for the time being.

In Paris they shout "Join the Communists and we will see that your wages are higher and your food prices lower." Then they go out to the farmers and say "Join us; we will see that your grain prices are higher." If anyone notices the contradiction, he is an evil capitalist.

That is the stage of "k'ou t'ou," trying to get people to come along or coopera.e with them on the basis of extravagant promises. Teheran, Yalta, and Potsdam were in this stage on the international front.

The second stage is called "yao t'ou," which means to wag the head back and forth, as in declining or refusing. It is the stage of stalling, delay, noncooperation, almost but not quite to the point of rupture. It prevents any progress in getting a settlement; it buys time in which they work feverishly to improve their position. Anyone who has tried to work with Communists, whether in a labor union, or a political group, or a veterans' organization, recognizes this stage.

We went through it at London, Paris, Moscow, for months at a time. The Korean Joint Commission was stalled along thus for 5 months. No proposal by others quite satisfies them. There must be further study, speeches, conferences, delays. By weakening or wearing out their associates, they maneuver things to a place where they can stage a coup or get control of election machinery so a rigged election gives them dominance.

When they move into complete control, as in Bulgaria a few months ago, and in Rumania last week, then the third stage begins, called "sha t'ou," or cut off the head. They promptly cut off the heads, politically if not actually, of their former associates in the coalition. Witness Petkov and Maniu as the most recent examples.

Those three terms were the best and most succinct description I had heard of the skillful techniques by which the Communists everywhere proceed through pretended cooperation into a coalition where they systematically bring about deterioration until an organization or nation is weakened, the people confused and desperate, so they can seize power. Then they move swiftly to the ruthless destruction of all opposition.

So this war of ideas is critical because, if we don't win it in western Europe and Asia now, before they reach the third stage, then we will have a military war, and under most difficult circumstances.

HOW STRENGTHEN AMERICAN "VOICE"

To win the war of ideas will require a far larger concept of the real task, a much bigger program, in my opinion, than has been generally realized. It must be a program both of action and of words.

When we were talking with the prime minister of one country about the American information program and how we could improve it, he said: "If there are also coal and wheat, then the information program is invaluable; but if our people do not have coal and wheat, then the information program alone won't do the job." That is certainly true. But it is also true that no matter how good our deeds, the words are also necessary.

May I in passing suggest two or three improvements necessary in the information program, if it is to succeed. First of all, it must be run by people who really believe in the United States of America, people who are as enthusiastic about our basic system of freedoms and have the same sort of zeal for and devotion to the basic political and economic concepts on which this Nation was founded and grew healthy and strong, as the adherents of communism and nazism have for those systems.

Then we have got to have people handling the program who are professionally top-notch, people who can do a bang-up job, just as good a job of selling our basic ideas of freedom and democracy as others do of selling soap.

We must study and build our program, not only on what we have to tell, but on what those people want to hear. For example, in Bulgaria people said, "Why do you spend 15 minutes of your Voice of America program giving us American jazz? Our people do not understand or want to hear American jazz. They don't listen."

I thought of the Norwegians and the Swedes up in my district in Minnesota. How many hours the local radio stations play the polkas and the schottisches of the old country, which they naturally love to hear. Why do we not give the people in other countries more of the kind of programs and books and films and press releases and lectures that they understand and want? That is the way to get them to listen or see or read our material, and have confidence in it. Then they will hear what we say when we have most important ideas to present to them. The British are doing a better job professionally than we, in plenty of places.

It has been suggested that we change the name of our radio program from the Voice of America to the Voice of Freedom or the Voice of Liberty, and I approve. It should be such a program that people in other countries will want to listen to it not because it is from America, but because it mobilizes the spirit of all who love and will fight for freedom. Let them feel that they are participating in this crusade even through listening.

It is our ideas that we want to sell, not ourselves; and not just indoctrination in some American customs and habits in which they are not particularly interested.

Then, again, in our attempt to avoid any possible criticism that we are giving too favorable and not a balanced picture, we have leaned over backward too far. If anybody in the United States, no matter how insignificant or unimportant, makes a statement criticizing our Government or our policies, that is always given prominence, even though it may not represent the opinion of 1 percent of the people.

I see no need to do that sort of thing, and certainly no advantage. We should not attempt to give a false picture—we do not need to. And we should not attempt to conceal anything that is true about America. But we ought to get our picture into proper balance with stress on the great advantages of life under such a government as ours, despite the admitted weaknesses.

For example, Ivory Soap is not sold on the basis of advertising that it is 0.56 percent impure, although that fact is not in the least denied or concealed. It is sold by emphasizing that it is 99.44 percent pure. Likewise, we can properly, with perfect truthfulness and with far more effectiveness, call attention to the good without in the least concealing the bad.

AMERICAN HELP TURNED THE TIDE

Mr. Chairman, it has been our help, since last March, which I think has turned the tide against communism in Greece and France and Italy. When we talked to the Italian Cabinet it happened to be the second day after an all-night, or practically all-night, session, at which three motions of nonconfidence in the Government had come to a final vote. The Government of Italy had hung in the balance. It was a crucial moment. Just before the vote the announcement was made of America's relinquishment of her claim to a share of the Italian Navy. The delegates, all but the Communists, rose and cheered. De Gasperi and his Cabinet won.

We congratulated them on the victory and were told: "It was not a victory for us; it was a victory for America." It was what America had done during the preceding months in support of free peoples in Europe which had won. It had given them hope, they had rallied their courage and had saved the Italian Government from going down.

We have turned the tide toward freedom. Now it is incumbent upon us, it is imperative for us to accelerate that tide, to carry through to full success. It is useless to give to any of these countries less than enough to enable them to resist the threat of their independence. In fact, it is worse than useless, because after we built them up, then somebody else would take them over and use what we gave them against us.

It is likely to be useless also if we do not give enough to win on all fronts, on all the boundaries of that great land mass which is controlled by a handful of individuals in Russia forcing their will upon all their own people and on their neighbors.

ASIA VITAL TO EUROPEAN RECOVERY

And that brings me to the question of Asia. I think we have got to win in Asia, too, or we will ultimately lose in Europe. I cannot myself vote to put some $20,000,000,000 into holding the line on one front and then ignore another front equally vital to our future.

Asia is vital to the program in Europe, because it will be all but impossible for England, Holland, France, and several other European countries to get back on their feet, despite the assistance of the Marshall plan, unless they are able to return to something like the prewar pattern of trade that they had with Asia. And the key to the situation in Asia is China. If China is taken over by Communists, how long can India, Malayasia, the East Indies, even the Philippines, resist the pressures?

JAPAN'S FUTURE

In Japan it is perfectly clear that the great problem today is not to get the Japanese to want to build a democratic nation. Plenty of them have caught the idea and are making unbelievable progress. The problem in Japan is how to get her economy on a sound basis and her security assured, so that the United States can withdraw her subsidies and her soldiers as soon as possible.

There simply is no way we can ever get Japan on a self-supporting basis until she can have access to the raw materials and the markets of Asia, and particularly of China and Manchuria. How can she do that when China is being systematically plunged deeper and deeper into chaos and economic disorganization, or if China is taken over by the Communists and an iron curtain comes down there as around eastern Europe?

We disarmed Japan. We wrote into her constitution that she shall never go to war again and hence shall have no army. If China is controlled by the Communist armies how will Japan be defended when American troops are withdrawn? She too will have no way of keeping out of the Soviet fold where all her technical abilities will be turned against us.

An American doctor on General MacArthur's staff told me that it has recently become difficult to get Japanese doctors to work with the occupation forces. I was astonished. I said, "Do you mean to tell me that even scientific men, and humanitarians, are hesitant to work with you in a program to build up public health in Japan? Why is that?"

He said, "Because our failure to have a firm policy with respect to the spread of Communist control on the continent of Asia, such as we have with respect to the spread of Communist power in Europe, is leading the Japanese people to believe that we are likely to walk out on them as we have on China, leaving them to the mercy of Russian, Chinese, and Korean, as well as Japanese Communists, who will take over, seize those who worked with the Americans, brand them as quislings and cut off their heads."

The Japanese know we fought rather than accept their splitting of China. Then they see us failing to support against Russia the Chinese Government we supported against them. They can only conclude that we are so politically immature we are likely to leave them too to be taken over by the Communists whom they see sweeping over Manchuria and north Korea and China.

General MacArthur's extraordinary success in Japan will stand or fall on what happens in China. Unless we are willing to abandon Japan, and all our promises and our labors there, we must either help China stop communism, as we are helping Greece, or we must pour American dollars and American soldiers into Japan endlessly. Take your choice.

KOREA'S PLIGHT

Look at Korea for a moment. I spent some time talking to one of the Korean leaders who for 40 years never ceased to fight against Japan for Korea's freedom. The Koreans are greatly discouraged and disillusioned about us. We came in and promised elections and a democratically chosen government, but we have not been able to carry out our promises—largely because we hoped, and still hope, for an agreement with Russia that will reunite north and south Korea. We have spent all these months trying to solve on the international level the problems we created for Korea by splitting her with Russia. In a sense the Koreans have been used as pawns in our struggle with Russia and have lost much of their confidence in us.

The Koreans told me frankly—several of them—that they are economically worse off today under us than they were under the Japanese, which was a rather startling statement, but I do not think it can be refuted. They prefer us, if there is hope they will get their freedom. But not if we are just a transition stage from control by the Japanese to control by Russia.

I said to this Korean leader, "What should we do now to be most helpful to you? Should we delay elections still further in order to try to get a United Nations committee to come in and supervise an election for all of Korea, or for south Korea? Or should we go ahead at once on our own to set up the provisional government we promised?"

He said, "It does not make much difference what you do or do not do now. There is no way you can get an independent Korea that will be secure and self-supporting until you solve the Communist problem in Manchuria."

I asked various other questions, to all of which he replied in substance, "There is no way you can solve the problem so that we can be independent and secure until you help China remove the Communist menace in Manchuria."

CHINA KEY TO ASIA

The program to which we are committed, of working for the independence of certain nations in Europe and Asia, is likely to fail, in my judgment, unless we make progress quickly on the internal situation in China. What is the situation there and how did it get that way?

The first explanation, and the easiest, of the confusion and disorder in China is the fact that the Chinese went through 8 years of war. That would be enough, I think, to cause considerable trouble in almost any country. Georgia did not look very good after a year of Sherman. China had 8 years of defeats and invasion and occupation, with disruption of her communications and destruction of her economy, along with all of the break-down, the moral break-down as well as the economic and social break-down, that go with so long and exhausting a war. The miracle is that she was able to stay in the war at all under such difficulties.

COMMUNIST PLAN TO DESTROY CHINESE GOVERNMENT

But there are additional causes besides those due to the Japanese war. The first is that the Chinese Communists have had a systematic plan all these years to destroy the Government of China. I would like to read to you a directive that was issued to his followers by Mao Tseh-tung, the Communist leader, in October 1937, just a month after he had entered into a solemn coalition with Chiang Kai-shek, following Japan's attack in July 1937. The Communists had reached the end of their rope. They were down to a few thousand men isolated in five or six counties. Japan's attack saved them. They pledged themselves to abandon their activities and fight loyally with Chiang against Japan—but their real purposes were contained in the secret directive.

I have read it to hundreds of audiences during the last 6 years or so, but almost nobody took it seriously. Now it reads like a book of prophecy:

"The Sino-Japanese War affords our party an excellent opportunity for expansion. Our fixed policy should be 70 percent expansion, 20 percent dealing with the Kuomintang, and 10 percent resisting Japan."

That is precisely the policy that they followed, 10 percent of their efforts devoted to resisting Japan, just enough to get the acclaim of the world as being Chinese patriots, while they devoted 90 percent of their efforts to expanding their forces and their territory and to harassing the Central Government of China, with the object of knocking that Government out as soon as they could.

Then Mao continued in the directive:

"There are three stages in carrying out this fixed policy:

"The first is a compromising stage—"

That would be the "k'ou t'ou"—

"in which self-sacrifice should be made to show our outward obedience to the Central Government and adherence to the Three People's Principles—"

The basic principles of the Kuomintang laid down by Sun Yat-sen—

"but in reality this will serve as camouflage for the existence and development of our party.

"The second is a contending stage—"

That is the "yao-t'ou"—

"in which 2 or 3 years should be spent in laying the foundation of our party's political and military powers, and developing these until we can match and break the Kuomintang, and eliminate the influence of the latter north of the Yellow River."

That has almost been achieved. It may be an accomplished fact shortly, if we continue to delay help to our hard-pressed ally.

"While we are waiting for an unusual turn of events, we should give the Japanese invader certain concessions."

Which, of course, they did, after it was clear "Mother Russia" was safe, and when it worked to the disadvantage of the Chinese Government.

For example, Japan made her last all-out drive on China in the summer of 1944. It began right after Japan made some sort of agreement with Russia in February, as I recall. It is an agreement whose full details we have not been able to ferret out, but among other things the Russians granted Japan fishing concessions in Russian waters for 5 years, as against 1 year previously, thereby giving Japan assurance of her major protein food supply for the next 5 years. Apparently assurances were also given to the Japanese that they would not have anything to fear from the Russians in Manchuria, because immediately after the agreement, the Japanese began to pull their crack Kwantung army, their best divisions, out of Manchuria where they had been all during the war, and moved them south through Communist-controlled territory, in an effort to knock out the Chiang Kai-shek government in southern and southwestern China. Trainload after trainload of Japanese troops and supplies went through the Communist-controlled territory for weeks, and not a train was reported wrecked. Evidently "certain concessions" were given to the Japanese.

Contrast that with the fact that, when the Central Government, after the surrender of Japan and under instructions from MacArthur, the supreme commander, tried to move its trains north through that same territory, up to Peiping and Manchuria to take the Japanese surrender and disarm the troops, the Government trains were wrecked and the rails were torn up by the Communists for mile after mile after mile. No "concessions" were given to the Chinese Government by the Communists.

Then Mao Tseh-tung further said in this directive:

"The third is an offensive stage, in which our forces should penetrate deeply into central China, sever the communications of the Central Government troops in various sectors, isolate and disperse them until we are ready for the counter-offensive and wrest the leadership from the hands of the Kuomintang."

That is, ready to destroy the Government of China. The Communists are entering this third stage—the "sha-t'ou" stage. In the last few weeks, they have moved south across the Yellow River, down into central China, to "sever the communications of the Central Government troops in various sectors and isolate and disperse them."

That was and is the plan, known since 1937. The incredible thing is that some of our leaders insisted on ignoring it, as some ignored Mein Kampf and others ignored the Communist manifestos. Instead of listening to the Chinese, we told them. We thought we knew better than they; and as a result, China, which would have been the greatest bulwark of peace and security in Asia, is in danger of itself being dragged behind the iron curtain and having its resources and manpower used on the other side against us.

I was in China 3 years ago and when I came home I reported to you in the Congress that there was in China widespread and inevitable deterioration—of all sorts.

ACCELERATING INTERNAL DETERIORATION

Today the deterioration is quite understandably still worse, except that the health of the people, and the nutrition, at least in the large cities I visited, is better now than it was then, largely because of the food shipped in through UNRRA, and because fortunately there have been no widespread droughts or very extensive floods in the last 2 years. They have had fair crops in most places, and, if the Communists would allow them to distribute commodities through the country, there would be little or no starvation in China now.

The economic situation is deteriorating alarmingly. But when you consider what China has had to endure, it is not surprising that things have at last gotten out of control. China has had progressive inflation for 10 years, due to blockade, inability to export, expansion of currency to pay war expenditures, etc. It is remarkable that they were able to hold it down as well as they did for 8 years. I dislike to think what the United States economy would be like if we had suffered the last 10 years as China has, if we had had such loads placed upon our economy on top of all the destruction, first from the Japanese, and now still worse, from the Communists.

Here again the Communists have proven themselves brilliant as usual. The one commodity in China that ties the economy together more than anything else is cotton textiles, because cotton cloth is the one thing that all Chinese have to use. It is the industry where labor is best organized and best infiltrated with Communists.

The Communist guerrillas waited this year until the cotton harvests were in, and then, within the last month or so, they suddenly cut almost every artery of transportation—railway, highway, or waterway—whereby the cotton could move from the fields to the great cotton textile mills in Tientsin, Tsingtao, and Shanghai. If cotton from America or elsewhere does not reach China within the next few weeks, those textile mills may have to close down and hundreds of thousands of men and women will be thrown out of work. There will be well-organized riots against the Government and that could start a chain of disorders precipitating the fall of the Government.

The political deterioration and the moral deterioration are serious. The break in morale of Chinese people, especially at higher levels, is even more serious. They are discouraged as I have never seen them before. Many among the educated classes suffering terribly from depreciated incomes are approaching the desired state of despair where they are tempted to resign themselves to communism, thinking nothing could be worse than their present conditions.

PROPAGANDA TO DISCREDIT CHINA

In addition to the carefully planned and executed attempts to destroy the government in China, there has been an equally skillfully executed plan to destroy the government of China abroad—that is, to discredit it by a systematic, organized propaganda campaign, in the United States and elsewhere.

It, too, began in March 1944, just after Russia made the agreement with Japan which freed the Japanese troops to move from Manchuria down into China. Apparently, Moscow, already confident of victory over Hitler, and having diverted Japan's strength from Russia to China, sent out the word to start the campaign of vilification of China, for it began all over the United States, just as if one man had pulled a switch and all the lights went on at once.

The propaganda, as you know, was largely led by about 20 or 30 writers and lecturers and commentators in America, and by some men who became Far East advisers to our State Department or experts on the staffs of organizations supposedly dedicated to enlightening the American public on Asiatic affairs or foreign policy. There were some of the group in what has become widely known as the Red cell in the State Department—the far eastern office. It has been openly said that some of these experts, both in and out of the Government, are members of the Communist Party, although I have no personal knowledge of that. But certainly they have consistently followed the party line with respect to the Chinese Communists. One of them openly boasted that, while they had not succeeded in all they wanted, at least they had gotten rid of Grew, Hurley, and Hornbeck, who were the three in the State Department who knew the facts about the Communists' wiles and who tried to carry out Roosevelt's policy of supporting the Central Government of China.

The propaganda began in this country in 1944 with the usual character assassination, especially with smears against the Generalissimo. You probably have forgotten them by now, but they did great damage—such things as alleged family troubles, moral charges, and so forth, all of which were completely untrue, but which helped to start the undermining of confidence by the American people in the leadership of China.

For almost 4 years the propaganda has gone on relentlessly. The emphasis is constantly upon the weaknesses of the Chinese Government, and nobody can deny some exist. The impression is given that there have been and are no strengths in the Chinese Government, whereas the facts prove the latter far outweigh the former—although China cannot recover without help any more than England, France, or Italy can.

CHARGE THAT CHINA IS UNDEMOCRATIC

Charges are made, just to mention a few of the commonest ones, that the Chinese Government is undemocratic. That, of course, is true, according to our standards. But according to China's standards, her present Government is unquestionably the nearest to democracy she has had in hundreds, if not thousands, of years. And it continues to move in the direction of the democracy to which it is pledged, just as the Communists are pledged to ultimate dictatorship.

The convention to establish a constitution was called to meet in Nanking November 12, 1937. But Japan plunged China into war in July 1937. That delay certainly cannot be blamed on the Government.

When the war was over and the long-delayed constitutional convention was called, the two parties which had clamored loudest for a constitution, refused to participate—the Communists and the Democratic League.

The Democratic League originally was a coalition of so-called liberal groups. Eventually the genuine liberals had to withdraw, just as the true liberals withdrew from the American Labor Party in New York when they discovered that it was largely being used by the Communist members, as a cloak, as a screen for their own activities.

Just so, the true liberal elements in China, the non-Communist elements, including the Young China Party and the Social Democratic Party withdrew from the Democratic League. I talked to the leaders of both those liberal parties. Both are today participating in the Chinese Government. But the left wing remained in the Democratic League, and, while pretending that it is a liberal party, continues to obstruct all efforts to establish China's new democratic constitution.

When General Marshall went out to China, the Communists posed as "democrats," dragged out negotiations, stalled for time, worked feverishly to expand their power and then when they had succeeded during the "truce" in expanding the territory under their control from 60 to about 300 counties out of some 2,000 in China, they took off the mask, blasted General Marshall mercilessly, until he himself wrote:

"The course which the Communist Party has pursued in recent months indicated an unwillingness to make a fair compromise. It has been impossible even to get them to sit down at a conference table."

It is possible to get agreement in almost any controversy, no matter how great divergence there is at first, if both sides really want an agreement. But, if, for any reason, one side does not want an agreement, then there is no way to get an agreement. We have learned that the hard way with respect to Communists; at Moscow, Paris, Lake Success.

The Chinese had learned it in 1927; unfortunately, we refused to learn it until 1947—20 years late.

FAILURE OF MARSHALL MISSION

Of course, Secretary Marshall's mission was doomed before he started, as plenty of persons who knew China and who had dealt with Communists, in China or elsewhere, advised. But the thing that made certain his failure to get the Government of China and the Communists together was a sentence in the public statement the President issued on December 15, 1945, announcing the purposes and conditions of Marshall's mission. I have not been able to find out who wrote this sentence, who phrased it as it is, but it is the hooker which made it impossible for him to succeed. I read from the last paragraph, which begins:

"As China moves toward peace and unity along the lines described above."

Those lines were, first, establishment of a coalition government; and, second, disarming or integrating the Communist forces into the government armies, the Communists themselves to become a political party instead of an armed rebellion.

"As China moves toward peace and unity along the lines described above, the United States would be prepared to assist the national government in every reasonable way to rehabilitate the country"—

And so forth. Of course, it sounded innocent enough. Americans who don't understand Communist jargon approved; the left wingers, who do understand it, cheered. Why shouldn't they? There was no chance for General Marshall to get unity after that one sentence was published, because it told the Communists of China exactly what they needed to know in order to encourage them to resist unity. It told them that if China achieved peace and unity, then the United States would support the Government of China; which meant that if it did not get peace and unity, then we would not support that Government. So that all the Communists had to do to cut off American aid to that Government, and thereby destroy it, was to see to it that China did not get "peace and unity."

Never was a great soldier sent on a mission that was more hopeless than that on which General Marshall was sent. The cards were all stacked against him before he left—in my judgment, by people here at home.

If the President's statement had said: "As China moves toward better government, wider civil rights, greater democracy, more efficiency, less corruption," and so forth, "the United States would be prepared to assist—" that would have been a legitimate set of conditions and within the power of the Chinese Government to fulfill. But instead we laid upon that government conditions which we placed in the hands of its opposition.

The only way to get unity with Communists anywhere is to surrender to them. We had no right, wittingly or unwittingly, to lay down such conditions.

The answer to the charge that the Chinese Government is not democratic, is to say that of course it is not democratic yet; but it is trying to keep China free, and if it stays free, it can and will become a more democratic government. The pressures toward democracy in China are so great that no free and independent Chinese Government could resist them, even if it would, provided that that government is not in a war for survival. Any Chinese Government that is independent will inevitably move toward greater freedom and democracy and wider civil rights. But a government which is under the Chinese Communist Party, subservient to Russia, will be no more free and can no more move in the direction of greater civil rights and democracy, than can the one in Poland. The only hope of getting democracy in China is by helping it defeat the Communists.

I do not know when if ever before in history, some 30 or 40 persons in and out of a government, have been able to lose a great victory so almost completely as this handful of Communists, fellow-travelers, and misguided liberals in America has succeeded in doing with respect to the victory over Japan which 4,000,000 brave Americans won at such a cost in blood and sacrifice. I do not like to make so strong a statement, but I do not see how anyone can look at the facts and come to any other conclusion.

CHARGE THAT INEFFICIENT

The charge of inefficiency has been constantly leveled at the Chinese Government, as if that were an adequate reason for withdrawing American support from an ally. Well, the Chinese Government, a young government struggling against almost insuperable obstacles after 4,000 years of absolute monarchy, had not become an efficient government before this war, and the war inevitably reduced its efficiency as with every other refugee government of an invaded country. Then the war ended suddenly. The Chinese Government had to try to set up a dozen provincial governments and move back hundreds of miles and take over all at once. Some of those provincial and local governments were exceedingly bad.

May I inquire of you gentlemen who come from States in the South how efficient were the governments that the North sent down into the South after the Civil War. Do you think those that came into Mississippi and Alabama, in the carpet-bagger days, were 70 percent efficient, even after 10 years? The same sort of thing took place in China, I am sorry to say.

I would even ask General Marshall if the army that he commanded was 70 percent efficient in the use of its funds. Most of the GI's with whom I have talked thought that at least 50 percent of the money used by our armed forces was wasted.

I make no attempt to whitewash inefficiency anywhere. I merely say that we ought to look at inefficiency in China in terms of the over-all picture, and with a sense of perspective, and in terms of what the alternatives are.

REMARKABLE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

On the other hand, the stories of inefficiency which are always well publicized can be matched with records of great accomplishment which are seldom mentioned. The Chinese went into Manchuria, and despite opposition from the Communists, and Russian blocking of the major port, got many industries going in a remarkably short time. The Communists had torn up the railroad south of Changchun, and the best experts that we had in China said that the Chinese could not rebuild it in 6 months. They completed it in 4½ months. The first train was to run over it on China's national holiday, October 10, a month ago. Just the week before, the Communists tore up 70 miles of new railroad, turned the track upside down, ignited the ties with kerosene, so that the ties got burning along the whole 70-mile strip. The heat twisted the rails so they are useless. The railroad is gone. But the Chinese had built it in a month and a half less than the Americans said it would require.

Today, Nanking is again a boom town. I had not been there for some years, but reconstruction and new construction there under this allegedly rotten, incompetent government are greater than I saw in any European city except perhaps Warsaw.

One of our military advisers to the Chinese Government told me that they could never ask for more wholehearted and effective cooperation anywhere than they have received from the Ministry of National Defense. Together they worked out a unification program. They streamlined the organizational set-up of the Chinese Army, Navy, and Air Force, from the ministry on down, and it is a better set-up than we were able to get here in our armed forces unification bill, because we had to save the faces of some of our present officials and officers.

Under this reorganization, the Chinese have reduced the civilian employees of the Ministry of National Defense from 80,000 to 20,000. I wish there were some way we could get some of those "inefficient" officials of the Chinese Government to come over and help us get half as big a cut in desk personnel in the Pentagon Building.

I wish we would take the restrictions off our military advisory commission in China so that it would be permitted to help the Chinese streamline and get efficient organization in lower echelons, too, those that do the fighting.

The Chinese Government in all areas that it controls has resumed the establishment of health centers that the war interrupted. I visited some and was struck by the number of Chinese women volunteers, under government sponsorship, who are working their hearts out trying to get better health for their people, better maternity and child-care centers.

I am able to say confidently that at least in the upper one-fourth or one-third of the Chinese Government there is as high a percentage, if not higher, of very able men and women, working at greater personal sacrifice and under far greater difficulties in their efforts to improve their Government and serve their country well, as there is in Washington or any other government that I have visited.

The salaries of top officials today are about $30 or $40 a month. Most of those men are exceedingly high grade and well trained. Some have other resources which they are using up in order to keep going. What about officials who don't have private resources?

CHARGE THAT CORRUPT

That brings me to the next charge—that the Chinese Government is corrupt. Of course, there are corrupt people in it. I will admit that there are corrupt people in the Republican Party, and I do not think members of the Democratic Party will claim that there are no corrupt persons or machines in that party. But that does not mean that the parties as such are corrupt. Just so in China. Graft is a centuries-old problem. It was not created by the present Government; it is what that Government has been struggling with, and with remarkable success until the war began 10 years ago, since which time the Government has had its hands full trying to keep China an independent country.

Corruption has been in China for thousands of years and will be there a long time after we have passed on. But no one can deny that the present Government is far better, even under the strains of war and inflation, than were the war-lord governments it replaced, and the war-lord governments were better than the Manchus they followed. Corruption, like most things, is relative. We haven't too good a record ourselves. The important thing is the direction in which things are moving over the decades.

Furthermore the Chinese as an old and mellow people seldom have absolute standards. If the Government cannot pay adequate salaries and the only way a man can feed his children is by what we call graft, bribes, and so forth, they say, "But there was nothing else he could do."

You may ask, "Why does not the Government pay its officials and civil servants more?" Because, until it can win the war and get the economy going so its military expenditures can be cut down and its revenues increased, it can pay higher wages only by printing more paper money. But that would lead only to still greater inflation. The value of the money would go further down and at the end of the month they would not have any more purchasing power than they had before.

The Chinese are up against the problem of terrible inflation, and they cannot solve it without help from us, any more than Greece or France can without help. You can be sure the Chinese do not like the situation. But just what can they do? I wonder what we would do under the same circumstances.

General Lucas, who is the head of our military mission in China, told me that he was ashamed last winter when he saw how the high Chinese officials with whom he dealt were sacrificing their own comforts in order to provide coal at some twenty-odd dollars a ton to keep every American officer and his family comfortable in Nanking. When he went over to see the Minister of War, General Pai Chung-hsi, he found his house unheated.

I repeat, that among the Chinese at the top there is a higher percentage of men of great ability working at almost impossible tasks with greater sacrifice and less reward than I know of among comparable officials here in my own Government. Most of us here are pretty comfortable.

I talked to the mayor of Peiping, a man who years ago was a student in this country. He studied philosophy at Beloit College. He got his master's degree in political science at the University of Chicago. He went back to China to teach and inspire young men with his ideas on building the new China. They asked him to go into politics, to start applying the needed reforms, and he became Governor of Shantung Province. He was not a war lord; he was a college professor. Yet for 7½ years after Japan struck, the man was out in the mountains, trying to hold his provincial government and his poorly equipped and half fed troops and his people together against the Japanese invader. He hid out in little boats on the river and canals when the Japanese almost caught him on the land. For 7½ years they hunted him, while he struck back at them to wear them down. His wife and children were captured by the Japanese, who sent messages saying that if he did not surrender they would kill his family, or that if he attacked Tsinan, the capital, they would put his wife and family in the front line; yet for 7½ years he held on, underfed, underclothed, cold, yet fighting on for his country, and for ours. He said to me, "It hurts me when your papers say that our Government is all corrupt."

Let me sum this up by saying that the real test is the record. There is plenty of corruption in China, but no party or government that is wholly corrupt and unworthy of support could ever have accomplished what the Kuomintang Party has. How many political parties in history can surpass or even equal its record?

It overthrew the Manchu dynasty after 267 years of despotic control.

It succeeded in eliminating all but one or two of the war-lord governments. It would have had them out, too, if Japan had not attacked.

It united China under a Chinese Government for the first time in almost 300 years.

It succeeded in getting China free from more than a century of imperialistic domination by foreign powers.

It inspired and guided, between the years of 1932 and 1937—the only 5 years of peace it has had—a program of reconstruction and development, of democratization and modernization, of improvement in education, communication, transportation, and public health that cannot be surpassed by any large nation in history in a comparable period of time.

It saw the nature of totalitarianism of the Japanese Fascist type long before we did, and fought against it for 8 years—alone for 4½ years, long before we had sense enough to recognize its nature and to know that the Chinese were fighting on our side, too.

It saw the nature of totalitarianism of the Communist type 20 years before we did and has resisted it alone, not just since March 1947 when our Government finally woke up but since 1927. It is still resisting still practically alone.

Show me another party with a better overall record of actual accomplishment. Unfortunately, we were skillfully told only its weaknesses—and they are there; we were not told of the enormous strengths in China, and believe me, they are there too.

STRENGTHS AS WELL AS WEAKNESSES

We Americans ought never to forget this one fact, which outweighs every other consideration—namely that when our fleet lay at the bottom of the sea and Japan had carried out in 6 months the single greatest conquest in the history of warfare, only one thing prevented her from completing and organizing her new empire and turning all her efforts against us. It was this—the keystone was missing. Old, so-called backward corrupt undemocratic, inefficient China refused to yield. Chiang could have had peace on very generous terms and saved his people most of the suffering and the economic dislocation and the Communist civil war. Instead, he chose to buy for us the precious months and years in which we could rebuild our fleet and capture the islands, one by one, and build the atomic bomb and ultimately bring our superior air power and the bombs to bear upon Japan and give her the final blow.

That is the fact that takes precedence over every other in the picture. China held the line. Does that count for nothing with us?

There are strengths in China, including moral strengths, and let nobody ignore or underestimate them. The Nation is now terribly weak from the suffering and exhaustion through which she has gone. Have we no sense of obligation or responsibility to help her in the peace as she helped us in the war—and with help that really will help?

CONFUSION IN AMERICAN POLICY

For us not to help China, because her Government is portrayed as unworthy of support, is not only being victims of distorted propaganda; it is ignoring our own history and our own interests. A great American out in the Far East said to me, "For the first time in the history of our relations with Asia, we have endangered the paramount interests of the United States by confusing them with an internal purification problem in China. It may prove to be the greatest single blunder in the history of the United States."

That is the best description I have heard of our policy—"confusing the paramount interests of the United States with an internal purification problem in China."

Let me review a little of our history on this point. In 1899, when the other nations were dividing China up into spheres of influence, the United States announced the "open-door" policy through John Hay, Secretary of State. We insisted on support of the Government of China against all efforts of the British, the French, the Japanese, the Russians, and the Germans to divide her up. Why did we support the Government of China? Because it was democratic? Or liberal? Or efficient? Or free from graft? No; it was the old Manchu government, one of the rottenest governments in history. We supported it because we saw that the most important thing was not that the government be democratic, but that it be a sovereign Chinese Government. Under a Chinese Government desired changes would be at least possible; under foreign governments, they would not be possible. We kept first things first.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

In 1922 the Washington Conference was held at a time when there was another attempt to divide up China, this time spearheaded by the Japanese. We did not then make the present mistake of failing to support the Government of China against outside powers, even though the Government of China that we pledged in the Nine-Power Treaty to support was completely undemocratic, inefficient, and corrupt; it was the war-lord government. We supported it because we saw clearly that the all-important consideration was that the Government in China be Chinese and not subject to any foreign power.

Come down to 1941. In the note which Cordell Hull handed to the Japanese envoy on November 26, 1941, certain conditions were laid down for a return to normal relations between Japan and the United States. The one condition which the Japanese would not accept and which led directly to the war with us was as follows:

"The Government of the United States and the Government of Japan will not support—militarily, politically, economically—any government or regime in China other than the National Government of the Republic of China with capital temporarily in Chungking."

That was the very same government we now say is unworthy of our support. Was it democratic then? No; not as much so as now? Was it efficient? No. Did it have wholly honest administration? Certainly not. Yet we went to war with Japan rather than have China, or even just Manchuria, come under the complete control of an expanding foreign power. We did not make the present mistake of confusing our paramount interests with the problem of purifying the Chinese Government. We had sense enough to remember that the key thing was to have a government dominated by Chinese and not by a foreign power. We kept first things first.

And in August 1945, as part of the bargain at Yalta, we got the Russians to sign an agreement with China, in which they, too, promised to support the Central Government of China. May I read from that treaty signed August 1945:

"In accordance with the spirit of the above treaty, and for the implementation of its general ideas and policies, the Soviet Government is ready to render China moral support and assistance with military equipment and other material resources, this support and assistance to be given fully to the National Government as the Central Government of China."

As a result of Russia signing that agreement the Communists knew that their hopes were shattered. There was nothing Mao-Tseh-tung could do but come to terms. He got into a plane and went to Chungking to work on a political, rather than military, settlement. He assumed, of course, that after we had supported the Chinese Government, no matter how bad it was, for almost 100 years as our basic policy in Asia, and after we had forced Japan to support it and had persuaded the Russians to support it, we, too, would continue to support it.

TRAGIC REVERSAL OF UNITED STATES POLICY

Up to that point we had kept first things first in Asia. If we had continued to do so there would not have been any civil war in China. Or, at least, it couldn't have been of any magnitude. China could and would have resumed her march toward better government and the reforms we say we want.

But instead we made one of the most amazing reversals of history. Instead of supporting our ally, the Government of China, we chose the very moment of the success of our own policy, to abandon the policy; and to withhold our support from China unless the Chinese Government first achieved "peace and unity" with the Communists.

We adopted the Communist line that to support Chiang would lead to civil war, when in reality it was the only way to prevent civil war.

When we announced that all Mao had to do to block American aid to Chiang was to block peace and unity, naturally he went back to Yenan to block peace and unity. Like Gromyko and Molotov at other conferences, he stalled along the negotiations under General Marshall until he had gained control of much of north China and Manchuria. Russia helped enormously, in violation of her treaty, but I can hardly blame Russia for not helping the Government of China as it had promised when we ourselves intervened against that Government in favor of the Communists by halting shipment of lend-lease ammunition we had promised to China, and military airplanes, and a loan already authorized and earmarked.

Victory was in our hands in Asia, and we threw it away. The anti-Kuomintang and pro-Communist propagandists, and Russia, won. America and the Chinese lost.

PRO-COMMUNIST PROPAGANDA

Earlier I said that the Communist plan had two objectives, to destroy the Government of China at home by economic, social, and military measures, and second, to discredit it abroad. As a matter of fact, there was a third part to the strategy, namely, to sell the Chinese Communists as the great heroes and patriots and liberals of China, whom we should support.

AGRARIAN REFORMERS?

We were told endlessly that the Communists were just agrarian reformers, trying to get land for the poor peasants of China. Of course, the picture was painted to suggest there was great landlordism in China with huge estates, as in Poland, Rumania, and other European countries. That was a false picture, but few Americans knew enough about China to recognize the deception.

Actually, there is less landlordism in China than in the United States. Sixty-one percent of Chinese farmers own all their own land, whereas only 58 percent of American farmers own all their land. Landlordism as ordinarily understood has not been the major problem in China. The major problem is not wider distribution but better utilization of land.

The Communists call a landlord anybody with more than 3 acres of land, and set up a cry to take it away from him without recompense. Their primary purpose in China, as in Poland, is to bribe the people to come with them and get something for nothing. It is a smart plan, although completely immoral.

I was told that if an election had taken place in north Korea last year the Koreans would have voted overwhelmingly for the Communists, because they had taken the land of every person who had more than 3 acres and distributed it to the landless. But I was told further that if a free election were held now, not one-half of one percent of the people in north Korea would vote Communist, because after the harvest this year, the Communists came to the farmers and said, "We have the problem of defending ourselves against the American aggressors in south Korea, so in return for our giving you this land last year, you will voluntarily contribute to us 80 percent of your crops—plus your son for our army."

In south Korea I think 25 or 30 percent might vote for communism—they haven't yet had their noses rubbed in it. I was told from all sources that in north Korea, not more than half a percent are pro-Communist now. But it is too late to repent now. Once the Communists are in control, the citizen has no recourse.

LIBERAL DEMOCRATS?

They have carried on the propaganda that they have democracy and point to the so-called "people's courts" as a proof. That too is a cheap and cruel fraud. Their people's courts are precisely like that ancient one in Jerusalem when the crowd was organized to cry "Release Barabbas. Crucify Christ." A handful of trained persons in a crowd can easily direct its decisions, especially if the people know which decision their rulers want, and that it would be unpatriotic to disagree. Such "courts" never yet led to justice. They are window dressing.

A lot has been made of the discipline and enthusiasm of the Communists, and it is true they have both to a very high degree. As I said here 3 years ago, they are almost monastic in their devotion to their cause. But that does not mean that it is a good cause or that we should support it. The Nazis had that devotion and enthusiasm. The average Nazi soldier behaved about as well in Europe, individually, as did the average American GI. They had stricter discipline on the whole. But their cause was still bad.

No one can say that the Japanese did not have almost unbelievable devotion to their Emperor and their cause, but the fact that they had devotion, discipline, and enthusiasm does not prove that it was a good cause.

NO FREEDOMS

The net result of a careful reexamination, from many reliable sources, of conditions in Chinese Communist areas is, first, that there are no freedoms whatsoever—no freedom of speech, no freedom of press, no freedom of assembly, no freedom of movement, no freedom of religion. No propaganda or camouflage can make that out as democracy.

Oh, yes, they say that you may have a meeting of your church group, if you desire. When do you want to have it? If at 11 o'clock, then you can expect to have a patriotic meeting called at 11 o'clock, frequently in the church. If it is down the street, everyone has to go to it or be tried for disloyalty. So you have freedom of religion on paper, but you cannot actually carry out the exercise of it.

SUBSERVIENT TO RUSSIA

Second, there is no question but that the Communist Party in China is subservient to Russia, and has always been, just the same as the Communist Party in Poland or Yugoslavia is, and as the Communist Party in the United States is. The latest indication of that, of course, is the way in which the Chinese Communists are following the Moscow line on the Marshall plan. The No. 1 enemy now in their propaganda is General Marshall. He is blasted every day as arch imperialist, capitalist reactionary, enemy of the common people, etc. Zhdanov announced the Soviet determination to defeat the Marshall plan. So General Marshall to the Chinese Communists becomes No. 1 Fascist and enemy; Chiang Kia-shek is now down to second; and Chen Li-fu has slipped clear to third.

After the way General Marshall leaned over backward and, in my opinion, even discriminated against the Central Government, in order to make sure nobody could say that he was favoring the Government against the Communists, it is instructive to observe how they reward his fairness and his faith in them—the same way they rewarded Petkov in Bulgaria for his faith.

They are now almost to the "sha t'ou" stage with respect to China. They think victory is almost in the bag, and they don't need to carry on pretenses much longer.

Perhaps one thing will wake Americans up more than all our arguments these many years, and that is Mr. Vishinsky's speeches.

ANTI-AMERICAN

If you will read his attacks on us and change just a few words, you will think you are reading the Chinese Communists', or their American apologists' attacks on the Government of China. Vishinsky accuses us Americans and our Government of all the same crimes and evil designs the Central Government of China has been accused of. When we know that those attacks against us are not accurate, perhaps more Americans may begin to have some suspicions regarding the accuracy of similar attacks against China. I only hope that we will wake up before it is too late.

Mr. Chairman, I think I am more aware of the defects of the Chinese Government and its personnel than most people in America can possibly be. I am aware of some defects in the American Government and its personnel, too. I also know that the first objective of an intelligent nation's foreign policy must always be its own security, and that an internal purification problem in China, important as it may be, must never be allowed to deflect us from those policies which are essential to the security of this country.

OUR ALTERNATIVES

Let us approach it this way: If we cannot decide what is best in China, because we think neither side is good, then, like a physician confronted with only bad alternatives, let us decide what is worst. What is the worst thing that could happen in China? There can be no question about that. The worst thing that could happen in China, from the standpoint of our own interests, those of the Chinese people, and of world peace, is for China to come under the Communists and become another puppet of Russia. Therefore, that is the thing that at all costs we must, if possible, prevent. If we cannot be wholeheartedly for either side, then we must at least be against that which is most dangerous. Insofar as we do not help the Central Government, we are helping that which is infinitely worse.

We must get first things first, and the first thing is not a better Chinese Government, but an independent Chinese Government. Such a government can become better and will become better. It can and will become more democratic and efficient and honest, and will widen civil rights; whereas a Communist puppet government cannot become any more democratic or liberal in China than it can in Yugoslavia.

So my position is that we must quickly take a strong stand, not against Russia, not against the Communists as such, but for that which has been our basic policy for 100 years and from which, unfortunately, we have recently departed. We must return to our historic policy of standing for "the sovereignty, the independence, the territorial, and administrative integrity of China." That phrase from the Nine Power Pact is still the best statement of the real requirements.

Why should we have fought 4 years against Japan to defend that policy and now abandon it? The first thing we must make secure is not democracy, or competence, or honesty, or even peace in China; but the independence of China. That cannot be maintained if it comes under the Communists.

SUMMARY

In summary, our failure to give vigorous support and assistance to our weakened ally, China, in the postwar period, encouraged and assisted the Communist-armed minority in its attempt to destroy the government of China. The disruption of the Nation's communications and of its economy, and the warfare which requires more than three-fourths of the nation's budget to be for military purposes are causing a break-down of economic processes, of government machinery, and of the nation's morale to the point where the government may soon be in danger of collapse.

Such a collapse would have the gravest consequences for the United States:

1. It would bring the enormous resources and manpower of China under the control of a ruthlessly efficient and totalitarian Communist government subservient to the Soviet Union.

2. It would drastically reduce in Asia the prestige and influence of China's supposed allies, the western democracies, especially the United States, it would greatly accelerate the already rapid spread of Soviet influence in Korea, southeast Asia, India, and the Philippines. It would give new life to the Communist movement in Japan and dishearten the democratic forces there.

3. It would make impossible the restoration for Japan and Korea of their prewar pattern of trade with China which is absolutely essential if they are ever to become self-sustaining and secure without receiving hundreds of millions of American dollars every year and being defended for an indefinite period by American soldiers.

4. It would make it difficult, if not impossible, for certain European countries, especially England, France, and Holland, to restore their prewar pattern of trade with Asia, thereby endangering the success of the Marshall plan in Europe.

5. It would give Russia satellites and security all along her Asiatic front, enable her to take bolder and more aggressive action against us in Europe, relieve her of the necessity of fighting on two fronts in the event of a war, and thereby enormously increase the danger of such a war. Furthermore, it would greatly increase the difficulty of our winning it, if it came, or even of surviving it.

CONCLUSIONS

The disastrous effects of all these factors on our own economy and our security are obvious. These conclusions seem to me inescapable:

1. It is much sounder and involves much less risk to build on the existing Government in China than to have a collapse with completely incalculable risks, or to have a Communist victory. Our choice is not between the present Government in China and something better; it is between the present Government in China and something infinitely worse.

2. Immediate economic or financial measures can help China greatly in the present period of strain, but they cannot solve the situation until the military drain on China's money, resources, efforts, and morale can be reduced, and until the communications destroyed by the Communists can be restored. These objectives can be accomplished only by defeating and disarming the Communists south of the Great Wall and at least holding present positions in Manchuria, if it should prove to be already too late—tragically for China and for ourselves—to overcome the Communists in Manchuria at this time.

3. The Communists in China cannot be defeated without United States help, any more than they can be in Greece. Therefore, United States help to be successful must be military as well as moral and economic. By military I mean surplus munitions—at little or no cost to us; and an expanded program of training and advising Chinese forces at all levels.

By moral I mean a forthright statement of our support of the Chinese Government in its struggle against the attempts of the Communists to destroy it, similar to the support we are giving Greece, France, Italy, and others, even though some of those governments, too, do not meet with our full approval.

By economic I mean providing, under adequate safeguards, American grants, loans, and personnel to help the Chinese Government balance its international payments, stabilize its currency and develop specific sound reconstruction projects of great importance to the Nation's economy. Without such help it cannot improve local government and make possible better living conditions for the people, regain their confidence and full support, and thus overcome the Communist propaganda by actually doing for the people what the Communists promise.

We are not justified in doing anything unless we do enough to enable China to resist the threat to her national existence.

The amount of new money required to accomplish the above objectives is very small as compared to similar requirements in Europe.

4. Once the military situation is stabilized and the military expenditures reduced, more real recovery can be achieved in China for far less cost to us than in Europe. In fact, China could then recover, although more slowly, without any further grants at all from us, because her economy is basically sound, the country is practically self-sufficient in food, fuel, fibers, and essential raw materials, and the people have enormous industry and vitality.

5. Given peace, no independent Chinese government could resist, even if it desired to, the internal pressures toward greater democracy, more competence and efficiency, and broader civil rights. The strides toward better government would again be as spectacular as they were during the period from 1932 to 1937. It should never be forgotten that it was the success, not the failure, of the Chinese Government in giving increasingly better government, that led to Japan's attack in 1937.

6. The risks to the United States in vigorously helping the Chinese Government and people resist the ruthless attempts to subjugate them are far less than the risks in not helping. The risks in delay are far greater than the risks of such action. It must be taken at once.

The Long-Range Agricultural Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SCOTT W. LUCAS
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter directed to me by Mr. Charles B. Shuman, president of the Illinois Agricultural Association.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ILLINOIS AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., July 9, 1948.

Hon. SCOTT W. LUCAS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LUCAS: On behalf of the Illinois Agricultural Association, I want to express our appreciation for your very active and effective support of the long-range agricultural program which was enacted at the close of the recent session of Congress.

While this legislation is not all that we hoped for, yet I am sure that it will prove to be the first step toward a constructive program for agriculture. Your position as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, which wrote the bill, together with your leadership on the floor of the Senate placed you in a key position with respect to this and other agricultural legislation.

I can assure you that the farmers of Illinois appreciate your aggressive leadership which resulted in the enactment of this long-range agricultural legislation.

I personally appreciate the consideration shown me by the Committee on Agriculture, of which you are a member, on the several occasions that I have testified before this committee.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES B. SHUMAN,
President.

Broadcast by Upton Close

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following broadcast made by Upton Close, made over the National Broadcasting Co. network on Sunday morning, December 7, 1941, shortly before the United States fleet was struck at Pearl Harbor:

Again from a British source comes the rumor that Japanese Premier-Dictator Tojo is going to make a declaration in Tokyo Monday (that's tomorrow), which will definitely say whether it is to be war or peace in the Pacific. The implication is that it may be peace rather than war.

Now, frankly, this repeated rumor annoys dyed-in-the-wool newsmen. If Premier Tojo is going to make a speech tomorrow why does not the news come from Tokyo or the Japanese official news agency instead of Britain? Why is it being said to America in this roundabout way? Does Britain or some element in Britain's foreign office have a tentative deal on with Japan—which, of course, cannot go through without American acceptance—and are these feelers intended to get us to give a favorable ear to Tojo when he talks tomorrow? Or is there possibly a negotiation going on with impetus from the Japanese, rather than the British side? And are the Japanese behind these prophetic feelers coming to us Americans via the British news agencies? Or is Japan planning a surprise war move tomorrow or the next day and making use of certain British news vendors to pull the wool over America and Britain while Japan completes her last plans, say a landing on the Gulf of Siam or the oil coast of Borneo or even, as the Australians seem to think, a landing on the coast of Australia.

We might even include in this category the jittery anticipation of the people of Manila that the Japanese would open the war with a bombing of the civilians of that crowded city, although no military experts could imagine a general staff so stupid as to throw away its initial advantage of surprise just to cremate a few thousands of civilians not even engaged in war work and not even belonging to the power with which the war was to be fought. No, whatever Tojo may plan to spring tomorrow, it will be something of more practical military value than the bombing of Manila if it is anything warlike at all. And while we are waiting to see, we can do nothing more valuable than to examine over and over again the basic facts of the Japanese-American clash. Here they are again.

First, Japan's side. What Japan wants is dominance now of the West Pacific and China with the privilege of sitting on the side lines to extend her world power while European and American powers—we, who call ourselves the white nation—mutually exterminate one another. What General Tojo, nicknamed the "Razor," craves more than anything else is for Europe and America to get into a war of the continents which will last 20 or 30 years.

Japan's methods for getting what she wants are constant, well demonstrated, and there are not likely to be surprises there. She keeps feeling out, feeling out, militarily, and meanwhile talking, talking, diplomatically, but sidestepping the crush. Of course, were war once opened, she would fight to the end and then rise from the ashes and fight again. Japanese are like that.

Now what are the constants on our side? First, eternal opposition to Japan's empire building, or anyone else's for that matter, in the Pacific. We shall remain constant on that, no matter how many temptations come to us heralded by rumors via London. Second, constant on our side is the superior power both military and economic to crush Japan at any time the show-down comes, although we may have to give a lot of our time and money for the job unless some less well defined jobs in politically more remote parts of the world go in order to do it. And then we have a third factor on our side. Should I call it the inconstant constant? It is the personal element. Our Commander in Chief's mind in the matter. Just where and at what point will he use sufficient force in blocking Japan's outfeelers to make the picture war?

Now, aside from these constants, everything else—belligerent speeches or suave notes—are just straws in the wind. They show which way the wind is blowing. Or maybe we should rather call them straws on the camel's back. Perhaps in history a camel's back has been broken by a last straw. More likely, the camel suddenly shudders or bucks and pitches the load off.

The lesson that Soviet Russia and we can never be true allies—Soviet Russia and America—but only companions of the same road, and, under the present regime in Russia only playing parts in a three-cornered duel, two fighters who happen to be striking at the same opponents—that picture was all there in the arrival of the Russian Ambassador, Mr. Litvinov, and his gracious lady, Mrs. Litvinov, at Treasure Island yesterday. It was the Ambassador's show. He is a very genial and big human being, the biggest I ever knew in Soviet Russia, and everyone admires his gray-haired English wife. But this morning it is my show and my comment—and this is the way the Soviet Ambassador's arrival looked to this observer: There were, of course, the Russian worshipers pushing their way down to kiss the hem of anything not American. And some of them were in workers' clothes and some of them wore mink.

And there were the Russian war-relief people, hoping to have their cause mentioned on the air—a queer intermixture of humanitarian impulse and political purpose. And there were the cynical American newspapermen, who, failing to get any political statement out of the clever Ambassador, said to us radiomen in radio parlance: "Take him away."

And there was the Ambassador himself, as near a cosmopolitan as provincial Russia has ever produced. A man of cosmopolitan Jewish ancestry, married to a fine woman from England. He had on a blue working shirt, with no tie, and a heavy overcoat of coarse blue stuff. It was very hot in the crowded inner office of Pan-American Airways, and I invited the Ambassador to take off his topcoat, and he said, "Oh, but I will soon be going." But what he meant was that an Ambassador couldn't look more coarsely dressed than the newspapermen who interviewed him. And there were the Ambassador's words—very clever, very shrewd in their evasion—a bucket with no bottom; a piano with no sounding board; utterly hollow on Russian-American relations; showing in every word how little there is in common between these two nations, America and Russia; their cause, what they stand for, and what they will do to each other when this war is over.

The Ambassador had nothing to say about the possibility that America would fight Japan but we could deduce that that would be taken by the Soviet Government as a situation to be played for any advantages to be found in it—to be played by the Kremlin—not as a tragedy in which the heart of Russia would bleed as would the rest of the heart of humanity, but for what its political advantage might be worth to the Kremlin in its present crisis. And when he was asked what part Russia could play in the future of this great Pacific basin should blood mania poison it during the last half of the twentieth century as it has already poisoned the Atlantic during the first half—when he was asked that, the Russian Ambassador was silent because he was lost.

There was Madame Litvinov, whom I had last seen with a cheap market basket on her arm, with a house dress on, getting out of a Rolls-Royce which belonged to the Kremlin where they were Commissars—getting out of a Rolls-Royce going about the market place in Moscow in 1928 in search of stale eggs and a wisp of greens for a salad. Yesterday there was Madame Litvinov asking me to ask her no questions please about living conditions in Russia, either then or now, because then Russia had revolution and now it has war. And I thought that in this simple request of hers was the whole story.

And it seemed to me that crowded around listening, but not comprehending, were the Russian worshipers who perhaps now would have war, and if that is soon to arrive, then would have revolution. Then there was the American mother with two little American children—keen, alert, well-dressed. For some reason they had come down to be spectators of this scene. Looking out through the window emblazoned in lights as the great flying bird rested on its belly on the blue lagoon, the little 5-year-old boy said to his mother (and this was overheard by another spectator)—"Mama, Mama, what are they coming for?" and his mother looked down, a little startled, and said, "Well, I guess it's what they call for good will." The little boy looked up wide-eyed and said, "But, Mama, I thought we didn't like the Russians." And then the little girl, the boy's sister, looked down at him with all the sophistication of her sex and her 6 years and said, "But, silly, we do now." Well, there is always the lighter touch—we had it here.

The division manager of the United Airlines, Mr. Reber, who supplied the special plane for the Ambassador and his greeters from the Russian Embassy—which plane by the way arrived safely in Washington this morning at 9:41, eastern standard time—this Mr. Reber, who is a young man from Seattle and just missed being one of my students back in the days when I was a college professor there—well, Manager Reber remembered that on his Seattle route he had a very beautiful stewardess who was once a Russian countess, and Mr. Reber, thinking that Russians would like Russians, offered the Ambassador of the Proletarians the service of the Russian countess-stewardess on the special flight to Washington. The Ambassador reached the absolute heights of diplomacy in the manner in which he declined when he said, "When in Rome, I do as the Romans do, and when flying in America, I would like an American stewardess." And so he flew across the continent last night and his stewardess was Miss Flora Fish. And Mr. Reber had to do something Russian for Ambassador Litvinov and his party, so he put a can of our best Pacific-coast caviar made of salmon eggs from the Columbia River, red salmon eggs, in the larder of Miss Fish on the airplane of the Ambassador flying to Washington.

Just a few words—to finish—about the marvelous flights that have been inaugurated across the Atlantic by the Pan-American Airways—the new air line that now takes our fliers who are carrying flying boats across the route—and it is said that because we now have an air line some 20 percent of losses in airplanes now being delivered across that route to Egypt are going to be saved. It shows the difference between fliers flying on their own, and flyers flying according to schedule in an established air line.

American Legion Post of Maryland Building Its Own Home

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. GLENN BEALL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, on January 24, 1945, it was my privilege to direct attention of the Congress to a project of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, The American Legion, Department of Maryland, for the erection of its own home in my district. Since that time progress has been such that the post expects to be occupying the new building a year from now. In that connection, under leave to extend my remarks, I am incorporating in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following self-explanatory letter and resolutions, together with the poem, March of Freedom, by James Patrick McGovern, a member of the post, which is to be inscribed on a wall panel in the permanent home of this outstanding unit of a great war veterans' organization:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
BETHESDA-CHEVY CHASE POST, NO. 105,
Bethesda, Md., May 6, 1948.

Hon. JAMES PATRICK MCGOVERN,
Munsey Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COMRADE MCGOVERN: I want to personally convey to you my own and the heartfelt thanks of the entire membership of our Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, of The American Legion, for your gracious and generous proposal to make us a gift of a suitable replica of your wonderful poem, March of Freedom, to install in our new clubhouse when erected.

Your proposal was accepted unanimously by the executive committee of the post, and received as well the unanimous approval and acceptance of the post at its regular meeting on April 27, 1948. I have been directed to forward to you a copy of the resolution which was adopted at that meeting, and it is my great pleasure to enclose the same herewith.

You have indeed been most kind, and the boys who have worked so hard to erect a permanent building for our post are extremely grateful to you. I am happy to report that the order has already been given for the drawing of plans and specifications for our new building, and when these have been completed the day will not be far off when actual construction will commence. We hope by this time next year to be occupying our new building.

Again, our sincere thanks and appreciation, and every good wish for your continued good health and prosperity.

Very sincerely yours,

TOM ELWARD,
Commander.

EXCERPT FROM MINUTES OF REGULAR MEETING OF THE BETHESDA-CHEVY CHASE POST, NO. 105, THE AMERICAN LEGION, DEPARTMENT OF MARYLAND, INC., APRIL 27, 1948

At the regular meeting of Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, The American Legion, Department of Maryland, Inc., held at the Chevy Chase Recreation Center, Norwood Drive, Chevy Chase, Md., on the 27th day of April 1948, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas our esteemed comrade, James Patrick McGovern, has graciously offered to provide, at his own expense, a suitable replica of his celebrated poem, March of Freedom, as a gift to this post; and

"Whereas Comrade McGovern has further most generously offered to make provision by codicil to his last will and testament for a magnificent bequest to this post of $1,000, provided the said replica of his poem aforesaid is permanently installed in the new clubhouse to be erected by this post in Bethesda, Md., in the near future; and

"Whereas the executive committee of this post has unanimously recommended the acceptance of the proposal: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, The American Legion, Department of Maryland, Inc., hereby accepts with genuine heartfelt thanks and appreciation, the gracious and generous proposal of Comrade James Patrick McGovern, and directs that when the said replica of his poem, March of Freedom, is received by the post, and when the new clubhouse building has been erected, that the said replica be permanently installed therein as a lasting tribute to his characteristic generosity and as a literary contribution to his fellow comrades and to all mankind; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this post, and a copy thereof be forwarded to Comrade James Patrick McGovern."

The foregoing is a true and correct excerpt from the minutes of Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, The American Legion, Department of Maryland, Inc., at its regular meeting of April 27, 1948.

TOM ELWARD,
Commander.

Adjutant.

MARCH OF FREEDOM

(By James Patrick McGovern, of Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, The American Legion, Department of Maryland)

Our valor now makes live each yesterday
Of bitter struggle wreathed with heroes' deeds,
Since first our fathers blazed their dauntless way
Through virgin tracts and sowed their hearths' new seeds.
Our homes then grew in beauty, love, and peace
Within the fortress of our fruitful land,
Which promised that our State would never cease
As long as justice ruled the heart and hand.
But freedom is an ever restless sea;
It must be always wooed and won again.
To change is life, to strive is destiny;
The rust was never deep for sword and pen.
Our future thus must give our past its due
Of victory again, of peace more true.

Hon. Walter G. Andrews

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that our good friend and able colleague, Hon. WALTER GRESHAM ANDREWS, of New York, has determined to retire from the Congress.

For 18 years he has served the Nation as a Member of this body with ability and courage.

His first love has always been the military service. That service has always found in him one ready to understand its difficulties and to contribute everything in his power to its best interests.

Entering World War I, with a background as a varsity end and back at Princeton and as a private in the First New York Cavalry on the Mexican border, he emerged at the end of the war as a major in the One Hundred and Seventh Infantry, Twenty-seventh Division, with an outstanding war record.

He had been wounded in action. He had been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for gallantry in action. He had received a letter of congratulation from his division commander, Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, stating that in the general's opinion "no company officer in the division had a better record than yours for skill and determined leadership in battle."

Elected to the Seventy-second Congress, he was promptly assigned to the House Committee on Military Affairs, rising to the position of its ranking minority member, and playing a most important role in that capacity during the course of World War II.

He has always fought for his convictions, even when standing almost alone among his committee colleagues. Those present at the time will recall the part which he played in the extension of the Selective Service Act just prior to Pearl Harbor, a measure carried on the floor of the House by a margin of one vote.

His gift for organization manifested itself in connection with the formation of the new House Committee on Armed Services, after the termination of World War II. Appointed chairman of the new committee, it fell to his lot to combine the House Committee on Military Affairs with the House Committee on Naval Affairs and, by appropriate subcommittees and staff, to assume jurisdiction over the Army, the Navy, and the Air Forces of the Nation. His work in this connection was so effective as to command the commendation of all concerned.

The new committee will continue to function in the national interest. Its first chairman will be greatly missed.

As Arthur Krock recently expressed it in the New York Times, there will be many who will regret that he is voluntarily ending a notable career in the interest of domestic and world security.

Summary of Agricultural Act of 1948 and a Comparison of Its Provisions With Current Price-Support Programs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE
OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, since the adjournment of Congress I have received many requests from Members of the House for information regarding the Agricultural Act of 1948, Public Law No. 897, Eightieth Congress. In compliance with these requests the following summary and explanation of the measure is submitted:

SUMMARY OF AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1948 AND A COMPARISON OF ITS PROVISIONS WITH CURRENT PRICE-SUPPORT PROGRAMS

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Agricultural Act of 1948 is in effect a combination of H. R. 6248 as it passed the House, and the price-support and parity provisions of S. 2318 as it passed the Senate. In general, the Agricultural Act of 1948 provides two separate price-support programs for agricultural commodities. One program is to be in effect during 1949. The other program which is to come into effect in 1950 revises the parity formula and establishes a permanent program for supporting the prices of agricultural commodities. The act consists of three titles.

Title I provides price support for agricultural commodities throughout 1949. The level of price support for the basic and certain specified nonbasic commodities is substantially the same level of price support now accorded such commodities. Price support authorized for other commodities is on a flexible basis and on somewhat reduced levels.

Titles II and III provide for a revision of the parity formula and for permanent price support beginning with the year 1950. The level of price support for the basic commodities is mandatory and, with the exception of tobacco, ranges from 60 percent to 90 percent of the parity price depending upon the level of supply. Tobacco is to be supported at 90 percent of parity. For the nonbasic commodities (commodities other than basic), except potatoes and wool, price support is permissive rather than mandatory. The level of such support is discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture and may range from 0 to 90 percent of the parity or comparable price. Certain limitations are placed upon the authority of the Secretary to give price support to perishable commodities. Potatoes and wool are the only nonbasic agricultural commodities which are given mandatory price support and the level of such support ranges from 60 percent to 90 percent of parity.

II. CURRENT PRICE-SUPPORT PROGRAMS IN EFFECT UNDER EXISTING LAW

Under existing law, price-support programs fall generally into four categories:

1. Basic commodities: The basic commodities (corn, cotton, peanuts, rice, tobacco, and wheat) are required to be supported through the 1948 crop by loans at the following rates (corn produced by cooperators outside the commercial corn-producing area would be required to be supported at 75 percent of the level at which corn is supported for cooperators in the commercial corn producing area): To cooperators (those who do not exceed farm acreage allotments), 90 percent of parity (cotton at 92½-percent parity); to noncooperators, 54 percent of parity and only on so much of the commodity as would be subject to penalty under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 if marketed. After the 1948 crop, if the Agricultural Act of 1948 had not been enacted, price support for the basic commodities would have reverted to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 which specifically directed loans to be made on wheat, cotton, corn, and peanuts with the rates ranging from 50 percent of parity to 75 percent of parity to cooperators (with correspondingly lower rates to noncooperators) and authorized loans to be made on other commodities at rates fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture subject to the approval of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the President.

2. Steagall commodities: The Steagall commodities, those commodities with respect to which the Department of Agriculture, by public announcement, requested expanded production during the war (hogs, eggs, chickens, turkeys, milk and butterfat, dry peas of certain varieties, dry edible beans of certain varieties, soybeans for oil, flaxseed for oil, peanuts for oil, American-Egyptian cotton, potatoes, and sweetpotatoes) are required to be supported through December 31, 1948, at not less than 90 percent of the parity or comparable price.

3. Wool: Wool, under existing legislation, is required to be supported through December 31, 1948, at the 1946 support price.

4. Other commodities: With respect to other agricultural commodities, it is declared to be the policy of Congress that the lending and purchase operations of the Department of Agriculture shall be carried out so as to bring the price and income of the producers of such commodities to a fair parity relationship with the basic commodities and the Steagall commodities, to the extent that funds are available for such operations. In the absence of further legislation, this declaration of policy would have terminated on December 31, 1948.

III. PRICE SUPPORT AUTHORIZED UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1948

A. Price support for 1949

The Agricultural Act of 1948 provides for price support for agricultural commodities in 1949. It continues, in substance, the same general classification of commodities for price-support purposes as are contained in existing law, namely, basic commodities, Steagall commodities, wool, and other commodities.

For 1949, the following levels of support are provided for the different classes of commodities:

1. Basic commodities: The basic commodities—corn, cotton, peanuts, rice, tobacco (in computing the parity price of Maryland tobacco during this period, the base period is changed from August 1919–July 1929 to August 1936–July 1941; as of June 15, 1948, this would increase the parity of Maryland tobacco from 38 cents per pound to 49 cents per pound), and wheat—are given mandatory price support through loans, purchases, or other operations at the following rates if producers have not disapproved marketing quotas: To cooperators (those who do not exceed farm-acreage allotments), 90 percent of parity; to noncooperators, 54 percent of parity, and only on so much of the commodities as would be subject to penalty under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 if marketed.

2. Steagall commodities: (a) Irish potatoes harvested before January 1, 1949, milk and butterfat, hogs, chickens, and eggs marketed before January 1, 1950, are given mandatory price support at 90 percent of the parity or comparable price; (b) other Steagall commodities: Dry peas (certain varieties), dry beans (certain varieties), soybeans for oil, flaxseed for oil, peanuts for oil, American-Egyptian cotton, potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turkeys are given mandatory price support at not less than 60 percent of the parity or comparable price and not more than the level of the parity or comparable price at which such commodities were supported in 1948, which in most instances was 90 percent of the parity or comparable price.

3. Wool: Wool is given mandatory price support until June 30, 1950, at the 1946 support price level.

4. Other commodities: Price support is authorized for other agricultural commodities at the discretion of the Secretary. Such price-support programs as may be in effect with respect to such commodities shall be carried out so as to bring the price and income of the producers of such commodities to a fair parity relationship with the basic commodities and the Steagall commodities. Such price support is dependent on the availability of funds for such operations.

B. Price support for 1950 and subsequent years

The permanent price-support programs authorized under the Agricultural Act of 1948 which are to take effect in 1950 are applicable generally to two principal classes of commodities; namely, basic commodities and nonbasic commodities.

1. Basic commodities (cotton, corn (corn produced by cooperators outside the commercial corn-producing area would be required to be supported at 75 percent of the level at which corn is supported for cooperators in the commercial corn-producing area), peanuts, rice, tobacco, and wheat): Price support is directed to be made available to cooperators (those who do not exceed farm-acreage allotments when in effect) through loans, purchases, direct payments, or other operations on corn, cotton, peanuts, rice, and wheat, at minimum levels ranging from 60 to 90 percent of parity, depending on the relation between the total supply of the commodity for the year and the normal supply. This schedule of minimum-price support ranges from 60 percent of parity when the total supply is more than 130 percent of the normal supply up to 90 percent of parity when the total supply is less than 70 percent of the normal supply. Whenever acreage allotments or marketing quotas are in effect, the minimum support price provided in the schedule is automatically increased by 20 percent, except that the support level may not exceed 90 percent of parity. The levels of price support specified for the basic commodities are the minimum levels which must be accorded producers if marketing quotas have not been disapproved. The Secretary of Agriculture is given discretionary authority to support the prices of these commodities at levels as high as 90 percent of parity.

Tobacco is required to be supported at 90 percent of parity in any year in which marketing quotas are in effect.

The support levels referred to above for the basic commodities are applicable only to cooperators. Price support and the level thereof to noncooperators is discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture.

In the event that quotas are disapproved by more than one-third of the affected producers voting in a referendum, the support level authorized is 50 percent of parity.

2. Nonbasic commodities (commodities other than basic commodities): Except for wool, Irish potatoes, and perishables, price support is authorized, at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, for nonbasic commodities at levels ranging from 0 to 90 percent of parity. In providing price support for nonbasic commodities, the Secretary is required to take into consideration the following broad legislative standards:

(a) The supply of the commodity in relation to the demand therefor.

(b) The price levels at which other commodities are being supported.

(c) The availability of funds.

(d) The perishability of the commodity.

(e) Its importance to agriculture and the national economy.

(f) The ability to dispose of stocks acquired through a price-support operation.

(g) The need for offsetting temporary losses of export markets.

(h) The ability and willingness of producers to keep supplies in line with demand.

3. Special provisions applicable to specific nonbasic agricultural commodities.

(a) Wool: The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to support the price of wool at such level not less than 60 percent and not more than 90 percent of parity as he may consider necessary to encourage an annual production of 360,000,000 pounds of shorn wool. (Current production of shorn wool is substantially below 360,000,000 pounds, therefore, the support level of wool for a number of years will be at 90 percent of parity.)

(b) Irish potatoes: The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to support the price of Irish potatoes at not less than 60 percent and not more than 90 percent of parity.

4. Perishable nonbasic commodities: With certain exceptions, price support is prohibited with respect to any nonbasic agricultural commodity (except Irish potatoes) which is so perishable in nature as not to be reasonably storable without excessive loss or excessive cost. An exception is made to permit price support to be given to any perishable nonbasic commodity by operations undertaken with respect to a storable commodity processed from such perishable nonbasic agricultural commodity. A further exception is made to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to support the price of any such perishable nonbasic agricultural commodity through other means available such as those provided by section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, as amended, and by funds appropriated for agricultural price support which are sufficient to cover any loss which may be incurred.

5. Incentive price support: In the event that the Secretary of Agriculture, after a public hearing, finds support-price levels higher than 90 percent of parity to be necessary in order to increase or maintain the production of any agricultural commodity in the interest of national security, he is authorized to put higher price supports into effect.

IV. METHODS OF CARRYING OUT PRICE-SUPPORT PROGRAMS

In carrying out price-support programs the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized after January 1, 1950, in addition to loans, purchases, and other operations, to make direct payments as a means of price support. Prior to that time price support is authorized to be carried out through loans, purchases, and methods other than by direct payments to farmers.

Loans under the price-support program are required to be "nonrecourse" that is, the producer shall not be personally liable for any deficiency arising from the sale of the commodity. However, it is provided that this shall not be construed to prevent the Department from requiring producers to assume liability for deficiencies in the grade, quality, or quantity of commodities stored on the farm or delivered by them, for failure properly to care for and preserve commodities, or for failure or refusal to deliver commodities in accordance with the program. A comparable provision now exists with respect to commodities supported under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

V. CONTROLS AUTHORIZED BY THE AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1948 (MARKETING QUOTAS, ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS, PRODUCTION GOALS, AND MARKETING PRACTICES)

1. Basic commodities: Marketing quotas and acreage allotments are authorized under certain conditions under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. The Agricultural Act of 1948 changes the conditions under which marketing quotas may be proclaimed for corn, wheat, cotton, and rice. Marketing quotas for any such commodity may be proclaimed when it is estimated that the total supply for the marketing year in question will exceed the normal supply by more than 20 percent (8 percent in the case of cotton) or when the average farm price for three successive months of the preceding marketing year has been 66 percent of parity or less, provided the total supply of the commodity for the year is not less than the normal supply.

The time for proclaiming quotas in the case of corn and wheat has been changed from a short time prior to the harvest of the crop on which quotas are to be imposed to sometime prior to the planting of the crop. Likewise, under the new act the referendum to determine whether farmers approve quotas is to be held prior to the planting of the crop. The date by which the Secretary is required to proclaim marketing quotas for cotton and rice is the same as under the 1938 act. In each case, the date is prior to the planting of the crop.

Prior legislation which is not changed by this act requires marketing quotas to be proclaimed for peanuts each year.

In the case of tobacco, no change is made in the basic provisions for proclaiming quotas, but a proviso is added which makes these provisions largely ineffective. Under the proviso, the Secretary is required to proclaim a national marketing quota for each marketing year for each kind of tobacco for which a national marketing quota was proclaimed for the immediately preceding marketing year. The proviso also requires the Secretary to proclaim a national marketing quota for Virginia sun-cured tobacco for each marketing year for which a quota is proclaimed for fire-cured tobacco. Thus, once the Secretary has proclaimed quotas for any kind of tobacco for any marketing year after the act becomes effective, he is required to proclaim a national marketing quota for that kind of tobacco for each succeeding marketing year without regard to the price or supply situation.

In determining national acreage allotments for corn and wheat and the national baleage allotment for cotton, the Secretary is required to give consideration to imports of the commodity involved. No such change is made in the tobacco, rice, and peanut provisions.

All marketing quotas are to take effect unless opposed by more than one-third of the farmers voting in a referendum.

2. Nonbasic commodities: In providing price support for nonbasic agricultural commodities the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require compliance by producers with acreage allotments, production goals, and marketing practices prescribed by the Secretary as a condition of eligibility for price support.

VI. LIMITATIONS UPON THE AUTHORITY OF THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION TO SELL AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES OWNED BY IT

In order to prevent sales of farm commodities by the Commodity Credit Corporation in a manner which would impair price-support operations under the permanent price-support program, certain limitations are imposed upon the price at which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell farm commodities acquired or held by it. These limitations, generally comparable to those now in effect, provide that the Commodity Credit Corporation shall not sell any farm commodity owned or controlled by it at less than (1) a price determined on a pricing basis for its stocks of such commodity on hand, which makes due allowance for grade, type, quality, location, and other factors and which are reasonably calculated to reimburse it for costs incurred by it with respect to such stocks; (2) a price halfway between the support price, if any, and the parity price of such commodity; or (3) a price equivalent to 90 percent of the parity price of such commodity, whichever price is the lowest. Certain sales are excepted from this directive which permits sales to prevent loss or waste through spoilage, sales for other than primary uses, and sales for other specified purposes.

VII. CHANGES IN THE PARITY FORMULA

One of the most significant and major changes made by the Agricultural Act of 1948 is the change in the parity formula. In substance, the new formula would retain the 1910–14 relationship between the prices of agricultural commodities and the prices of things that farmers buy in determining parity for agricultural prices generally, but would use the last preceding 10-year period in determining the parity relationship among the agricultural commodities themselves. The parity price for any agricultural commodity under the new formula is to be determined by dividing the average price received by farmers for that commodity during the preceding 10 calendar years (or during the 10 marketing seasons beginning within this period) by the index of prices received by farmers for all commodities during the same period to determine an adjusted base price. This adjusted base price is then multiplied by the current index of prices paid by farmers, including interest and taxes to obtain the current parity price.

In addition to the change in the parity formula, transitional parity prices are provided for commodities whose parity prices, as calculated under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, are higher than the parity prices as calculated above. The transitional parity price of a commodity at any date shall be its parity price as calculated under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, less 5 percent of the parity price so determined, multiplied by the number of full calendar years which have elapsed after January 1, 1949. This means that as of January 1, 1950, when title II of the Agricultural Act of 1948 goes into effect, the transitional parity price, where applicable, will be 95 percent of the parity price as formerly calculated.

The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized, after a public hearing, to put into effect for particular commodities other methods of computing parity if their parity prices as provided for above appear to be seriously out of line with the parity prices of other agricultural commodities.

The definition of parity income is also revised, but it has no substantive effect, since no operating provisions of the bill are based on parity income.

VIII. CHANGES IN THE METHOD OF CALCULATING SUPPLY

The terms carry-over, normal supply, and total supply are used in connection with marketing quotas, acreage allotments, and the levels of price support. The definitions of carry-over and total supply in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 have been changed by the Agricultural Act of 1948, the principal effect of which is to include imports, and, in the case of cotton, to exclude foreign-held stocks produced in the United States.

The definition of "normal supply" with respect to cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and peanuts in the 1938 act has also been changed by the 1948 act. Normal supply of these commodities is to be determined by estimating domestic consumption and exports for specified years and by adding thereto an allowance for carry-over. Such carry-over allowance is the same as under the 1938 act except that cotton has been reduced from 40 percent to 30 percent. In the case of peanuts to which the term is made applicable for the first time, the percentage carry-over is 15. In addition, the Secretary of Agriculture is given discretionary authority to make adjustments in normal supply for current trends in consumption and for unusual conditions.

IX. CONTROL OF IMPORTS

Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act authorizes the imposition of import fees and quotas on articles imported into the United States whenever the importation of such articles interferes with certain agricultural programs undertaken by the Department of Agriculture. The Agricultural Act of 1948 amended this section to include price support among such programs to prevent imports from materially interfering with price-support programs.

X. SECTION 32 FUNDS

Title III of the act of 1948 provides that beginning with the fiscal year 1950, funds appropriated under section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935, for use in encouraging exportation of agricultural commodities and increasing (by means of diversion programs) domestic consumption of agricultural commodities and reestablishing farmers' purchasing power, may, to the extent not utilized, be accumulated up to $300,000,000.

XI. SOIL CONSERVATION

Section 4 of the Agricultural Act of 1948 extends until December 31, 1950, the period during which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to carry out Federal programs relating to soil conservation under sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

APPENDIX

Table 1 illustrates the relationships between parity as defined in the Agricultural Act of 1948 and parity prices calculated under the present formula for major agricultural commodities. The table also illustrates the transitional parity-price provision by assuming that the bill went into effect on January 1, 1948.

Thou Shalt Not—Or FEPC

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. RICHARD B. RUSSELL

OF GEORGIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a strong argument pointing out the fallacies of the misnamed fair employment practices law from the pen of Dr. Edward Rumely.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THOU SHALT NOT—OR FEPC

"Whoever shall worship any other God than the Lord," begins the 1650 preamble to the Connecticut penal code, "shall surely be put to death." The heavy hand of organized society did not stop at mere worship; the manner of worship, the ritual, was also the concern of the law, and believers who preferred unauthorized rituals were pilloried, exiled, and threatened with death.

For 300 years, then, compulsory virtue has been an integral of American polity. Despite our democratic protestations, we deny the right of error, once the truth has been legalized, and are quick to put the rod of the law to those who persist in pursuing what has been officially declared a fallacy; like polygamy (which is a most common practice), or free trade (there is no other kind), or gambling (which is freedom of choice). Our Judeo-Christian conscience is strong for statute sin.

Right now our lawmakers are tinkering with a plan to curb the human impulse to choose one's associates. The raging passion of righteousness is directed at employers who close their pay rolls to persons of particular creeds, races, or ancestry. Accordingly, a law is advocated to compel such employers to subscribe to the brotherhood of man, unprejudiced. To see that they so do, there shall be set up an inquisitorial tribunal to be known as the Fair Employment Practices Commission.

If this latest experiment in enforced morality is put into operation, it will not only fail in its purpose (as has every other such law) but will spawn practices more reprehensible than the one it is aimed to correct, and will give society another push down the steep hill of collectivism.

Generally speaking, American law has not been too intrusive in the realm of human associations. In the South, to be sure, whites are not permitted to commingle with Negroes, and in all the States when, how, and with whom we may live in conjugal bliss is covered by code. Seeing how social welfare is coming to the fore these days, the possibility of legalized human breeding must not be put aside, nor should we forget that security could cause suspension of the meetings of the Caliopean Literary Society. But, on the whole, companionship is one human habit American law does not yet intrude upon too much.

In the matter of business associates, however, this abstention is weakening. That is because of the growing notion that private capital is a reprehensible institution, one that bears watching, curbing, and chastisement. Since the owner of capital came by it dishonestly, the notion runs, the society from which he got it has a moral, if not legal, claim to it, and therefore is justified in designating his collaborators. Freedom of choice must be curtailed. And yet, when you think of it you see that as a practical matter, the free exercise of judgment in the selection of associates is essential to both the owner of capital and society. When a capital owner employs a helper he is entrusting capital to his care; the lowliest member of the crew has it within his power to do harm to these accumulations, and even bankruptcy can be traced to the incompetence or dishonesty of lieutenants. The success of a business depends on sound judgment in the selection of subordinates. Its failure does not benefit society. If the employer is held accountable by the market place, refusing him its custom when he is inefficient, the market place ought not to interfere with the conduct of his business. Enterprise can serve only when it is free.

Congeniality is an important element in selection; it is as important as competence. A complement of workers of similar backgrounds and habits will be more productive than one characterized by divergencies. In time, of course, association will liquidate the particularisms of Chinese, Spaniards, Masons, Jews, and Catholics, but until the edges of strangeness wear off the team cannot cooperate to best advantage. Then, again, the nature of the work may necessitate selection of workers on the basis of religion, race, or ancestry. You could hardly expect the publisher of Catholic books to employ Protestants, a kosher butcher to employ one unsympathetic to the ritual, a Chinese laundryman to employ one with whom communication is difficult.

It is when the choice is influenced by dislike of racial or religious groups that the charge of sinfulness is made. It is a wrong against society, if not against God, to refuse employment to Jews as Jews, to Catholics as Catholics. Why? True, prejudice is an irrationality, perhaps a form of insanity. But if all irrationality were banned by law, would there be anybody to enforce it? Can ignorance or emotionalism be abolished by decree? He who hates his fellow man harbors a canker in his heart, and if the cankerous condition gives him pleasure, that is his affair. At any rate, society has no power to make him over, no mandate to try it.

The charge is made, however, that in venting his spleen against given groups the employer deprives them of their right to earn a livelihood. That is silly. If he employs a Jew instead of a Frenchman, the latter may be hurt; but if the selection is reversed, the Jew is hurt; there being but one job, one or the other must suffer unemployment. If he has need of both workers and refuses to hire one of them because of his prejudice, then he hurts himself, which is his privilege. The right to earn a livelihood is impaired by the lack of jobs, not by prejudice, and the current FEPC enthusiasm is not directed at the economic problem of unemployment. It is a venture in compulsory ethics only.

The incongruity of this FEPC business is shown when we follow through on principle. If the law—which is presumed to be an impartial agency of society—may compel a man to employ one he does not favor, it may also compel a man to labor for an undesirable employer. So, a white lawyer would be justified in refusing the case of a Negro client, and an Andy Cohen could be hailed into court for refusing to play ball for a John McGraw. If a writer should refuse to sell his manuscript to a publisher because of the latter's faith, and the manuscript should prove to be a gold-mine, why should not the publisher look to the law for damages? When labor is scarce, or when a particular laborer possesses unique skill, it would be quite proper (if the FEPC law is proper) for the rejected employer to howl "discrimination."

What may we reasonably expect to follow from the enactment of an FEPC law? Prejudice where there is none, more intense prejudice where it already exists, and, of course, a tendency toward evasion. A man who now hires without regard to race or creed would be inclined, under the law, to take these facts into consideration; for the subsequent discharge of an employee for any reason might cause him to be hauled up as a discriminator; if the investigating committee should qualify the discharged employee the possibility of a backpay fine could be added to the unpleasantness of forced association with the unwanted person. Firms which do not now consider the applicant's race or religion, as well as those which do, would have to guard against the wrath of the FEPC by employing some of those usually considered discriminated against, and these would always carry the stigma of "necessary evil." They would be so singled out not only by the employers but also by their fellow-workers, with consequent unpleasantness. Since the proposed law also presumes to protect the employee from discrimination in the matter of advancement, there would always be the suspicion that the one advanced did not actually deserve preference, that he was a sop to the law. Prejudice would thus be accentuated.

Legal efforts to compel comformance with a prescribed code of behavior always bring about practices more reprehensible than the evil singled out for correction. Our experience with the prohibition amendment vividly emphasized that fact. People drank more, not less, because of this attempt at compulsory abstinence, and the evils of the saloon were as nothing compared to those of bootlegging, hijacking, and the speakeasy. So with the antidiscrimination law. Detective agencies would be employed to supply information about the race, religion, and ancestry of applicants, for the employer is prohibited by this law from asking such questions. If an employee resigns of his own accord the charge of discrimination would be automatically voided; therefore, nasty means of forcing resignations would be resorted to. Reference would be so worded as to tip off prospective employers and make rejections of the applicant within the law. Nor is it impossible that union leaders would, at a price, lend themselves to discriminatory practices by refusing, on the ground of incompetence, to certify certain undesirables for employment. The law puts people on their guard and spurs the imagination.

Some of the situations FEPC would be confronted with, and the incongruities that would ensue from its efforts to handle them, are worth considering.

Would the FEPC "qualify" an atheist for the faculty of a Catholic university? Would it undertake to advise advancement of a white professor at a Negro institution? How would it handle discrimination in the manning of hospital staffs? Or of editorial staffs? Or its own staffs? If the next step in the advancement of a worker is a managerial post FEPC would be in a position to influence the policies of a business, and how would it meet the objection of the owners on these grounds?

One law now condones, even demands, discrimination. Under practices following from the Wagner Labor Relations Act, an employer is compelled to give preference to a labor union member, which is definitely discriminatory. Suppose, in compliance with this law, an employer "discriminates" in favor of a Jew who is a member of the union and against a Catholic who is not and who cannot gain admission into the union. Suppose the latter brings his case to the FEPC. This agency for nondiscrimination is put into contention with the discriminatory one. Which will prevail? Will the FEPC have power to compel the union to enlarge its membership by including the Catholic? It is an all-Jewish, closed-book union.

During times of widespread unemployment the problem of the FEPC would be most poignant. Many of those dropped from the pay rolls would undoubtedly bring up the charge of discrimination. The crowded calendar of the FEPC (like every bureau, it would always be undermanned) would compel resort to peremptory rules of placement, but since under the circumstances most of the complainants would remain unemployed, the charge of discrimination would be leveled at the FEPC itself. (Even at its inception, the proposed FEPC would be discriminatory, in that firms employing less than 50, as well as nonprofit organizations, are exempted from the provisions of the law. Why?)

These confusions and contradictions are inherent in the proposed law because it attemps to deal with the ethical consequences of an economic problem which it cannot solve. If the problem of unemployment were solved, the problem of prejudice would be academic. But more important than the prejudice problem is the power which would be thrust on the FEPC by its peculiar functions. For fear of reprisals or to avoid investigations, employers would turn to this agency for help at the nonmanagerial level at any rate. Thus, the FEPC could in time become the national employment agency, and in effect the workers would achieve civil-service ranking. The power thus acquired by the FEPC would not be unlike that exercised by labor administrations under fascism. The unions would be superseded, private employment agencies would go out of business, personnel departments would be of no use.

The political potential of the FEPC must not be overlooked. The temptation to buy votes with a record of antidiscrimation placements could not be put aside by the regime, while the opposition would make the charge, even if it were not true, for the purpose of winning the suffrage of those who were discriminated against; our political campaigns would be impregnated with the stench of racial and religious antagonisms. Furthermore, while the proposed law does not contemplate discrimination on the grounds of sex, age, or the fraternity one belongs to, what would prevent pressure groups from demanding that the scope of the FEPC be extended? The over-40 workers could in justice claim discrimination, while unemployed women linotypers might ask for redress on the same grounds. Since power is all a bureaucrat lives for, would not the FEPC be tempted to either encourage or foster such pressure groups?

It is said that Communists and fellow travelers are promoting this latest piece of moralistic legislation. They should be, if they are not, because the friction and the confusion ensuing from its enactment would be just the thing for the advancement of American communism. Moreover, the power over industry that would gravitate toward the FEPC would make it a useful instrument to get hold of. Its chairman would be a commissar in fact.

Rural Electrification

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. WAYLAND BROOKS
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement I have prepared on rural electrification.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, the Eightieth Congress has made greater appropriations for the Rural Electrification Administration to extend and improve rural service to American farms than any Congress in history.

I am particularly proud of the accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress, both in the first and second sessions, with respect to the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, including the REA, because I was charged with the responsibility of sponsoring the measures in the Senate in connection with my position as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Not only as a Member of the United States Senate, but also as the owner and operator of a farm in La Salle County, Ill., I deemed it a pleasure and a privilege to be of service to the farmers of our Nation in this connection.

In 13 years of its existence, REA has done a magnificent job and we of the Eightieth Congress are gratified in our ability to implement this very valuable program.

With the funds which we have authorized, including $400,000,000 to extend and improve rural electric service for the fiscal year 1949, REA systems will be able to materially increase the number of electrified farms on REA lines over and above the approximate 2,000,000 farms and rural establishments which were receiving such service as of January 1, 1948.

The new appropriations for REA loans will enable the financing of more than 34,000 miles of line and other electrical facilities to serve more than 100,000 customers.

The new appropriation is a boon particularly to the farmers of Illinois where approximately 51,000 farms are still without electric service. According to information from the REA, at the present time 74.9 percent of all farms in Illinois are electrified, and it is my sincere hope that this percentage will be materially and substantially increased in the immediate future.

The $400,000,000 appropriation for REA is $100,000,000 more than was recommended by the President and $175,000,000 more than was voted for the same activity a year ago.

The recommendations of my subcommittee definitely refute the allegation by spokesmen for the New Deal administration that the Republican-controlled Congress attempted to impede REA developments for the sake of economy in Federal expenditures.

Republican Senators and Congressmen in weeks past received letters from REA customers and potential customers back home enclosing samples of a mimeographed form letter emanating from New Deal sources carrying these false allegations.

I reiterate that all REA customers and prospective customers should know that the REA now has on hand or has authority to borrow, more funds for expansion of its system than has already been spent since the agency was originally established. When REA Administrator Claude R. Wickard, testified before my subcommittee, as charman, I questioned him relative to these letters, but Mr. Wickard personally declared that his office had made no such statements.

Mr. Wickard, in denying that he or his department, had ever made such a statement, declared that the allegations were wholly incorrect and untrue. I assure the farmers of Illinois and of the entire Nation that I desire to see that all farm people have the advantages and comforts which can be obtained through electrification. It is an insidious and vicious thing, however, for anyone to say that rural electrification has been hampered by economies effected by the Republican blocs in the House and Senate.

As a matter of fact, many extensions of service have been delayed because the Truman administration has allowed strategic supplies and equipment, such as copper wire, transformers, distributors, etc., to be shipped abroad, even to the Russian Government, to the detriment of and discrimination against our own American farmers.

To further implement my position in this matter, I insert herewith in the RECORD the text of an article which I prepared for the magazine Rural Electrification, which is published by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association:

"AMERICAN PRODUCTION FOR WHOM?—OUR FARMERS NEED ELECTRIC PRODUCTS EXPORTED TO RUSSIA AND SATELLITES

"(By C. WAYLAND BROOKS,[1] United States Senator, Illinois, chairman, Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture)

"During 13 years, REA-financed power systems have brought comfort, convenience and the other contributions of electricity to over 2,000,000 rural families. But another 2,000,000 families who have just as much right to twentieth century living are still waiting for power lines to reach their homes, to modernize their barns and farmyards.

"The Rural Electrification Administration has done a magnificent job during these 13 years. The farmers of America who have banded together for the purpose of using the lending and advisory opportunities offered by REA to electrify their own homes and businesses have made an equally brilliant record in the annals of modern America. Congress has amply recognized the importance these contributions to agriculture and to our Nation by REA and that agency's farmer-borrowers. Money and more loan funds have been made available to continue the electrification of our farm homes and rural establishments.

"MATERIALS MUST BE AVAILABLE

"But more than REA loans and the aggressive pioneer spirit of self-help and ingenuity are required in building rural electric distribution lines. Materials — transformers, conductors, poles—must be available on the American market for sale to American business, such as rural electric cooperatives, if the electrification of rural America is to be completed in a reasonable period of time. And the electric power to keep the lights burning and the motors turning on our farms must be generated if rural electrification is to have any real meaning.

"It is not America's farmers, REA, nor the Congress which has fallen down in this period of shortage of construction materials for building and energizing rural power lines. Many things have contributed to the current shortage of materials. The long-restrained demand of American business and the American home was released after World War II, and this demand has kept the supply channels almost dry as industrial and consumer products have been gobbled up as fast as they reached the wholesale or retail markets.

"Even so, it is not necessary that American families go without modern conveniences and the modern necessity of electricity if the output of American industry is offered first to American people. This has not been the case. While our farmers have been asked to feed the world their very productive ability has been held down and their living has been relegated to that of the people of a second-rate nation because electric power lines have not been extended to their doors. And some of the very materials, machinery, apparatus, and appliances which could change all this have been diverted to foreign markets.

"But that is not all. An examination of our export statistics during the past 3 years shows that 10 percent of the electrical equipment and materials which have been exported—and nearly a billion dollars' worth has been shipped abroad in those 3 years—has gone to Soviet Russia and her satellite nations of Yugoslavia, Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia.

"We are engaged in a defense program, requiring additional amounts of electric generating capacity in America. We are forced to devote money, materials, and manpower to this defense program because of the aggressive international policies of these very Communistic countries, to whom we send materials and equipment needed here in America.

"MEMORY OF JAP SCRAP FRESH

"Surely the memory of our shipments of scrap-iron to Japan—for use in making the shell and shrapnel which later killed thousands of America's young men—has not been forgotten. The follies of the 1930's should not be repeated again in the 1940's. Mankind will never make the progress all men of good will hope for if the lessons of the past are so blithely forgotten so soon.

"The facts which make this situation painfully true can be examined by anyone interested in reading statistics compiled by the Department of Commerce. Here are just a few of them.

"Exports of certain items of electrical machinery and apparatus, and copper wire, needed by rural electric systems and their consumers during the past 2 years were valued as follows:

	1946	1947	January to April 1948
Generators and sets	$59,525,000	$69,377,000	$21,156,000
Transmitting and distributing apparatus	15,142,000	32,063,000	13,206,000
Transforming and converting apparatus	9,828,000	20,810,000	7,765,000
Electric refrigerators [1]	11,640,000	39,629,000	15,700,000
Household appliances	12,180,000	35,154,000	11,357,000
Radio apparatus	54,467,000	113,724,000	30,648,000
Telephone apparatus	10,632,000	25,559,000	10,815,000
Copper wire, assorted [2]	18,198,000	31,312,000	16,342,000

[1] 102,798 household refrigerators in 1946, and 273,624 in 1947.

[2] Includes bare, rubber-covered, weatherproof and other insulated copper wire in the following amounts: 1946, 70,731,000 pounds; 1947, 74,477,000 pounds.

"A total of $51,005,000 worth of electrical machinery and apparatus was exported by the United States during the last three months of 1945, $299,000,000 in 1946, $562,930,000 in 1947 and $187,982,000 in the first four months of 1948. Millions of pounds of wire and nearly 1,000,000 transforming and converting units shipped abroad during that period were critically needed in the United States. The Congress provided for a moratorium on import duties on copper last year largely because the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association and other organizations showed the need for it in the shortage of copper wire and other copper products. To bring the subject even closer to the hearth of our homes, consider the extreme shortage of household refrigerators in 1946, when we allowed 102,798 of them to be exported.

"Another interesting fact revealed by Department of Commerce statistics is the distribution of electrical products shipped abroad in the past few years. This is part of what the records show concerning the value of exports shipped to foreign nations:

	1946	1947
Sweden	$3,641,000	$13,090,000
Norway	999,000	2,774,000
United Kingdom	2,367,000	7,583,000
Netherlands	2,449,000	3,953,000
France	3,458,000	8,511,000
Italy	329,000	1,268,000
Greece	1,517,000	2,376,000
Turkey	1,785,000	3,962,000
China	14,128,000	18,306,000
Germany	85,000	65,000
Switzerland	1,129,000	4,897,000
Iran		1,470,000
U. S. S. R. (Russia)	44,056,000	19,992,000
Yugoslavia	856,000	1,694,000
Czechoslovakia	456,000	1,333,000
Poland and Danzig	968,000	4,627,000
Rumania	1,000	12,000
Bulgaria	1,000	97,000

"Furthermore, during the first four months, January through April, of this year we exported electrical machinery and apparatus valued at $3,992,000 to Russia.

"GIVING ADVANTAGE AWAY

"If our main productive advantage over Russia is in manpower and industrialization, we seem to be giving the second of these advantages away with a remarkable generosity. It is to be hoped that we are not, in the long run, giving our American heritage away at the same time. The export of electrical equipment and apparatus valued at $89,560,000 to Russia and seven of her dominated satellites is as dangerous as it is unfair to the 2,000,000 farm and rural families who have waited so long for the comforts and advantages of central station electric service.

[1] Senator BROOKS is a veteran of World War I, was elected to the Senate to fill out a term in 1940 and reelected in 1942. He resides in Chicago, and owns a farm in La Salle County."

"If there was ever a time for hard-headed and prudent foreign and domestic policies, it is today. Agricultural production is irrevocably tied into our foreign policy, and electricity is the latest and greatest stimulus to increased farm production. The practice of giving foreign countries the materials vitally needed to relieve the critical bottleneck in rural electrification in America, despite the protests of Congress, particularly to those countries whose expansion and agitation threaten free peoples everywhere, should cease immediately.

"It is in the power of the American people to insist that the new Congress elected in 1948 and the next President of the United States be cooperative in meeting this pressing problem of the American farmers who have waited so long for electric service. Complete coordination between the legislative and executive branches of our national Government to achieve this objective is imperative."

I also insert a statement made by Mr. Clyde T. Ellis, executive manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture on April 28, 1948, as follows:

"Senator BROOKS. Mr. Ellis, we are ready to hear from you.

"Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my name is Clyde T. Ellis. I am executive manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, Inc., which is the national service organization of the rural-electric systems of the country. Seven hundred and sixty-six of the rural-electric systems are members of the national association, representing a consumer membership of 1,525,691 farm families in 42 States and Alaska.

"Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you, on behalf of all our people that we were very sorry you could not get out to address our last meeting of the members in Chicago. We told the more than 3,000 of the people who were present that we were more than grateful to you and to your committee for putting the $25,000,000 in the bill last year after the House had taken it out. I believe your judgment has been well sustained by the facts the past year."

Following is the text of a letter received from Mr. Ellis under date of June 17, 1948:

"This gives me the opportunity to say to you, Senator, as Congress is about to adjourn, that we the rural-electric systems of the country have enjoyed working with you through this office during the past year. We appreciated the splendid hearing which you, as chairman of the Agriculture Subcommittee, gave to our president, Mr. Craddock, to each of our 10 members of the legislative committee representing all sections of the country, and to me. We appreciate the largest REA loan authorization in the program's history which has just been approved by the Congress as recommended by your committee.

"With kindest personal regards, I am,

"Sincerely,

"CLYDE T. ELLIS,
"Executive Manager."

Arab Fascist Propagandists Rebuked by Judge

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have referred before to the inexcusable propaganda and political activities of a number of Arab front organizations and agitators, whose purpose it is to prevent the successful execution of our country's policies in the Middle East.

Among these organizations are the so-called League for Peace with Justice in Palestine, the Institute for Arab-American Affairs, the Arab Office, the Committee for Justice and Peace in the Holy Land, and a variety of affiliated groups.

The activities of several of these organizations have recently been subjected to searching scrutiny, during 23 days of sworn testimony in a New York magistrate's court.

This action started as a result of the unparalleled audacity of the pro-Arab group in filing a criminal-libel complaint against Rev. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, chairman of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League—which had distributed to delegates to the United Nations Assembly and to the press, a carefully documented brochure entitled "Pan-Arab Propaganda: Its Pro-Fascist and Pro-Nazi Aspects in America."

This brochure was a detailed, documentary memorandum showing how key figures in the present pro-Arab agitation had once been intimately associated with Hitler's German-American Bund, and how others—backed up by unlimited funds—are engaged in deliberately and systematically stirring up anti-Jewish hatreds and other forms of bigotry, here in America, as a device toward achieving their selfish ends.

Believing—like others before them—that manifold millions of dollars might be able to hide or suppress the truth, some of these pro-Arab agents caused their attorney, Hallam M. Richardson, to go into court to prevent the continued distribution of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League's publications.

As a result of a hearing marked by a striking wealth of detail, and the most sensational admissions wrung from the pro-Arabs themselves, Judge H. Bushel, in New York magistrate's court, handed down an opinion on May 26 which (1) excoriates the pro-Arab attorney, both for his evil associates and for his attempt to exploit the court's processes for propaganda purposes; (2) upholds all of the sensational findings of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League, as accurate and even "conservative and restrained," and (3) holds for further investigation the financial records of the pan-Arab propagandists.

Here are some of the things which counsel for the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League brought out during these hearings:

The head of an allegedly "American" organization engaged in pro-Arab propaganda, Benjamin Freedman, was disclosed as sending cables wishing "vision, courage and strength" to that arch war criminal, the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, who was Hitler's right-hand ally in Middle Eastern affairs throughout the war. Thus the misnamed League for Peace with Justice in Palestine was publicly branded as an American agency of the Mufti and his Arab higher committee. * * *

An unnaturalized Englishman, a former official of the British foreign office, now living and doing profitable business in our midst, as head of a multi-million-dollar corporation, was disclosed as one of the three men who were the real founders of this pan-Arab propaganda machine. This man is named Capt. Charles Percy Passman.

Cables and letters from Freedman, relative to huge shipments of war supplies, and the projected construction of a Thompson submachine gun factory to aid the Moslems in Pakistan, with the clear purpose of preventing any American embargo from being effective, were presented in court by officials of the Western Union Co. and other cable agencies. * * *

The most conspicuous Arab publicist in the United States, H. I. Katibah, was revealed as the author of the lead article on a pro-Hitler propaganda monthly published in Boston, Mass., in 1933. * * *

The lawyer, Hallam M. Richardson, who has represented these powerful Arab interests in approximately a score of cases, was revealed as a former associate of the unspeakably vile Christian Front agitator, Joseph McWilliams, who was indicted for sedition during the war and whose un-American activities earned him the lavish praise of Hitler's agents. (Among Richardson's clients have been McWilliams, Freedman, Katibah, the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine, and Ahmad Hussein, head of the ultranationalist Young Egypt Party.)

The pan-Arab propagandists are afraid to submit their financial accounts to public scrutiny in court, probably for the reason that they fear self-incrimination under the the Federal Foreign Agents Registration Act. * * *

Mr. Loy Henderson, Director of the State Department's Office of Near Eastern and African Affairs, was revealed as the addressee of at least 17 person-to-person phone calls from Freedman. The telephone company's original records of these calls were actually introduced in court over the strenuous objection of Mr. Henderson's friends. * * *

Freedman and Katibah were exposed as the real authors of diplomatic memoranda submitted to the State Department by the official Washington legations of the Arab countries. * * *

The chief propagandist, Freedman, was revealed as a regular visitor at the Washington office of the Arab-American Oil Co.

It was shown that in addition to using paid advertising in the daily press, these agitators were not above having their literature reprinted in such un-American, hate-spreading publications as those of Gerald Winrod and Leon de Aryan, who were indicted for sedition during the war, or in the bulletin of the National Economic Council, whose head, Merwin K. Hart, has long been an object of scrutiny as the leading pro-Franco apologist on this side of the Atlantic. So close was the liaison between Freedman and Hart that Freedman has recently been made a director of Hart's organization.

The tie-up between these agitators and propagandists and the official legations of the Arabs was so intimate that the mailing lists of the League for Peace With Justice in Palestine and the Arab Higher Committee were actually combined into one master list, so that persons contacting Freedman's League were also put on the propaganda mailing list of the Higher Committee, headed by the Grand Mufti. Persons on this list were then mailed such publications as the infamous Black Paper on the Jewish Agency and Zionist Terrorism in Palestine, and the Grand Mufti's so-called Arab Charter for Palestine, which was at one time inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by a Member of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the startling and far-reaching disclosures brought forth in this trial mark an important turning point in the whole history of the Palestine question.

The Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League has shown that the most powerful, the best known, the most apparently respectable apologists for the Arab cause in America are, in fact, tied up—financially, politically, economically, and personally—with foreign agents sent here by the Arab states to undo and subvert the official policies of our own country. Among these agitators are to be found not only the spokesman of the Mufti and diplomatic representatives of ostensibly friendly Arab powers but also prominent Englishmen, and, in addition, notorious agitators with a record of pro-Hitler activity extending back 15 years.

Mr. Speaker, the record of the hearing in Richardson's complaint against Reverend Atkinson covers 2,000 pages and includes 300 documents of the greatest historical and diplomatic importance.

Prof. James H. Sheldon, administrative chairman of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League, has assured me that his organization is making this entire record available to the Department of Justice.

If ever there was a clear call for the Justice Department to act, and act vigorously under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, now is the time. I am sure that the author of that act, Congressman JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, would agree with me in this estimate.

The audacity of these agitators is unlimited. At this very moment, some of the same propagandists whose dark deeds have just been exposed, have created for themselves a new mask of concealment, under the name "American Middle East Relief, Inc." How typical is this of the enemies of freedom. The bigot or the dictator tries always to cloak himself in a mantle of false patriotism, fake religion, or simulated humanitarianism.

So, following the well-worn path, after the subversive contacts of their Arab Office had been exposed, and after this court action had laid bare the schemes of pro-Nazis in the Institute for Arab-American Affairs, and when the evil plottings of Freedman and the League for Peace with Justice in Palestine had been dragged out into the light of day—then the next move of these Arab agitators was to try to appeal to our feelings of mercy, in the guise of a relief organization.

American Middle East Relief, Inc., has an elaborate and expensive office in the Empire State Building, in New York. The size of its office is all out of proportion to the few thousand dollars of so-called relief which it has disbursed to the Arabs and their allies—with no thought, of course, to ministering to the unfortunate Israelis and their needs.

The Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League is about to make public an exposé of this new Arab front—or should I say, this new front for British and oil interests. The league has discovered that among the eight incorporators of this new so-called "relief" organization, two were original members of the prewar Arab National League, the organization affiliated with Hitler's German-American Bund. Another in the head of the violently nationalist Syrian Lebanese Federation of the Eastern States. Three are officers of the discredited Institute for Arab-American Affairs—one, indeed, is listed as the treasurer of the institute.

Finally, when one goes to the officers of this "relief" organization, the literature one gets has nothing to do with the amelioration of human suffering—but consists instead, of documents attacking the United Nations' policy of establishing an independent state of Palestine.

Here then, is the new problem ahead of us: To fight anti-Palestine propaganda concealed in the cloak of false humanitarianism, and to fight misled liberal pacifism fronting for pro-Fascist and pro-oil interests—as in the case of the so-called Committee for Freedom and Justice in the Holy Land, whose lobbyists have now made their headquarters here in the very shadow of the Capitol.

We imprisoned Hitler's agents when they came here to spread division and hate among us. We prosecuted Communists when they concealed their foreign connections. We deported from our shores an undesirable and motley multitude of German, Japanese, Russian, and other agitators. Why should these men like Freedman and Passman, who have hidden their real background, go unpunished when they come into our midst to sell the propaganda wares of that notorious ally of our enemies, the Grand Mufti, and his Fascist legions?

I include below the text of Judge Bushel's outstanding opinion—and, with the judge, I say "Well done" to the splendid organization which succeeded in exposing these rascals, and had the courage to stand its ground when viciously attacked:

OPINION BY JUDGE HYMAN BUSHEL, IN THE COMPLAINT OF HALLAM M. RICHARDSON AGAINST REV. DR. HENRY A. ATKINSON, CHAIRMAN OF THE ADVISORY BOARD OF THE NONSECTARIAN ANTI-NAZI LEAGUE

I have heard the testimony and I am ready to make a decision.

Complainant charges that the defendant Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, who is well known and widely respected as an executive of an organization working to promote peace through interfaith, interchurch, international, and interracial understanding and good will, wantonly and willfully published with others a 20-page printed pamphlet entitled "Memorandum for the Assembly of the United Nations," in violation of penal law, section 1340. From the rambling specifications of the complaint, which, in its vehement and vitriolic language, makes the publication complained of seem conservative and restrained, there emerges the charge that the pamphlet alleged to have been published by the defendant tends to reflect upon the professional standing, good sense, fairness, and patriotism of the complainant. The complainant has submitted a marked copy of the pamphlet herein and the passages relied upon by him in support of his complaint are marked off. The only reference to the complainant in those marked passages is on page 11, which states:

"The political ideology of the Freedman-Passman-Katibah group may be judged from their selection of Hallam M. Richardson as legal counsel in the affairs of the League for Peace with Justice in Palestine. Richardson has long been known in the halls of pro-Fascist propagandists. He served as attorney for Paul Castorina, editor of the Black Shirt and convicted head of the prewar American Union of Fascists. He was also associated as counsel and otherwise with Joseph McWilliams, head of the notorious Christian Mobilizers, who was indicted for wartime conspiracy to commit sedition. Richardson, of course, collaborated closely in preparing the texts of Freedman's advertisements. Casual visitors to the Institute of Arab-American Affairs are sometimes offered, along with the pan-Arab literature, copies of a brief written by Richardson on behalf of another of his propagandist clients."

As to the entire pamphlet, I am convinced from the evidence that its publication by the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, Inc., was prompted by a sincere desire to champion human rights, to combat racial and religious discrimination and prejudice, and foster respect for our country's constitutional guaranties.

Penal section 1342 reads, "A publication having the tendency or effect mentioned in section 1340 is to be deemed malicious if no justification or excuse therefore is shown. The publication is justified when the matter charged as libelous is true and was published with good motives for justifiable ends."

There is no doubt in my mind that the statements in the publication were honestly made in the belief of their truth and upon reasonable ground for that belief. The remarks therein consist of fair comment upon the conduct of the complainant in respect to public affairs or upon a thing which the proprietor thereof offers or explains to the public.

The assertions regarding Richardson referred to on page 11 of said pamphlet have been proven to be true by testimony of the complainant and his own witnesses. Thus, the remarks in the publication concerning the complainant having been proven to be true, it is in my opinion that the publication was justified, that it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Richardson has often times said throughout this proceeding, as he said today, that he has a perfect right to represent anyone he chooses. I agree with Mr. Richardson but when Mr. Richardson starts to associate with a crackpot like Freedman, who is just an international meddler and propagandist, he becomes his companion and collaborator, and at this time I want to say that the last exhibit which Mr. Richardson identified I am taking under consideration for further action.

Now, when he talks about representing McWilliams, of course he has the right to represent McWilliams, but when he becomes an associate of McWilliams, the notorious hatemonger, he has very little to complain of or about.

There appeared in evidence that he represented William Gerald Bishop. I am going to ask Mr. Goldstein to please read the opinion by Mr. Justice Knox, which the complainant on several occasions called an impudent dictum. Let us see what the "impudent dictum" is. (Text of Judge Knox's opinion follows:)

"UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

"IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF WILLIAM GERALD BISHOP, PETITIONER, AGAINST THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, RESPONDENT

"Memorandum opinion

"In my opinion, petitioner's application for a writ of coram nobis is without the slightest vestige of merit. For this reason, it will be denied.

"In connection therewith, I have to say that I am strongly tempted to direct that Hallam M. Richardson and Emanuels Tretta, attorneys of this court, who have certified to the good faith of petitioner in making application for the writ show cause, why they, each of them, should not be disciplined as and for a contempt of this court. I have carefully examined the record of the hearing that was held in this court on August 29, 1946, on petitioner's application for a writ of habeas corpus, and there is nothing contained therein which supports or justifies the allegations contained in the petition for a writ of coram nobis. Furthermore, such allegations are without credible support from any other source.

"Nevertheless, the above-named attorneys deliberately and consciously have certified to their belief in the good faith of their client in making unwarranted and indeed scurrilous charges against various private persons and public officials including a judge of this court. To my mind, the conduct of these attorneys in this proceeding has been nothing less than reprehensible. For what they have done, they deserve, and by order to be entered herein, will have the severe censure of this court.

"For the moment at least, these attorneys will be permitted to escape disciplinary proceedings by reason of the fact that if they were now required to respond to an order to show cause why they should not be punished, they would probably seek refuge within the depth of their own gullibility in placing reliance upon the averments of their client. However, these attorneys are now solemnly admonished that any repetition of the conduct they have here exhibited will subject them to the institution of disciplinary proceedings.

"The papers on petitioner's application for a writ of coram nobis will be stricken from the files of this court for the reason that they are scurrilous, a sham, and frivolous. They will physically be sealed by the clerk, and shall be opened for inspection on the order of this court.

"JOHN C. KNOX,
"United States District Judge.

"MARCH 10, 1947."

And this is the opinion which the complainant had the audacity to call an impudent dictum. I believe Judge Knox was too kind to them. If I were in his place, I probably would have acted in another way.

The complainant has ventured into a forum of controversial opinions using certain weapons. When those same weapons which he himself chose in carrying on his ideological forays are turned against him, he complains most bitterly. Persons engaged in propaganda and who consort with individuals of the type mentioned must expect that they will be on the receiving as well as on the giving end of it. Anybody who makes charges and hangs out with the kind of people that Richardson hung out with, ought to be able to take it and not—to use the language of the street—"holler cop," and cry libel, in order to stifle justifiable criticism and the publication of the truth—in a manner which has long been recognized as a reprehensible camouflage.

In this democracy where free speech is the keystone of our way of life, a court should not impose criminal penalties on those who serve the public interest in exposing its enemies; but rather, such citizens should be commended and encouraged for their vital interest in the public weal. I say this: I congratulate openly Dr. Atkinson and anyone connected with him, for exposing all these rascals.

Complaint is dismissed.

Summary of Major Legislation of the House Banking and Currency Committee in the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JESSE P. WOLCOTT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the Eightieth Congress the House Banking and Currency Committee dealt with many phases of legislation relating to the economic well-being of the Nation. Affirmative action by the committee was taken on 45 such bills, and a majority of these were enacted into law.

Legislation in the field of banking and finance dealt with such important institutions as the Federal Reserve banks, Federal savings and loan organizations, Federal credit unions, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Legislation related to Government corporations included comprehensive revision and rechartering of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Export-Import Bank, and the Commodity Credit Corporation. Expanded authority was given to the RFC to make disaster loans to alleviate the suffering from the flood destruction in the Pacific Northwest. Provision was made for continuation of the domestic tin-smelting industry so vital to our national defense.

Housing legislation was a major activity of the committee. Ten of the bills enacted into law dealt with various phases of housing. These bills were designed to attack the housing problem on many fronts and to stimulate the production of housing accommodations in the traditional American manner through private enterprise. Almost twice as many new permanent dwelling units were completed in nonfarm areas in 1947 as has been completed in 1946—1947, 835,100 units; 1946, 437,800 units. The first 5 months of 1948, with starts of 356,000 units, showed an increase of 28 percent over starts of 278,000 units in the same period of 1947. It would be reasonable to expect that over a million new permanent dwelling units will be added to the housing supply of the country this year, a building record never before achieved in the United States or any other country. As will be later noted in comment on individual bills, certain phases of this legislation were specifically designed to assist and provide priorities for veterans in their housing needs.

Legislation for stabilizing the domestic economy included provision for temporary continuation of rent controls with more authority in the hands of local boards in appraising the needs of their own communities. The Anti-Inflation Act emphasized an approach to this war-created problem on the basis of voluntary action and agreements. In the extension of the Second Decontrol Act there was further elimination of governmental controls over certain items then remaining in the list of materials and facilities covered by the provisions of that act.

The following tabulation presents a brief digest of the principal legislation of the committee which has been enacted into law:

BANKING AND FINANCE

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

(Public Law 41. Approved April 28, 1947)

Federal Reserve banks were authorized to purchase and sell Government securities direct from the Treasury to permit the Treasury to obtain funds quickly to meet temporary situations or contingencies. This enables the Treasury to operate on a smaller cash reserve and results in a substantial saving of interest.

FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSTITUTIONS

(Public Law 895, approved July 3, 1948)

This act permits any Federal savings and loan institution to convert into a comparable State association incorporated under the laws of the State, district or Territory in which the principal office of such association is located. Authority existed for a State institution to convert to a federally chartered association but prior to this act no authority existed for a Federal association to convert to a State institution.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

(Public Law 363, approved August 5, 1947)

This act authorizes the FDIC to retire its capital stock by payment to the Treasury retaining a capital surplus of $1,000,000,000. Retirement of this stock will return approximately $290,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States. The borrowing power of the Corporation is increased to $3,000,000,000 to provide adequately for continuation of bank-deposit insurance.

CONSUMER CREDIT

(Public Law 386, approved August 8, 1947)

Consumer credit controls (Regulation W) were eliminated after November 1, 1947. These controls were working as a barrier to the normal buying habits of a vast segment of the public and in effect gave a purchase priority for items in short supply to the purchaser best able to pay.

FEDERAL CREDIT UNIONS

(Public Law 813, approved June 29, 1948)

This act transfers the administration of the Federal Credit Union Act from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to the Federal Security Agency and establishes in that Agency a Bureau of Federal Credit Unions under the supervision of a director appointed by the Federal Security Administrator. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, relieved of this responsibility, can devote its full attention to the important objectives of the Corporation.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

(Public Law 132, approved June 30, 1947;
Public Law 548, approved May 25, 1948;
Public Law 824, approved June 29, 1948;
Public Law 825, approved June 29, 1948)

The first two above listed acts brought together in one brief, concise law substantially all of the provisions of law relating to the RFC. Provisions of law which had become obsolete were repealed, those powers designed especially for the war effort were eliminated and over-all lending authority of the Corporation was reduced from over $18,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 ($1,500,000,000 in the 1948 act but restored to $2,000,000,000 by subsequent legislation). Under this authority, the Corporation is effectively carrying out its normal peacetime loan and investment program which embraces the making of noncompetitive direct business loans including participation in such loans, public-agency loans, catastrophe loans, and provision of a secondary market for FHA insured or veteran GI guaranteed home loans. The lending authority of the Corporation was extended through June 30, 1954.

Public Law 825 increased the limitation on lending authority of the Corporation in the making of disaster loans by $15,000,000 to a total of $40,000,000 to meet the emergency arising from the severe floods in the Pacific Northwest in the spring of 1948.

Public Law 824 extended to June 30, 1951 the powers of the RFC to buy and sell tin and tin ore, and to develop and operate the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex. This is the only tin smelter in the Western Hemisphere and occupies a position of strategic importance to national defense as well as providing a substantial source of supply for industrial needs.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

(Public Law 806, approved June 29, 1948)

This act provides a Federal Charter for the Commodity Credit Corporation making it a permanent organization within the Department of Agriculture, to be managed by a board of five directors not more than three of whom shall be within the Department of Agriculture. The Commodity Credit Corporation is the lending institution created for the purpose of financing and aiding in marketing of agricultural products. It carries out the program for the support of farm prices.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

(Public Law 89, approved June 9, 1947)

To secure a more effective exchange of commodities between the United States, its Territories and insular possessions, and foreign countries, the Export-Import Bank was reincorporated as an agency of the Government, given broader financial powers and operation was extended through June 30, 1953.

HOUSING

VETERANS' TEMPORARY REUSE HOUSING PROGRAM

(Public Law 85, approved May 31, 1947)

Congress authorized expenditure of $35,500,000 additional for housing construction for distressed families of servicemen and veterans. The housing program for veterans' families in educational centers had been deplorably slow and provision was made in this act to speed up and complete construction for student veterans and their dependents.

REMOVAL OF CONSTRUCTION CONTROLS

(Title I, Public Law 129, approved June 30, 1947)

The residue of wartime controls over building, and the similar controls over building materials and all construction under the provision of Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, were repealed in an effort to overcome the delay, maldistribution, production dislocation, and confusion resulting therefrom. During the period of such controls, as evidenced by the number of home completions during 1946 (437,800), it was apparent that the controls instead of stimulating home production were actually a deterrent.

With the repeal of these controls, residential building immediately began to increase and the tempo of this increase is still being continued with the result that American home building is now in the enviable position of surpassing any previous year's production.

This act provided for veterans' preference in the purchase or rental of all newly constructed sale or rental housing and this preference will remain in effect until April 1, 1949.

In addition to removing controls and providing veterans' preferences, title VI of the National Housing Act was extended to March 31, 1948.

HOME OWNERS LOAN ACT

(Public Law 372, approved August 6, 1947)

This act liberalized the provisions of the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933 with respect to certain loans made by Federal savings and loan associations. It provides that such associations may invest their funds in loans insured under title I of the National Housing Act, home loans guaranteed or insured under the GI bill, and other loans for property alterations and repair.

FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS

(Public Law 311, approved August 1, 1947)

Additional assistance in the home-financing field was given by this act, which increased the maturity of mortgages, acceptable as collateral security for advances by Federal home-loan banks to member institutions, from 20 to 25 years. In view of the fact that many of the FHA insured mortgages and GI-insured or guaranteed home loans are for 25 years, they were ineligible for use as collateral for Federal home-loan bank advances.

TITLE VI—FHA MORTGAGE INSURANCE

(Public Law 366, approved August 5, 1947)

Public Law 366 increased FHA title VI authorization by $200,000,000 and gave the President the power to further increase the authorized amount by an additional $200,000,000 should the need arise. It also contained a provision which made available FHA title VI insurance in financing the purchase of Government-owned permanent war housing.

(Public Law 394, approved December 27, 1947)

Increased title VI, FHA mortgage-insurance authorization an additional $750,000,000 from the previous maximum of $4,200,000,000. This increase in title VI authorization was granted to keep pace with the momentum of building construction.

(Public Law 468, approved March 31, 1948)

This act continued title VI FHA insurance from March 31, 1948, to April 30, 1948, increased the mortgage-insurance authorization an additional $400,000,000 to $5,350,000,000, and changed the appraisal base from one of current cost to value in the case of 1–4 family dwelling units. The act further stated the policy that title VI shall be employed to assist in maintaining a high volume of new residential construction without supporting unnecessary or artificial costs.

TITLE I—FHA MORTGAGE INSURANCE

(Public Law 120, approved June 26, 1947)

Public Law 120 of the Eightieth Congress extended the provisions of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, for an additional 2 years with respect to the authority of the Federal Housing Administration to insure home modernization and improvement loans. To date the title I program has assisted approximately 6,000,000 home owners to improve or repair their property. Operations under this program are comprised of character loans, generally unsecured, which have a relatively short maturity.

The proceeds of these insured loans aid the property owner in such work as repairing the foundation of his home, replacing his worn-out furnace or heating system, improving the lighting or plumbing system, building a new barn, service building, and many similar repairs or improvements. Many small-business men dealing in lumber, plumbing and heating supplies, paint and wallpaper, roofing, and hardware, and those engaged in the fabrication and installation of these materials benefit from this program.

LOW-COST HOUSING AND SLUM CLEARANCE

(Public Law 301, approved July 31, 1947)

During the war emergency, construction was deferred on many low-rent-housing and slum-clearance projects which Federal Public Housing Authority had contracted to extend financial aid. In many cases, increased construction costs have made it difficult if not impossible for the local housing authorities to reactivate these projects within the cost limitations of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended. The FPHA, under date of April 16, 1947, submitted a list of such urban projects comprising 100 developments containing 16,386 units located in 71 cities in 27 States.

By virtue of the provisions of Public Law 301, these municipalities with which the FPHA had previously entered into a contract have the opportunity of going ahead with the project by simply absorbing the excess cost above the cost limitations in the act. Thus, these 100 projects for which Federal funds had previously been allocated could be completed and provide additional housing for the communities concerned.

HOUSING FOR VETERANS

(Public Law 864, approved July 1, 1948)

In order to facilitate the financing of GI home mortgage loans this act provides for a secondary market for GI mortgage loans in the Federal National Mortgage Association. Safeguards in the legislation insure that those mortgages purchased by this Government secondary market meet the construction standards of comparable FHA insured housing, and certain other eligibility requirements for the purchase of such mortgages are provided the principal of which is that the mortgage must have been guaranteed or insured after April 30, 1948. This Government secondary mortgage market may also purchase FHA mortgages insured under sections 203 and 603 of the National Housing Act. The purchasing power of the Federal National Mortgage Association was increased threefold for these purposes. Of particular interest to veterans is the provision added by this law making combination FHA insured and GI guaranteed loans eligible for purchase in the Government secondary market. Under section 203 of the National Housing Act a veteran can secure a FHA insured mortgage loan up to 80 percent (90 percent in the case of small properties) of the value of the property. Under the GI bill the veteran in addition can secure a section 505 (a) fully guaranteed loan up to 20 percent of the value of the property. The veteran can thus obtain 100 percent Government guaranteed or insured financing which is all eligible for purchase by the Government secondary market. Such financing should stimulate the production of homes for veterans and in addition the veteran will receive the benefit of the sound construction standards and construction inspection service established by the FHA. Veterans will obtain more and better homes.

Removal of an impediment in the financing of GI home mortgage loans is accomplished by an amendment to the GI bill which provides that any evidence of guaranty or insurance issued by the Veterans' Administration shall be conclusive evidence of the eligibility of the loan for guaranty or insurance except for fraud and material misrepresentation on the part of the original lender. This provision, which is similar to the present FHA incontestability clause, will result in a wider private secondary market for GI loans.

Further assistance is provided the veterans' housing program by making veterans' housing cooperatives and nonprofit housing corporations eligible for title II FHA financing up to 95 percent of the value of the project. Emphasis is placed on low-cost, economically sound, readily financable housing for veterans with a minimum down payment. The mortgage limitation of not in excess of $1,350 per room (of construction attributable to dwelling use) effectively limits construction under this section to moderately priced construction. For instance on a 5-room unit the mortgage limitation would be $6,750. This is higher than the average-size veteran home mortgage of $5,756 guaranteed under the GI bill and under which over 1,000,000 veterans have secured mortgage loans totaling in the aggregate over $7,000,000,000. According to the most recent survey of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which covers construction costs for the second quarter of 1947, some 58 percent of all new housing construction had a cost (excluding land) of less than $6,250 per dwelling unit.

STABILIZATION OF DOMESTIC ECONOMY

RENT CONTROL

(Public Law 129, approved June 30, 1947; Public Law 422, approved February 27, 1948; Pubic Law 464, approved March 30, 1948)

These acts continued Federal rent control until April 1, 1949. Provision was made for local advisory boards to make recommendations to the Housing Expediter as to decontrol of any area or area adjustments of rents. The local boards consist of not less than five members who are citizens of the area and who are representative of the affected interest in the area. An appropriately substantial recommendation of a local board, if not carried out by the Housing Expediter can be referred to the Emergency Court of Appeals. Tenants are protected through limitations placed upon causes for eviction. Veterans of World War II and their families are accorded a 30-day preference in the rental of newly constructed housing accommodations.

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

(Public Law 395, approved December 30, 1947)

The purposes of this act are to aid in curbing inflationary tendencies, to promote the orderly and equitable distribution of goods and facilities, and to aid in preventing maldistribution of goods and facilities which basically affect the cost of living or industrial production. To achieve these purposes, members of industry are permitted to enter into voluntary agreements which, when approved by the Attorney General, are exempted from the antitrust laws.

SECOND DECONTROL ACT

(Public Law 427, approved February 28, 1948; Public Law 606, approved June 4, 1948)

A reduced list of materials and facilities in short supply at home and abroad were continued under control to promote production in the United States and to assist export of products required for production in foreign countries of critical materials urgently needed in the United States.

BILLS WHICH ONLY PASSED HOUSE

In addition to the above bills which were enacted into law, the committee reported out and the House passed several other measures upon which no action was taken by the Senate. Important among these were the following:

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS AND FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION

(H. R. 2799, passed House June 2, 1947)

This bill provides for the retirement of the capital stock held by the Government in the Federal home-loan banks and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Over a period of time this action would return $225,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States. The bill also provides for a reduction in the premium rate charged institutions insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

DISPOSAL OF WAR HOUSING

(H. R. 3492, passed House June 18, 1947)

Under the terms of this bill, veterans or veteran cooperatives would be given a high priority in the acquisition of the approximately 166,000 units of Government-owned permanent war housing constructed under the Lanham Act and supplementary acts. Sales would be made on the basis of a reasonable value on a long-term economically sound basis rather than at the present high market cost of housing accommodations. It would provide some of the most reasonably priced housing that veterans could acquire. At an average price of only slightly over $3,000 per unit, sale of these units would return approximately $500,000,000 to the United States Treasury. Insurance authority of FHA was broadened to include these projects. Some of the provisions of this bill were later incorporated in regulations issued by the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

EXTENSION OF FHA INSURANCE UNDER TITLE VI

(H. R. 5854, passed House March 23, 1948)

This bill provided for extension to March 31, 1949, of FHA title VI insurance authority and authorized an increase in such authority of $2,000,000,000. Half of this increased insurance authority was reserved for rental housing construction in multiple family units. Mass production of housing was to be encouraged through insurance of mortgages (including advances on such mortgages during construction) on large-scale projects providing for not less than 25 families in single- and two-family dwellings.

COMMEMORATIVE COIN FOR SPANISH WAR VETERANS

(H. J. Res. 333, passed House April 20, 1948)

Under the terms of this resolution there would be authorized the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the termination of the war with Spain. The net profit on the sale of these coins at a premium would inure to the benefit of the United Spanish War Veterans organization to be used by the organization in the celebration this year of the fiftieth anniversary of the Spanish War.

BANK CONVERSION BILL

(H. R. 6570, passed House June 15, 1948)

The provisions of this bill would allow national banks to convert or merge into or consolidate with State banks without the national bank first being required, as under existing law, to liquidate prior to the transfer. Such liquidation in some cases resulted in a tax liability not imposed by existing law when the conversion process was reversed, namely, from a State to the national banking system. In other words it provided an equitable two-way conversion street between the national and State banking systems. Adequate protection was set up for depositors and shareholders.

HOUSING ACT OF 1948

(H. R. 6959, passed House June 18, 1948)

As the Senate had not acted on two housing measures previously passed by the House (see H. R. 3492 and H. R. 5854 above) the subject matter of these bills was included in this comprehensive housing bill. In addition the bill provided for a $35,000,000 increase in the insurance authority for mortgages insured under title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, an increase in the limitation on title I, class 3 loans from $3,000 to $4,500, and an occupancy priority to veterans with respect to housing made available through this assistance. The bill expanded the secondary market operation carried out by the Federal National Mortgage Association through increasing the amount of funds available for such purpose and through making eligible for purchase, loans insured under section 505 (a) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944. Certain restrictions were placed about this operation to assure that a sound secondary market would be provided without leaving the secondary market subject to the abuse of being used as a primary source of funds for building loans. (In modified form this provision was subsequently incorporated in S. 2790, which became Public Law 864.)

In order to encourage the production of additional rental housing accommodations the bill would amend the Internal Revenue Code to permit the taking of accelerated depreciation up to 50 percent over a 5-year period on rental housing accommodations, the construction of which is begun in the next 2 years. Such accelerated depreciation would only be permitted, however, if the Federal Housing Commissioner issued a certificate authorizing such accelerated depreciation. The Federal Housing Commissioner was only authorized to issue such a certificate if the rental housing accommodations are or would be located in an area in which he found there is a shortage and if the dwelling units would be rented at such levels as in his judgment tend to relieve such shortage. The Internal Revenue Code would be further amended to remove the excise tax (7 percent) on the sale of trailer coaches of the housing type sold prior to July 1, 1950.

Another title of the bill would provide an incontestability clause with respect to GI guaranteed or insured home loans similar to the incontestability clause with respect to FHA insured loans. This was provided to improve the attractiveness of GI home loan paper in the private secondary investment markets. (Subsequently incorporated in Public Law 864.)

The bill would also set up a system of yield insurance on equity investment in rental housing for a family of moderate income. As in the case of FHA mortgage insurance, this yield insurance program would be set up to be self-supporting on the basis of the insurance premium charged therefor.

As may be noted from the above provisions, the bill was designed to encourage private enterprise in the production of all housing accommodations that could be built with the available supplies of materials and labor. Particular emphasis was placed upon rental housing accommodations in order that veterans in particular might have a choice between renting or buying housing for their needed housing accommodations.

BILLS VETOED

Two of the bills reported by the committee and passed by the House and Senate were vetoed by the President. These related to commemorative coins to be issued in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Wisconsin into the Union as a State (H. R. 1180), and in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of Minnesota as a Territory of the United States (S. 1304). Issuance of these coins would have been authorized in modest amounts and distribution of the coins would have been effected only by duly authorized representatives of these States. Net proceeds from the sale of these commemorative coins, over their value as coins, would have been used only to defray in part the cost of these State commemorative celebrations.

H. R. 1180 received a pocket veto July 31, 1947 and S. 1304 was vetoed May 4, 1948. The veto of these bills contrasts with the action taken by the President on August 7, 1946, when he signed the Booker T. Washington commemorative coin bill (Public Law 610), and the Iowa commemorative coin bill (Public Law 612).

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES H. MORRISON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I have had many requests from my constituents to give a record of my accomplishments as Congressman from the Sixth District of Louisiana. I believe I can best do that by giving you the following data and inserting letters which speak for themselves.

GRATEFUL TO VOTERS

I have been reelected three successive times, each time by a larger and more overwhelming vote. It is not my intention to boast or brag of my record, but rather to point out and show you how I have worked unceasingly in an effort to make you one of the best Congressmen you ever had.

HELPED ALL FARMERS

Naturally, representing a district with a large farming population, I devoted a tremendous amount of time and effort to aiding the farmers. When I successfully kept the ceiling price off the strawberry growers for almost one complete season it meant over a million dollars more to these growers. Then when I was successful in removing the OPA ceiling price in another season the farmers benefited by thousands and thousands of dollars additionally.

My aid to the cotton, rice, sugarcane, vegetable, sweet and Irish potato growers is well known. I cooperated with the hard-pressed dairy farmers in securing a Federal subsidy for them.

The conservative Cincinnati, Kansas City, and New York Packer, the largest and best produce paper in the world, carried the following editorial in the April 13, 1946, edition:

It would appear that berry growers, in general, owe a debt of gratitude to Louisiana's Congressman, JIMMY MORRISON, for the way in which he fought decontrol of berry pricing. We might point out that this is not a political plug.

The following is from a front-page story of the New York Packer:

STRAWBERRY PRICE-CONTROL EXEMPTION—FORMAL ANNOUNCEMENT EXPECTED EARLY NEXT WEEK—USDA AND OPA AGREE—CREDIT MORRISON—EXEMPTION WOULD APPLY TO ALL AREAS—REGARDED AS EXPERIMENT IN FOOD CONTROLS

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5.—Score a bull's eye for JIMMY MORRISON, Congressman from the famed Louisiana strawberry area, who has just successfully convinced Government officials that exemption of price control over strawberries deserves a trial. This is good news, which equals only the excellence of the Louisiana strawberry, as far as producers from that and other late-producing States are concerned, was revealed here in official circles following a joint session between USDA and OPA officials of the Office of Economic Stabilization. Formal announcement is looked for not later than next Tuesday, probably effective Wednesday. Official action by OPA only waits on receipt of instructions to suspend ceilings of OES.

Another article from the front page of the same paper a week later:

BERRY PRICE DECONTROL IN EFFECT NOW—DECISION FINALLY ANNOUNCED AFTER CONSIDERABLE JOCKEYING AROUND TOOK PLACE—MIDNIGHT, APRIL 11, APPLIES TO ALL BERRIES EXCEPT CRANBERRIES—MORRISON TOOK ACTIVE PART

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12.—After being whipsawed by reversed decisions from Chester Bowles at the Office of Economic Stabilization and pinned down at almost every turn by delaying Government red tape, Congressman JIMMY MORRISON, representing the largest strawberry-growing area in the world, was able to force through a final decision to decontrol strawberries and all other berry prices with the exception of cranberries, effective midnight Thursday, April 11.

This whole week has been one of touch and go as far as berry decontrol was concerned after a unanimous decision on Thursday, April 4, between OPA, USDA, and OES to grant an indefinite suspension of ceiling prices on all berries, fresh and processed.

The following letters give you an idea of my efforts regarding farm aid:

FOREST FARMERS ASSOCIATION COOPERATIVE,
Valdosta, Ga.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: Not only the Forest Farmers Association and its friends, but also the entire Nation so dependent on our forests for both peacetime and wartime essentials, are deeply and lastingly indebted to you for your magnificent contribution to the effort to secure the $300,000 appropriation for forestry research centers in the South.

If in the future there should ever happen to be an opportunity whereby we can express our gratitude to you in any service we can render we should deem it a privilege to have you command us.

Sending every good wish, I am,
Very sincerely yours,
C. P. KELLY,
President.

WASHINGTON PARISH CANNING CO.,
Franklinton, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Congressman, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: I wish to express our appreciation for your efforts in securing approval from the War Food Administration in issuing to the Washington Parish Canning Co. an additional 25,000 cases of No. 2½ cans to be used in the completion of the sweetpotato-canning program for Washington Parish, La.

If this allotment had not been granted the Washington Parish Canning Co., over one-half of the sweetpotato crop would have been a loss to the farmers of this vicinity. You have not only favored the Washington Parish Canning Co. by your efforts, but also Washington Parish and its entire agricultural interests.

Yours very truly,
NICK A. SHRMETTA,
Manager.

WASHINGTON PARISH CANNING CO.,
Franklinton, La.

Representative JIMMIE H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your telegram advising us that the Department of Agriculture has granted us an additional 150,000 cases of cans for sweetpotatoes and we certainly appreciate your efforts in helping us get this quota.

Yours very truly,
LOUIS JOHNSON.

LOUISIANA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND IMMIGRATION,
Baton Rouge.

Hon. J. H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: Copy of your letter to the strawberry growers of Louisiana received. You certainly did a good job on having the ceiling removed on our berry crop and I appreciate what you say in reference to giving you our cooperation on this job.

Copy of New York Packer received and read with much interest.

With every good wish, I am,
Sincerely yours,
HARRY D. WILSON,
Commissioner.

PONCHATOULA UNION COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Ponchatoula, La.

Representative JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: We wish to extend our appreciation for your good work in behalf of the Louisiana farmers in your efforts in removing the ceiling price on fall cucumbers and in having it increased on fall beans.

With kindest regards, we are,
Very truly yours,
R. O. POCHE,
Assistant Secretary-Treasurer.

AMERICAN SUGAR CANE LEAGUE OF THE U. S. A., INC.,
New Orleans, La.

The Honorable JAMES HOBSON MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: It affords me considerable pleasure to comply with a request of the executive committee of the American Sugar Cane League made in the form of a motion at its regular monthly meeting held in New Orleans, La., on Wednesday, July 30, 1947.

The motion in question was to thank you for your efforts in behalf of the Louisiana sugar industry leading to adoption of the 1948 Sugar Act. I want to assure you that the executive committee collectively and individually appreciate your effective contribution and feel very grateful.

Very sincerely,
MARCEL J. VOORHIES,
General Manager.

CORA-TEXAS MANUFACTURING CO.,
White Castle, La.

JIMMY H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MORRISON: I have your letter regarding raise in sirup prices, and I wish to thank you for the vivid interest that you have shown in one of Louisiana's important industries.

We owe you a lot of gratitude, and I fully realize that your efforts have brought good results.

Thanking you, and with kindest regards and best wishes,

Yours sincerely,
LEON KESSLER.

LOUISIANA SUGAR PRODUCERS CLUB,
New Orleans, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: The Louisiana Sugar Producers Club (western division) at its regular monthly meeting in New Iberia, La., on Friday, August 1, 1947, took cognizance of your effective efforts in bringing about passage of the 1948 Sugar Act. The group felt that the passage of this act was a paramount interest to the Louisiana sugar industry in that it provides a reasonable quota for domestic cane sugar and sets the stage for a period of stability which should prove of great benefit to the industry.

We want to express to you our thanks, appreciation, and gratitude.

Yours very truly,
J. PAULIN DUHE,
President.

AMERICAN SUGAR CANE LEAGUE OF THE U. S. A., INC.,
New Orleans, La

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: This is to acknowledge your effective efforts in assisting the Louisiana sugar industry to secure relief from conditions that were bearing the Louisiana black-strap molasses price.

For myself and for the American Sugar Cane League, representing the Louisiana sugar industry, I wish to thank you sincerely.

Yours very truly,

J. J. SHAFFER, Jr.,
President.

LOUISIANA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION, INC.,
Baton Rouge, La.

Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: We greatly appreciate your interest and efforts toward assisting the Louisiana Irish Potato Growers Association with its recent problem.

We also appreciate your prompt response with promise of your cooperation to our request for your support of the agricultural research bill; the OPA order covering farm equipment; and your consideration of the Louisiana farmers in your action on the floor of the House.

With best wishes,

Yours very truly,

J. F. PERCY,
President.

NATIONAL COTTON COUNCIL OF AMERICA,
Memphis, Tenn.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: This is just a note to express our very great appreciation for the fine contribution which you made in the recent fight on the floor of the House to secure important increases in the Agricultural Appropriation bill. The fact that you were able to obtain the substantial increase for the new agricultural-research program and also secure the restoration of $40,000,000 of section 32 funds in the face of the overwhelming odds opposing you, represents an outstanding accomplishment for all of American agriculture.

Also, the very large vote for the restoration of the other major items in the Agricultural Appropriation bill, even though it was not quite sufficient for passage of the amendments, certainly puts us in a very fine position to press hard for the approval of these items in the Senate.

The people of the Cotton Belt and all other agricultural areas of this country are deeply indebted to you for your splendid efforts in their behalf.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM RHEA BLAKE,
Executive Vice President.

HELPED CHURCHES

I have at all times cooperated with churches of various denominations, both Protestant and Catholic. I have helped secure surplus buildings for chapels for many churches. I was happy to cooperate in securing a building permit for the new St. Gerad Majella Church in Baton Rouge. The hospitals have had my all-out aid.

The following letters are self-explanatory of my efforts to aid all churches and religious groups:

LOUISIANA BAPTIST FOUNDATION.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: We greatly appreciate your prompt assistance in securing early ruling from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Commissioner passed on our request on the 10th of April and we had been warned that it took 6 to 8 weeks to secure a ruling. Without your assistance we would have been handicapped in our work.

We greatly appreciate your courtesy and your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. B. LOCKRIDGE,
Treasurer.

Also another letter from Mr. Lockridge, Baton Rouge General Hospital:

MR. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I greatly appreciate your work on behalf of the hospital, in securing prompt attention to our application for priorities. We appreciate your assistance in this matter several times before, and I assure you that you are making a definite contribution to the public health of this community.

Yours truly,

W. E. B. LOCKRIDGE,
Treasurer.

ST. GERTRUDE CONVENT,
Ramsey, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: Illness prevented us from acknowledging sooner your great kindness to us, but we shall now hasten to assure you that we shall always remember your timely assistance in helping us out of this really difficult situation.

We shall surely not forget to have a fervent momento at prayer for you, and with a sincere "God bless you" to you and yours, we are,

Gratefully yours,

BENEDICTINE NUNS,
Sister STANISLAUS, OSB.

ST. GERARD MAJELLA CHURCH,
Baton Rouge, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: It is with great pleasure that the parish of St. Gerard Majella extends you an invitation to attend as honor guest the laying of the cornerstone of their new building.

We intend this as a very special invitation because of the efforts you made to get us a priority without which this ceremony could not take place.

We hope that you will be with us on this day so that we might express our thanks to you personally.

Yours sincerely and thankfully,

PAUL J. BANDRY, C. S. S. R.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH,
Baton Rouge, La.

Congressman JIMMY MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please let me express my personal appreciation of the splendid assistance you have given us in connection with our efforts to obtain Government chapels to be used in the mission and extension work of our church. You may be assured that the buildings awarded us will be put to the very best possible use, and will enable us to do much more for research work than would otherwise be possible.

With very best wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

J. NORRIS PALMER.

BOGALUSA, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: Work is again going along nicely on the new addition to our church here in Bogalusa.

I want to take this opportunity to thank you personally for the effort and work you did for us.

I and my many friends and fellow worshipers appreciate the part you played in this matter.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

M. S BAER, Jr.

EAST BATON ROUGE METHODIST CHURCH,
Baton Rouge, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I am in receipt of your letter of March 24 this morning and naturally received your wire yesterday afternoon advising me of your success in our securing one of the Army chapels.

JIMMY, it goes without saying that we greatly appreciate the effort you have put forth in our behalf and board members want me to express to you their appreciation, and we know as long as we have representation such as you in Washington things of this nature can be made a reality.

I would like to say that your wire came at a very opportune time to build up our pastor's enthusiasm and ambitions to go forward with this little church as it has been a grind through the months for him and his father passed away the day before your wire was received and naturally, when this information was given him, it really did help, which I know will make you feel mighty good to have this information.

I have not had occasion to talk to our friend, Jesse Webb, as he has been out of his office. Again thanking you for your efforts, I remain,

Yours very truly,

F. A. NEAL, Treasurer.

MILLIONS FOR LOUISIANA FROM UNITED STATES

In the last session of Congress more than $26,000,000 was awarded Louisiana by the Federal Government for our roads and more than $20,000,000 additional in old-age pensions, school lunch funds, and welfare assistance. I supported this legislation.

AIDED COMMUNITIES

Many communities requested my aid for surplus fire trucks and equipment. They got results from my efforts.

VETERANS' HOUSING

The much-needed veterans' housing at L. S. U., at Baton Rouge, and at Southeastern Louisiana College, at Hamomnd, are a concrete example of my efforts in behalf of all veterans.

While I have devoted much time and effort to the farmers, I have also devoted endless efforts to Baton Rouge and other cities in my district. My efforts in aiding Henry Kaiser to open the $26,000,000 aluminum plant in Baton Rouge is an oustanding example of my congressional work. I am happy to have brought new pay rolls to Louisiana. I have aided the Gaylord Paper Mill at Bogalusa on many occasions. The following is a letter from Henry Kaiser:

PERMANENTE METALS CORP.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MORRISON: I have just been informed that the Baton Rouge alumina plant is now actually producing the entire alumina requirements for our aluminum plants in the Northwest.

When I received this message it immediately recalled to me your great determination and untiring efforts to develop peacetime utilization of the war plants in Louisiana.

I know you will share our sense of constructive accomplishment in the successful reconversion of the Baton Rouge plant and its contribution to employment and productive capacity of both your State and the Nation.

Sincerely,

HENRY J. KAISER.

Here are two letters from the Gaylord Container Corp.:

GAYLORD CONTAINER CORP.,
Bogalusa, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: Yesterday we made final arrangements with the War Assets Administration, National Aircraft Components Sales Center, Cleveland, Ohio, for the purchase of a Fairchild K-17 aerial camera. The same is to be shipped to us sometime within the next 30 days.

We were able to locate the camera and I think successfully conclude the transaction due to your very fine efforts on our behalf. We assure you that we appreciate the assistance you have given us in securing this very essential piece of equipment for use in our forestry department.

Kindest personal regards.

Yours truly,

P. M. GARRISON,
Chief Forester.

GAYLORD CONTAINER CORP.,
Bogalusa, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: The news about the improved mail service was indeed welcome to all the business people of Bogalusa, and your efforts are deserving of our unhesitating thanks.

Kindest personal regards.

Very sincerely yours,

VERTRESS YOUNG.

HELPED WITH REA

Extension of mail routes, rural electrification and other needed improvements received my sincere attention and the results speak for themselves.

PEARL RIVER, LA.

Hon JAMES H. MORRISON,
Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: You can hardly imagine my great appreciation and thanks for the assistance you gave me when you made it possible to have electricity extended out to my neighborhood in Pearl River. The power company went to work immediately and have already completed stringing up the wires.

My neighbors and I will always remember this good work on your part. We all feel as if we are very much in debt to you for this. All the people in Pearl River know that you were responsible for making it possible to get electricity for the neighorhood.

I have already wired my house and am now using the electric light. My neighbors are wiring their houses as quickly as they can have it done. The electric lights make all the difference in the world when you have not had them before. Now my house seems more cheerful and cozy, and now I can get the electrical applicances which I have longed for to make housework more easy.

All of Pearl River is talking about the quick results obtained through your efforts. They will not forget. They know that you are working all out for their benefit in all matters in Congress.

Again I wish to thank you for what you did for me and my neighbors. This is the quickest service with 100 percent results on anything I have ever received in my life.

Best wishes to you and your continued good work for the people.

Very sincerely yours,

MELVIN J. BRENNAN.

FRANKLINTON, LA.

Congressman JIMMY MORRISON:

You hit a home run for REA. Thanks.

J. CAGLE.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON:

Desire to express unbounded appreciation for your efforts in following up this REA application.

ELLIS B. THOMPSON,
Dixie Electric Membership Corp.

Note this telegram was in connection with $224,000 awarded this REA membership.

FIRST STATE BANK & TRUST CO.,
Bogalusa, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMIE: We have just received information that the new southbound-mail schedule from Bogalusa to New Orleans will come into effect on Monday, February 24. We wrote you asking your assistance in this connection in December 1946 and want to thank you very much for the assistance that you gave in connection with the securing of this additional mail service.

Cordially yours,

W. M. BABINGTON,
Executive Vice President.

FOLSOM, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Congress of the United States,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMIE: We want to express our sincere appreciation for your assistance in having the mail route extended to give us service.

With best personal regards and all good wishes, we remain,

Sincerely yours,

FROST, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: Some time ago we requested your assistance in getting an extension in the mail route from Frost. I now wish to advise that this extension has been granted and the citizens of the community are being served daily.

We wish to offer you our deepest appreciation and thanks and want to congratulate you for your promptness in securing this route.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

BOSA MILLER.

BUSH, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JIMMIE MORRISON: I am writing you thanking you for the service you rendered in helping us to get our mail. It started down our way yesterday.

I am speaking the voice of all the patrons benefited and truly do we appreciate what you did for us.

Again thanking you and wishing you continued success in your work,

Very sincerely,

GEORGE SHARPE.

PEARL RIVER, LA.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I am writing to tell you that we have our mail route. It started September 2, 1947, the one you helped us get. Just wanted to say many thanks for all you did.

You can rest assured we won't forget you on election day.

Very truly yours,

JACK CRAWFORD.

HAMMOND, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMIE: We can't express to you in words our appreciation for your assistance in having the mail route extended in our community. It is one of the best improvements our community has ever had.

If we can be of help to you in any way, we'll be more than glad to assist you.

Sincerely,

Mr. JULIUS SMILEY.
Miss ROSIEPHINE SMILEY.

GONZALES, LA.

Mr. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I want to thank you for helping us get the rural-mail extension through from the Gonzales post office.

The delivery began on April 16, and we all know it was through your efforts we got it, and deeply appreciate it.

If there's any way that I may help you, please do not hesitate to call on me, for I am at your service.

Again I say thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. ALLEN DYER.

AMITE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MORRISON: I'm taking this opportunity in behalf of all those concerned in this community as well as myself for your untiring effort and interest shown by you in helping us to secure our extended mail route. Your efforts were greatly appreciated and will always be remembered.

Thanking you again.

Sincerely yours,

SAM DIVINCENTI.

$1,159,600 FOR PEARL RIVER PROJECT

Flood-control legislation for Louisiana received my full active support. Despite demands for reduction of appropriations, I was happy to cooperate in securing $1,159,600 for the Pearl River project. This means much to Washington and St. Tammany Parishes.

AIDED THOUSANDS OF VETERANS

Thousands of veterans have called on me for help. They received my wholehearted assistance. I have taken a few of the letters from my veteran files, and they tell the story of my efforts in behalf of our deserving veterans:

REGULAR VETERANS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: The National Council of Administration of the Regular Veterans' Association, at its last meeting held at national headquarters on June 15, 1947, instructed me, on behalf of the Regular Veterans' Association, to commend you on the fine showing which you have made toward all veterans and members of the armed forces.

Congressman MORRISON, I, too, want to commend you for the splendid work you have done while at the Nation's Capitol. If all Members of the Eightieth Congress were farsighted like yourself, we Americans would have no fear of the Communistic elements in America and no fear for the welfare of our service personnel and veterans.

Your constituents in Louisiana are likewise to be congratulated for sending such outstanding representatives as Hon. A. LEONARD ALLEN and yourself to the Congress. I hope that I will have the pleasure of presenting the National Council of Administration in a body to you at a future date.

Keep up the old American spirit.

Sincerely yours in comradeship,

W. M. FLOYD, D. S. C.,
National Commander.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Responding to your recent inquiry, please be informed that, insofar as I can ascertain, Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON, has always been very sympathetic with and eager to support any pending legislation designed to be helpful to war disabled veterans. He has also manifested a great deal of interest, personally, in advising and assisting individual disabled veterans who have had difficulties relative to the technical establishment as to their equitable claims for service connection and compensation for their war-incurred disabilities, and has thus enabled many of them to prove their just claims for various benefits intended for them under the laws enacted by our Congress or by any State government.

I trust that this furnishes you with the information desired.

Very cordially yours,

MILLARD W. RICE.

Congressman J. H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: Several days ago I wrote and asked you to send me a copy of the bill H. R. 3439 which you had introduced in the present Congress.

Through your promptness in replying and sending same to me it was possible to bring the bill up for discussion on the floor of the State convention of the Department of Connecticut, Disabled American Veterans.

To say the least the bill met with wholehearted approval and a unanimous resolution endorsing it was adopted, a copy of which will be forwarded to you in the near future.

I want to thank you for your kindness in this matter and to assure you that the veterans here in Connecticut certainly appreciate the efforts you are expending in their behalf even though you are not from our State.

The inequity which you are endeavoring to rectify by the legislation which you have presented is a major one. I certainly hope that the bill is enacted into law as in view of present economic conditions the amounts specified in it can, by no stretch of the imagination, be termed excessive.

Again let me thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

RUSSELL E. SULLIVAN,
First Junior Vice Commander, Department of Connecticut, Disabled American Veterans.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
VINCENT R. COSTELLO POST,
NO. 15, INC.,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I assume that you have read in the Stars and Stripes an account of your excellent efforts in the fight to eliminate all veterans from taking a pauper's oath in order to get into a veterans' hospital. It is needless for me to remark at this time that your work and service is deeply appreciated by all veterans' organizations.

As you know, we have been very busy in trying to bring about improvement in the operation of veterans' hospitals. We also appreciate your cooperation in this work. We feel deeply obligated to you due to the fact that you so willingly offered your office and your entire staff in aiding us to bring about an investigation of all veterans' hospitals.

I shall endeavor to contact the Legion Post in your State in order to acquaint them with your unselfish work in our behalf here in Washington.

I have talked to numerous officials who were high in their praise for your activities in bringing about the investigation of faulty airplane engines and defective workmanship. You should feel proud to know that your efforts in this connection undoubtedly saved thousands of American boys from tragic deaths and also rendered a distinct service to this Nation in saving millions of dollars to our Government.

Your very truly,

J. H. LIEB,
Service Officer.

AMERICAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II.
Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: As commander of the Jack Kofoed, Jr., Post, No. 4, of AMVETS, of Miami, Fla., I've had the opportunity to go to Washington, on numerous occasions regarding veterans' legislation, and while there, I took the liberty of watching your interest in veterans' affairs, and noted your outstanding work for veterans of World War II. Due to my reporting said findings to the AMVETS here in Florida, they have asked me, in the name of the post, to issue you a certificate of merit for your unselfish devotion toward World War II veterans' activities.

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL KAPLAN,
Commander.

AMERICAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: This is to express the warm feeling of appreciation that hundreds of members of the AMVETS hold for you because of the interest you took in their welfare during its inception and the many, many times you have given assistance to the families of veterans and their dependents when help was urgently needed. In numerous instances you have rendered most effective assistance in obtaining settlement of problems and claims long ignored or denied.

The assistance you rendered the AMVETS during their organization period, and the many contacts you have helped them build on Capitol Hill, will always be remembered. We know the veterans will be ever grateful for the hundreds of personal favors you have done for them individually and for their organizations.

Your leadership in all matters pertaining to the rehabilitation and welfare of the veterans of our Nation is particularly noteworthy, and we feel certain that we express the sentiment of all veterans throughout the United States in commending your splendid support of all constructive veterans' legislation.

I feel sure that every veterans' organization knows that the veterans have a hardworking, sincere, and real friend in JIMMY MORRISON. As a Congressman, you have proved by acts and deeds that you are worthy of the supreme trust of all veterans.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT C. GEREMIA,
National Executive Secretary.

AMERICAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II.
Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: This is to let you know how much the AMVETS organization appreciate your splendid cooperation and the many favors that you have done for our organization.

It is certainly refreshing to know that the veterans of World War II have a sincere friend on Capitol Hill, as you have demonstrated by your many acts of kindness and cooperation. Frankly, we feel that your work in behalf of our organization and other veterans' organizations has been outstanding.

Due to the fact that you were one of the first Congressmen to take an interest and assist our organization at its very inception, I feel sure that the AMVETS will always have unending gratitude for this encouragement and aid at a time when we needed it the most.

Please feel free to call on our organization at any time if we can be of any assistance to you.

Very truly yours,

J. H. LIEB,
National Legislative Director.

P. S.—From all reports in Louisiana, you are certainly gaining a world of friends among the veterans down there.

REGULAR VETERANS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Old House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: I am in receipt of your recent correspondence with bill H. R. 3514 enclosed. You can rest assured that the RVA will support this legislation and you are to be commended for all you have done for the members of the armed forces and Americans alike. If we had more MORRISONS in Congress, we know that we would get more sound legislation than we have in the past.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. FLOYD, D. S. C.,
National Commander.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT,
DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MORRISON: I know of no Congressman who has done more for the veterans than you. You have supported all legislation in behalf of needy and disabled veterans. I heartily endorse you for the high office which you seek, and I feel sure that the veterans have in you a real and sincere friend.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

ELPHEGE DESGRES,
Senior Vice Commander.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL CATHEDRAL POST, No. 10,
Washington, D. C.

The Honorable JAMES MORRISON,
Member of Congress from the State of Louisiana,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: As commander of National Cathedral Post, No. 10, of the American Legion, department of the District of Columbia, I wish to take this opportunity to thank you personally for the many favors that you have done for the members of the American Legion during the past several years.

Your office has always been open and available to all veterans regardless of their station in life, and you have contributed much to the welfare and happiness of the thousands of veterans who have individually called upon you for help. You have appeared before Army, Navy, and Veterans' Administration boards in behalf of the needy and disabled former servicemen on occasions too numerous to set out in this letter, and as a result of your unselfish and diligent efforts in their behalf you have established yourself as one of the most outstanding friends of the veterans on Capitol Hill.

You are one man in Congress who established himself as one of the best friends a veteran ever had.

As you are aware, we of the District of Columbia had no Congressman to represent the citizens of the District, and we therefore are grateful indeed to you for the efforts that you have expended in behalf of those veterans of the District of Columbia who have approached you for assistance.

Again my many thanks and best wishes.

Very truly yours,

STANLEY H. FISCHER,
Commander.

WAR AMPUTEES CAR COMMITTEE,
WALTER REED GENERAL HOSPITAL,
FOREST GLEN SECTION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: Let me express to you the gratitude of the many amputees of America for your successful efforts in securing action on legislation to provide us with necessary cars for our mobility. The pleasing satisfaction which you must enjoy from the efforts you have exerted to help disabled veterans, must give you a great satisfaction for the laborious task which you have performed.

All the amputees join with me in heartily thanking you on being among the first Congressmen to present our side of the case. Your zeal and services in the cause of the veterans will always be remembered. Your record proves that you have always worked and voted for all constructive veterans legislation. The amputees join with me in sending you every good wish with sentiments of great esteem.

Wishing you a full measure of success, I am,

Yours very truly,

FRANK W. MONICO,
Chairman.

LACOMBE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: It is with the greatest of pleasure I am afforded this opportunity to write this letter and thank you for the tremendous service you have rendered in connection with my veteran problem in Washington.

Let me say that I was agreeably surprised, in fact, even amazed, at the type of service and help you afforded me in this connection. I say this because it has been my experience that there are two types of people in politics—those who give promises and delay, and I am afraid, often too rarely, the type who see that their constituents are properly represented and get immediate action. From my personal experience I can truthfully and sincerely testify that JIMMY MORRISON, Congressman of the Sixth District of Louisiana, is definitely the action type.

Again let me thank you and your most capable staff for the many courtesies and assistance afforded me.

Sincerely,

H. A. MCENERY,
Major, Retired, AUS.

Note, McEnery is a grandson of the Governor of Louisiana who served Louisiana many years ago.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I have just received your reply of May 14, 1948, to my recent correspondence regarding the Flanders bill.

It is refreshing and gratifying to note the very definite stand you have taken in the support of this bill. May I assure you that your favorable attitude is appreciated by every member of this organization, whose attention has been invited to your early and encouraging response.

Thank you for your expression of interest in this matter.

Very truly yours,

E. A. SPERIKY,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I would like to thank you for the keen interest and prompt attention which you have so recently rendered in aiding me to secure payment from the Veterans' Administration.

Yesterday I received your letter with the enclosed copy of your correspondence with General Guerre. In the afternoon mail I received a check for the total amount due me.

Words alone cannot express my thanks to you for your invaluable aid in a situation which was of greatest concern to me.

Your efforts in this matter were reassuring to me and I wish to assure you that your cooperation will not be forgotten by me.

Sincerely,

WARREN L. BROWN.

UNIVERSITY VETERANS COOPERATIVE, INC.,
Baton Rouge, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: In answer to your letter of April 14, 1947, offering further assistance. We more than appreciate the aid that you have already rendered our organization. We take this opportunity to express our thanks.

One of the stores is already in operation, and the other is expected to commence operation at the first of next week. We have received full cooperation from the university officials, and we thank you for the part that you played in this.

Of course, our stores aren't the finest, in fact they are little wooden shacks, but they fulfill the needs of the veterans' families living on or near the campus. We plan in the future to expand and have large Quonset huts, but from the information that I have at hand these are impossible to acquire at gratis. We have no cash registers on hand and are having to suffice with adding machines. Yet our business grows every day. This only convinces me that the average family appreciates this service and doesn't view this from a mercenary viewpoint.

I felt that since you had rendered us such valuable service, you would be interested in our progress.

Expressing our sincere appreciation again, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

WESLEY D. GLASSELL.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON.
Member of Congress, Hammond, La.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I wish to take this opportunity to express my thanks for your recent efforts in my behalf.

It is such prompt and efficient service as this that is making the name "JIMMY MORRISON" a national byword.

Best wishes for your continued success.

Sincerely,

NOAH P. GUEDRY.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Louisiana Congressman,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in expressing my sincere appreciation for your interest and efforts, in taking prompt action upon my request for help in getting my overdue subsistence pay from the Veterans' Administration.

It is services of this quality that I feel we, the people of Louisiana, need. I probably would never have called upon you for help, if so many of my friends had not advised me to contact you; so many veterans as well as "just plain old Louisianians" have been helped by you, that I just couldn't but hear about you.

Mr. MORRISON, you had a fine record behind you. When looking back on your past record, I can only predict success for you and the people of Louisiana under your administration.

Yours truly,

NATHAN A. CORMIE.

SCHOOL TROOPS INFANTRY SCHOOL,
Fort Benning, Ga., April 22, 1947.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I am sorry it has been impossible for me to express my appreciation earlier due to transfers and comparatively busy hours. However, I have enjoyed every minute to the fullest extent since my reenlistment March 29, 1947.

Your assistance has brought back a bright future to my family and me and we sincerely hope to do our part for you in time to come.

My wife and I enjoyed a short visit with relatives and friends at home where I asked every individual to think of you and what you have done. I was assured you would be wholly remembered.

I am now assigned to the Infantry School here and working in plans and training (S–3).

Thanking you time and again we shall never forget, there is a future for everyone and we are willing to help you in every way possible.

With best wishes, I am,

Your friend,

BATON ROUGE, LA.

DEAR JIMMIE: Thanks for your memorandum with copy of letter to Mr. Lindsay C. Warren. I should have written you yesterday when I received the Notice of Claim Settlement from the Claims Division of the United States Navy.

I must hand it to you, old fellow, you certainly got results in this matter. The efficiency of your office is even better than some of the flattering remarks I heard previous to my request. This matter was very important to me and I believe, without your help, it would have taken months to get a settlement.

Many thanks. With highest personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM WARREN MUNSON.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
May 27, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: With reference to your correspondence of May 24, 1947, please be advised that I regret the oversight on my part of not enclosing the home address of the veterans whose causes I have brought to your attention. In our future correspondence I will be only too happy to forward you the addresses.

Also please be advised that it is a pleasure to work in harmony with you in the interest of our veterans. Your excellent work has enabled me to clarify hundreds of cases for veterans in my parish and for veterans over the entire State of Louisiana and elsewhere.

Assuring you that your continued cooperation in matters of this kind will be very much appreciated and with kindest personal regards and best wishes for your continued success in everything, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. G. ROBINSON,
Assistant Parish Service Officer, Parish of East Baton Rouge, La.

I shall in the future as I have in the past, cooperate with all public officials of my district and State regardless of their political ties or affiliations. I shall continue to render aid to all you people regardless of your walk or station in life. No request or task has been too small nor none too large to receive my complete cooperation and attention.

SUPPORTED FARM LEGISLATION

I have supported all farm legislation before Congress including:

First. Support price for cotton and potatoes.

Second. Subsidy for dairy farmers.

Third. Parity payments for farmers.

Fourth. Soil-conservation legislation.

Fifth. Forestry rehabilitation.

Sixth. Low interest rates to farmers.

Seventh. More liberal farm loans.

Eighth. Farm Security Administration.

Ninth. Low interest rates for farmers.

Tenth. Rural electrification.

Eleventh. Tung-oil development.

Twelfth. Better farmers' marketing facilities.

Thirteenth. Farm-to-market roads.

Fourteenth. Establishment of rural telephone service.

FREE SCHOOL LUNCHES

Without the aid of the Federal Government there would be no free school-lunch program in Louisiana. The Federal Government has poured millions into our State for this school-lunch program. I am happy to have aided in this program. I shall continue my efforts.

The following letters are in regard to this legislation:

EAST BATON ROUGE PARISH

Superintendent.

ST. TAMMANY PARISH, LA.,
February 10, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We note that you have just introduced a bill to raise $15,000,000 in order to carry the Government's participation in the school-lunch program through the present fiscal year. Naturally, we are proud that it is the Congressman from our district who was the first to recognize the serious implications in the termination of the Federal aid after this month. We have viewed with much concern the effects such termination would have. Much has been accomplished by the school-lunch program. Competent observers state that the children who partake of the wholesome, well-balanced school lunches are more alert, both mentally and physically, that they are better able to learn and that their condition is generally speaking much improved. Should the Government terminate its aid, there could only be one of two results. Quality of the lunches would have to be lowered or prices would have to be raised. Either is bad. To lower the quality and quantity of the food would tend to undo all the good accomplished thus far. To raise the price would mean that many children again would have as their lunch, brought from home, a cold biscuit and a slab of sidemeat. You know what that sort of diet has done for the rural South.

We are all residents of Folsom and its immediate vicinity and, as parents, we are very much interested in the welfare of all school children. It is for this reason we urge you to leave no means unused to have your measure enacted into law. If you feel we should write any committee chairman or other Members of the Congress, please let us know. Meanwhile, we are pulling for the passage of your bill and wish you success.

Respectfully yours,

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
Baton Rouge.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I deeply appreciated your telegram yesterday, stating that you would make an effort to have the supplemental appropriation for food production war training reported favorably.

Thanks for your cooperation, and with kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

S. M. JACKSON,
State Supervisor of Vocational Agriculture.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,
AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE,
Baton Rouge, La., May 30, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Thank you very much for sending me a copy of your testimony before the Committee on Education and Labor in support of H. R. 2525.

I agree with you thoroughly and hope that this bill is favorably acted upon. I have had experience with Federal funds and Federal legislation for about 30 years now and the proviso "without Federal control or supervision" is a very wise one.

Thank you very much for this form.

Sincerely yours,

J. G. LEE, Jr.,
Dean, College of Agriculture.

TIDELANDS

I have repeatedly fought and voted against the Federal Government taking away States' rights in our tidelands and water bottoms. These are great potential oil fields and I shall continue to fight for State ownership and against any Federal control or ownership.

POSTAL AND FEDERAL WAGE INCREASE

As a member of the Civil Service and Postal Committee I aided in securing a Federal salary pay raise for Federal workers and a pay raise for postal employees. In the city of Baton Rouge this means more than $90,000 annually, just in Baton Rouge itself.

PLAQUEMINE, LA., June 24, 1948.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MORRISON: May I express my utmost gratitude in your support of the salary legislation passed by Congress for all members of Branch No. 2661, National Association of Letter Carriers.

Very truly yours,

HENRY J. DUPUY, Jr.,
Secretary, Branch No. 2661, NALC.

LOUISIANA RURAL LETTER CARRIERS ASSOCIATION,
Gonzales, La., April 19, 1948.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: In behalf of the rural letter carriers of the southeast district of Louisiana I wish to thank you for the splendid work done by you for us in Washington. Senate bill 203 providing a 1-cent increase was added to our pay check of the 15th. It was badly needed and came in handy as you know the expense of keeping a car on the road every day. Our pay raise bill which you worked so hard for as the papers stated seems a certainty and will certainly be a help also. The southeast district includes the First, Second, and Sixth Congressional Districts. We are having a meeting in Hammond May 30. As secretary for the district for the past 7 years I will offer a resolution that we send you a letter of thanks also at our Alexandria State convention in July.

Again thanking you, I am,

Yours truly,

L. J. BERTEAU,
Secretary.

POSTAL SUPERVISORS,
New Orleans, La., April 17, 1948.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge your letter April 13, 1948, reporting H. R. 5667 being reported out by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Please accept the thanks of the officers and members of this organization for your personal efforts in behalf of obtaining some salary adjustment for postal workers. We realize that you have labored mightily in our behalf and we are very appreciative of that.

Trusting that you will continue to lend your efforts and influence to our cause, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LEONARD R. MADDEN,
Secretary.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: On behalf of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, we desire to express our sincere appreciation for the action of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service in reporting favorably H. R. 3872 on Friday, June 20, 1947.

Our knowledge of your personal contribution to this desirable action causes us to offer the observation that the postal employees of your district have a real friend in the Congress. If we can at any time in the future be of possible service to you, we would appreciate the opportunity to be helpful.

Sincerely yours,

LEO E. GEORGE,
President.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: The Postal Salary Act which was signed by the President on July 6, 1945, is an important advance toward adjustment of pay and working conditions of a group of faithful and deserving Government employees to modern standards and conditions.

Its enactment was possible only because it was reasonable and meritorious and because it had the support of fair-minded Members of Congress.

May I not express to you the appreciation of myself and fellow officers and of the membership of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks throughout the country for your friendly interest in it and your consistent support for it through the Congress.

Very sincerely yours,

LEO E. GEORGE,
President.

NATIONAL RURAL LETTER CARRIERS ASSOCIATION.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of the House Civil Service and Post Office Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: On behalf of the rural mail carriers of the Nation, permit me to express our thanks and appreciation for securing for us a salary increase of $450 annually, which was passed in the closing hours of the recent session.

We are grateful to you for your sympathetic understanding of the financial plight of all postal employees and thank you, not only for the recent increase in our salaries, but for all of the beneficial legislation that was passed, through your efforts, during this past session of Congress.

We, the rural carriers of the Nation, are grateful and thank you sincerely.

Very respectfully yours,

GLENN W. FOLKERS,
National Secretary.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The Federal Government contributes millions to old-age pensions in Louisiana. As much as $30 per person is given by the Federal Government to be matched with State funds.

AUTHOR OF OLD-AGE PENSION BILL

I have the privilege of being the author of numerous old-age pension and welfare assistance bills providing for $65 old-age pension for persons 60 years or over.

GENERAL WELFARE FEDERATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: We desire to thank you for your continued interest in the problems of the aged and the aid rendered their cause during the entire period you have been in Congress. We have always found you ready and willing to extend every aid possible in our efforts to secure the passage of a measure to guarantee to all in our great Nation security against privation and want in the sunset of life.

Assuring you of our gratitude for being one of the early signers of the steering committee resolution on behalf of this measure as well as one of the early signers on the discharge petition for a floor hearing and vote upon it, we remain,

Very sincerely yours,

ARTHUR L. JOHNSON,
Executive and Legislative Secretary.

NO REQUEST TOO LARGE—NONE TOO SMALL

As your Congressman I have always taken the position that I represented all the people of the Sixth District regardless of their political affiliations. Each time you requested aid I did my best. Every letter that has been written to me as your Congressman has been answered promptly and has been given careful attention.

The following miscellaneous letters give you an idea of my work:

LOUISIANA ASSOCIATION OF INSURANCE AGENTS, INC.,
Baton Rouge, La., March 3, 1948.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: On behalf of the insurance agents of Louisiana and in particular of those agents, members of the Louisiana Association of Insurance Agents, I wish to express sincere thanks and appreciation to you for your aid to us in your support of House Joint Resolution 296.

With very best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: I wish to thank you for your prompt and effective action concerning my case. It means much to the little man to have a capable and conscientious Representative who can wade through the maze of present-day red tape and effect just action such as you have accomplished in my behalf.

HOUSTON BUTLER HUGHES.

BATON ROUGE, LA., April 17, 1948.

Mr. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to express my appreciation for the thoughtfulness and consideration that you displayed in notifying me and my fellow workers of the recent action of your committee on H. R. 5667. We are, indeed, grateful for your assistance in securing legislation in our behalf and have a brighter outlook with the knowledge that we have your support. However, we were all particularly impressed by the personal touch that you added by notifying us individually by air-mail letters of the committee action, and I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for doing so.

Respectfully,

JOINT EMERGENCY COMMITTEE FOR THE SOUTHERN PINE INDUSTRY,
New Orleans, La., March 8, 1946.

Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: This committee, representing the entire southern pine industry, desires to express to you its appreciation for the interest you have shown in the problems of the southern pine industry, and particularly for your efforts with Government agencies to bring about relief to our industry through amended Directive 94, issued February 13.

Our industry, which produces one of the key materials for the reconversion's contruction program, is anxious to do its full part in this great responsibility. Its ability to render maximum service to the Nation depends, to a large extent, upon the realism with which our problems are handled by agencies of the Government.

We therefore hope you will continue to show the high degree of interest you have manifested in the seriousness of our problems and that our industry may continue to have the benefit of your careful thought and attention.

Yours very truly,

C. C. SHEPPARD,
Chairman.
H. C. BERCKES,
Secretary.

DEAR JIMMY: Thank you for sending us copies of correspondence with W. L. Schillings, 101 Huron Avenue, Bogalusa, La. We deeply appreciate the services rendered by you, and in order to be fair in these matters we always try to call your good services to the attention of our clients.

Wishing you every success, we are,

Very truly yours,

RICHARDSON & RICHARDSON,
By JIM W. RICHARDSON.

Note, even my opponent's law firm agrees that I have made a good Congressman.

SOUTHEASTERN LOUISIANA COLLEGE,
Hammond, La., November 19, 1947.

Mrs. FLORENCE H. COOLEY,
Secretary, Congressman James H. Morrison,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. COOLEY: I wish to take this means of personally thanking you and Congressman MORRISON and your staff for the splendid cooperation you gave us in finally getting the transfer of the Hammond Airport property to Southeastern Louisiana College. I was officially notified by telegram on Saturday, November 15, by the War Assets Administration that the application for the property with 100-percent discount had been approved.

The acquisition of this property will greatly facilitate the expansion and building of our department of agriculture.

Again allow me to thank you for the faculty, student body, and citizenry of southeast Louisiana.

Yours very truly,

G. J. TINSLEY,
President.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
SECRETARY OF STATE,
Baton Rouge.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: Thanks very much for your telegram advising me that the House had passed the insurance legislation in which I was interested.

Your cooperation and support in this matter are deeply appreciated.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WADE O. MARTIN, Jr.,
Secretary of State and Insurance Commissioner.

LOUISIANA DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION,
DIVISION OF FORESTRY,
New Orleans, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A copy of your letter addressed to the governor's office, regarding the agricultural appropriation bill, has been forwarded to me.

May I take this opportunity to express the appreciation of the forestry governing board, the landowners, large and small, and the division of forestry for your cooperation and assistance in obtaining the passage of this measure.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

MASSEY H. ANDERSON,
State Forester, Division of Forestry.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Jennings, La., April 2, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: I have just received your letter of March 31 in regard to Roy W. Johnson (ASN 1,036,428), deceased veteran of World War I.

The certified copy of his discharge obtained from the clerk of court in Tangipahoa Parish is sufficient for our purposes.

Again I would like to thank you for the many times you have given me much needed assistance in the interests of Louisiana veterans and I assure you they are deeply appreciative.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

ALLEN G. SIBLEY,
Parish Service Officer.

BOGALUSA CITY SCHOOLS,
Bogalusa, La., March 11, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington D. C.:

It is gratifying to know that we, in the Sixth Congressional District have a representative in Congress who is so willing and eager to help constituents in matters of such great importance. I have, of course, repeated to you on many occasions my appreciation, as superintendent of schools, for the untiring work you are performing in behalf of school teachers, school children, and education as a whole. You must certainly know that such services will not be forgotten.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. J. ISRAEL,
Superintendent.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building:

Thanks for your message about transfer of property to school for spastics; appreciate greatly your help in this manner.

SPENCER PHILLIPS,
Superintendent, Louisiana State School for Deaf.

BATON ROUGE, LA., May 15, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I was indeed very much pleased to learn from you in your letter of April 5, 1947, that a third-class medical relief station had been established in Baton Rouge. This has been a matter in which I have been most interested and your efforts were greatly appreciated.

Attached is a sample "Notice to All Masters," which I prepared and distributed to river tow boat masters, operating in and around Baton Rouge.

On behalf of the river tow boat personnel to whom I have spoken, I wish to thank you for the assistance you gave in having this medical relief station established in Baton Rouge.

I, personally, wish to thank you and if I can be of some service to you in the future, please call on me and I will use what is in my power to return your kind service.

Yours very truly,

A. L. MCMURRAY.

FEBRUARY 25, 1947.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: Your readiness to use your office to help your constituents is gaining you quite a favorable comment from all sections. A Mr. Hinson from Mt. Hermon said the people had three true friends: God Almighty, REA, and JIMMY MORRISON.

Your friend,

R. L. BOLTON.

Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: I've had occasion several times to write you for one thing or another, and recently contacted you about a truck that was badly needed in our ward. This letter is not to ask for anything, but merely to thank you for your cooperation and assistance in the truck deal.

The truck has been delivered and it should be at work in a few days on the roads of our ward and all the people of the ward will be benefited.

I hope the time will come when I can show you how grateful I am personally and also how grateful the people of the Fifth Ward of Washington Parish are. Of course you've got a lot of friends up there anyhow, and it couldn't be too much different no matter how hard I try to show our appreciation.

Thanking you again, and with best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

CECIL RESTER.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
SECRETARY OF STATE,
Baton Rouge, La.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMIE: Since the final passage of the insurance legislation by Congress, I wish to express my sincere thanks and appreciation for the interest that you took in this matter.

It is my sincere belief that this legislation will go a long way toward solving a difficult problem.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

WADE O. MARTIN, Jr.,
Secretary of State and Insurance Commissioner.

PLAQUEMINE, LA., January 19, 1948.

Mr. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Hammond, La.

DEAR SIR: I wish to extend to you my hearty appreciation. You have helped my neighbors and me in time of need and we are grateful. I will do everything in my power to help you win success in your political campaign.

Yours truly,

CLETUS F. O'NEIL.

I have always felt it a great honor to represent the great Sixth District of the State of Louisiana. You people have been good to me and I likewise have tried to reciprocate.

The following extracts are taken from letters, testimonials, sent to me by you people of the Sixth District:

DEAR JIMMY: The honors and recognition that go with public office today are much smaller than they were many years ago. The responsibility and the criticism, on the other hand, are much greater.

As spokesman for this group, I want to take this opportunity of expressing to you our sincere appreciation for the statesmanlike manner in which you have represented the State in which we all have a common interest.

With our assurance that you may expect our continued support and cooperation, I am, with the best of the season's greetings,

Yours very truly,

Congressman JAMES H. MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your successful efforts in helping secure increased ceiling prices on rough rice.

We know the rice farmers appreciate the fight you have made in their behalf. We will surely let them know of the active part you have played.

Assuring you of our appreciation of your untiring efforts and with best wishes.

Yours very truly,

J. F. PERCY,
Executive Secretary.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: Only the burden of paper that this contract thrust upon us has prevented us sooner expressing to you our gratitude for the wonderful assistance and support you gave us in the contest for this commission. Our associates join in thanking you.

It has become our most earnest intention by conscientious and energetic application to this important task to justify the confidence in us that you so kindly expressed on our behalf.

A small opportunity to reciprocate your generosity would provide us an unexpected pleasure.

Cordially yours,

WILLIAM R. BURK,
Associated Architects and Engineers.

MY DEAR MR. MORRISON: I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your kind expressions contained in your letter of April 2.

We in this department are watching with keen interest the negotiations of the Kaiser interests in acquiring the now idle aluminum plant here in Baton Rouge and want to assure you that we want to render any services that we can to you or the Kaiser interests in expediting this matter in order to open this plant, thereby helping the reconversion program as well as our State's further economy.

Again thanking you, and with sincere good wishes, I remain,

Respectfully,

W. HARRY JOHNSON,
Executive Director.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MORRISON: Thank you very much for your letter of recent date.

I want to thank you on behalf of our folks very sincerely for your fine support of our farm program in Louisiana.

With very best wishes and kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

DEAR JIMMIE: It is due to similar action which you have taken on behalf of the people of Louisiana and especially the Sixth District that has gained you the reputation as being the best man we have in Washington.

Sincerely yours,

M. G. HEARD.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Hon. JAMES H. "JIMMY" MORRISON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIMMY: The people of the Sixth Congressional District are certainly fortunate to have a Congressman that is on the ball at all times as you are, and one that can so ably represent us in the Congress of the United States.

Many, many thanks to you for your kindness and please remember me as your friend always, I am,

Sincerely,

GEO. W. BURT, Jr.

DEAR JIMMY: Your spontaneous hospitality was a real burst of Louisiana sunshine. Your office radiates welcome. You are a genuine man of the people. You are one of the hardest working public men in the world.

All who know you in Louisiana will echo these sentiments—and that goes for a lot of those who oppose you politically.

I want to thank you again for the interesting lunch and the warm reception, the more appreciated in view of all the other things you had to do.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

STUART BRADLEY.

Legislative Record of the Second Session, Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is customary to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the closing days of Congress a brief summary of the activities of that session. Accordingly, I request that the following digest be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Last July 26 I had occasion to insert a summary of the activities of the first session of this Congress.

At that time I reported that, "The real yardstick of the achievements of this Congress is not entirely that of the things done, but of what things it has left undone."

I regret to report that nearly 1 year later, it is still necessary, in the interest of truth and accuracy, for me to repeat that statement.

For despite the real accomplishments in the field of foreign affairs, where many Republicans have ignored partisan politics in order to support the administration's efforts to lead the world toward a revived prosperity and a lasting peace, the things left undone, particularly in the domestic field, are still a large, even preponderent part of the record of this Congress.

Particularly significant, in my mind, is the failure of those who guided the activities of the Republican majority with an exceedingly firm hand, to enact any major legislation to curb the dangerous inflationary spiral which threatens us with another disastrous cycle of boom and bust, or to enact any major legislation in the fields of housing, health, education, or social security, or to take any constructive steps to help small business and to plug up loopholes in existing antimonopoly laws.

Let us first consider the activities of the Congress in the field of foreign relations and on matters which directly affect our relationship with other nations.

The final record on these issues is a much better one than might have been expected with a Congress controlled by a party which had a long tradition of isolationism and which ignored the requests of the President on so many vital matters.

Despite some delays in appropriations, Congress showed wisdom in its action on interim aid to nations too weak to await the enactment of the European recovery program.

Further, the Congress moved efficiently in its careful study and final enactment of the European recovery program to implement the so-called Marshall plan.

But after this statesmanlike activity, the Congress almost reverted to the position of Indian giver on this commitment to aid Europe to rebuild its wartorn economy.

At first it appeared merely that a willful little group of unreconstructed isolationists in the Republican majority of the House were behind the move to reduce appropriations for the European recovery program to the point of ineffectiveness.

But as the struggle dragged on, it became apparent that more was at stake. Here was a desperate, cold-blooded bid by the part of isolationists to seek control of their party and to repudiate the European recovery program.

The struggle between the two factions of the Republicans raged until the eleventh hour of the Congress with unabated bitterness. Still it raged, until finally, in the small hours of the morning of Sunday, June 20, the Republican isolationists retreated, and the bulk of the European recovery program funds were restored in conference.

We had kept our promise, but the rest of the world had real cause for doubts as to how long we would go on keeping our promises.

Yet while the Congress pledged America to aid world economic recovery and the revival of the world trade it also passed merely a 1-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and attached such crippling amendments that our world-trade program has been seriously handicapped, and in a sense the Republican Party has committed itself to start a backward march to the economic isolationism of the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

In areas, directly affecting our foreign relations, such as atomic energy and national defense, the record was far from perfect. The efforts of a large and powerful faction of the Republican Party to avoid a vote on temporary selective service and the failure to enact universal training did nothing to bolster America's stock overseas.

Nor did the partisan opposition of the majority to the confirmation of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission tend to reassure the rest of the world that we would continue to act wisely in our handling of this tremendous new source of destructive power and constructive power.

All in all, the Republican votes on foreign affairs left the picture of a party bitterly and perhaps irrevocably divided between internationalism and isolationism.

THE FOREIGN-AID PROGRAM

Despite the tug-of-war between isolationists and internationalists in the Republican Party, the Eightieth Congress finally rose above partisan political considerations to enact an unprecedented foreign-aid program; but not before it had given many anxious moments to the Nation and to the world. Unfortunately for our prestige abroad the indecision on funds to carry out our European recovery program commitments furnished a basis for propaganda against us and caused some of our friends to feel that perhaps we did not mean what we had promised.

Fortunately the clear thinking of the best brains in both parties brought the ERP safely through on a bipartisan basis that confounded the efforts of the isolationists.

The basis of the Marshall plan—recovery, not relief, through American-European cooperation—was discussed carefully by the administration before the proposal was made public.

World War II had left many European nations in ruin. Factories had been destroyed, railroad lines and highways had been blown up, rich farm land had been turned into battlefields. The industrial plants of these nations had either been destroyed or had become hopelessly obsolescent.

Europe faced a herculean task of economic recovery. The Continent made important strides during the first year and a half after VE-day; however, the bitter winter of 1946–47 and the subsequent drought left its mark and European nations needed help to restore their economy and thus bolster their political stability against the westward march of Communist totalitarianism.

The questions before the administration were: What kind of help should America give Europe? How much help can America give Europe without harm to our own people? Should the United States extend the European nations direct relief?

Should this country let European nations rely solely on commercial bank loans? Should a recovery program be adopted? Or should the United States ignore Europe's plight?

The administration realized that Europe must not be abandoned, for history has demonstrated that a peaceful, productive Europe is necessary to the peace of the world.

That was the situation when Secretary of State Marshall placed the administration's realistic foreign policy before the world for the first time in an address June 5, 1947, at Harvard University.

Careful studies indicated that a cooperative, self-help recovery program was the best approach to Europe's economic problems.

The American Nation and the world quickly saw the hope for world peace embodied in the Marshall plan.

All of Europe wanted to join in this great endeavor. But Russia cracked the whip over its satellite nations. The Russians would not allow their puppet states to participate in this democratic program. Some of the nations behind the iron curtain sought to participate in the program but were forced to withdraw as a result of Russian pressure.

Sixteen western European nations met in Paris in July 1947 to draw up a cooperative recovery program. They organized the Committee of European Economic Cooperation.

For 2 months the nations studied their economic problems. The needs of all 16 countries were carefully considered.

Then in September 1947 the Committee of European Economic Cooperation sent a report to the United States outlining a program to make Europe self-supporting by 1952.

The European nations agreed to do four things:

First. Each nation would step up industrial production as fast as possible.

Second. Each country would stabilize its currency.

Third. The 16 nations promised to reduce trade barriers throughout Europe. Thus aiding the free flow of trade.

Fourth. Exports would be increased to make up the trading deficit of the European nations with America.

After careful study by both the representatives of the European nations and the State Department the 16 countries asked for $17,000,000,000 from the United States for the period from April 1, 1948, to June 30, 1952. Of this, $6,800,000,000 would be needed in the first 15 months of the program.

The European countries wanted the money for food, fuel, raw materials, and capital equipment to put their economy on its feet.

Meanwhile, more than 200 Congressmen went to Europe in the summer and fall of 1947 to investigate the economic plight of the Continent.

The Senators and Representatives talked to high government officials and the common people alike; they visited factories and farm. They saw war-devastated cities and they examined reconstruction work already under way.

Most of the Congressmen who visited Europe agreed that the Continent needed help.

The House Select Committee on Foreign Aid was named to make a detailed study of Europe. In November 1947 the Congressmen set down six basic elements of a foreign-aid program:

First. The European countries must make vigorous efforts to increase production of food and materials to meet essential domestic needs as well as those of cooperating nations.

Second. The European nations must stimulate trade with all Europe and with other nations.

Third. Other countries besides the United States that are in a position to help Europe should do so.

Fourth. Private initiative should be encouraged to take on activities assumed by European governments during the postwar crisis.

Fifth. The European countries should adopt fiscal, financial, and monetary programs to stop inflation, stabilize exchanges, and generally restore confidence in their currencies.

Sixth. Full publicity should be given to the United States aid by the European countries which received it.

In its considerations the Congress had the advantage of the excellent studies made by three citizens' committees representing all aspects of American life. The groups were appointed by President Truman.

The Resources Committee, headed by Secretary of the Interior Krug, studied foreign aid in relation to America's natural resources. The committee reported in October that the United States had sufficient resources to undertake the foreign-aid program developed by the 16 European nations at their Paris meetings. But the committee warned that this country could not underwrite the European economy indefinitely.

Steel and petroleum represented the biggest problems because of shortages of these items in this country.

The second committee appointed was the Council of Economic Advisers. It also reported in October. The council said that the foreign-aid program contemplated by the 16 European nations was within the productive capacity of the United States.

The council, under the chairmanship of Edwin G. Nourse, warned that some commodities might be in short supply in this country if the foreign-aid plans were adopted. The group decided that export controls, allocations of some commodities for domestic use, efficient transportation, and distribution of goods and the curbing of speculation and hoarding would be necessary.

The third group also reported in October. It was made up of prominent citizens, under the chairmanship of Secretary of Commerce Harriman.

The Harriman committee concluded that the foreign-aid program was within the over-all limits of the American economy.

Americans had agreed that the European recovery program was necessary. They also agreed that America could afford to help Europe.

But the Europeans' economic crisis was worsening every day. And in October 1947 President Truman realized that Europe needed not only a long-range program but also stop-gap funds to see the Continent through the winter of 1947–48.

Therefore, President Truman summoned Congress to meet in special session, beginning November 17. The purposes of the session were twofold: One, to provide interim aid for France, Italy, and Austria; two, to enact a domestic antiinflation program and thus maintain the economic strength of this country and preserve its ability to aid the world without doing irreparable injury to our own economic life.

The administration asked for emergency aid for the three countries to see them through the winter. A total of $597,000,000 was requested to help the countries until March 31, 1948. By then it was hoped the long-range European program could be under way.

President Truman declared in his message to Congress on November 17 that Austria, France, and Italy must be helped if their peoples are to survive the coming winter, and if their political and economic systems are not to disintegrate. Exceedingly bad weather has brought on crop failures and fuel shortages, and has caused intense suffering. The food and fuel stocks of these countries are now near the vanishing point. Their peoples are in a dangerously weakened condition, due to years of short rations. Additional medical supplies and facilities are urgently necessary.

Both the Senate and the House agreed with the President that these countries needed help immediately. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee held extensive hearings.

The Senate committee reported its bill first. After 5 days of floor debate the Senate passed its interim aid measure on December 1 by the overwhelming vote of 83 to 6.

The House committee reported its measure December 2. The principal difference between the two bills was the inclusion of China as a recipient of aid in the House measure. The Senate had said nothing about China. The House committee authorized only $590,000,000 for the four countries. Of this amount, China would receive $60,000,000.

The House passed its emergency relief bill December 11. Differences between the House and Senate measures were soon ironed out with the legislation going to President Truman, December 17. The authorization law set aid figures at $597,000,000 including help for China.

Next, the Appropriations Committees considered the amount of money that should be spent for foreign aid. Congress finally agreed December 19 to allot $522,000,000 to France, Italy, and Austria and $18,000,000 for China.

The emergency aid program passed Congress in substantially the form recommended by President Truman, except for the cuts in appropriations. But this was not important except as a warning of what was to come.

Then as Congress was completing action on interim aid the President sent his detailed European recovery program to the House and Senate. This was the plan outlined by the President December 19:

First. Congress should authorize $17,000,000,000 in aid to the 16 European countries and western Germany for the period from April 1, 1948, to June 30, 1952. The appropriation for the first 15 months should be $6,800,000,000.

Second. These funds would be used for rehabilitation, not relief. The money would start Europe on its way to genuine recovery.

Third. Agreements should be made between America and the European nations to insure the aid would be used for genuine recovery and not be used for mere relief or as a dole.

Fourth. American aid should be made available partly in grants and partly in loans, depending on the financial conditions.

Fifth. A new agency, the Economic Cooperation Administration, would be established to run the European recovery program. A special American representative to be appointed in Europe to coordinate the program.

In his State of the Union message January 7, 1948, the President reiterated the administration's belief in the necessity of the European recovery program. The President said:

> I urge the Congress to act promptly on this vital measure of our foreign policy—on this decisive contribution to world peace.

Both the House and Senate quickly began work on the legislation to start the wheels of European reconstruction moving.

Weeks of hearings were held in both Houses. The committee sessions were in the democratic tradition. All sides of the question were heard. All citizens and organizations, whether internationalist or isolationist, were given an opportunity to speak.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported its bill, the Economic Cooperation Act, late in February. The measure embodied all the fundamentals laid down by President Truman. This was a program for recovery, not relief. The European countries would make every effort to help themselves. America would not step in and run European governments. The United States and Europe were cooperating.

In March the Senate devoted long hours of serious and thoughtful debate to the Marshall plan and every sentence of the foreign-aid measure was explored carefully.

Some isolationists protested that America should not undertake the European recovery program, but the majority of Republicans joined with the Democrats when the Senate voted 68 to 17 for the Marshall plan March 13.

Two other foreign-aid programs were recommended by President Truman in 1948. In February he called for $275,000,000 additional aid for Greece and Turkey and $570,000,000 for China. Both of these programs were in the same cooperative spirit as the European recovery program. The United States would help Greece and Turkey and China if these countries did their utmost to help themselves. These, too, were programs of reconstruction rather than pure relief.

The Senate followed President Truman's recommendations and passed measures authorizing aid to them.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee completed its exhaustive hearings on foreign aid shortly after the Senate passed its European recovery program bill.

And President Truman continued to push for passage of the foreign-aid measures. The Communist coup in Czechoslovakia and the approaching Italian elections prompted the President's special message to Congress March 17. President Truman called for an adequate American defense program coupled with the European recovery program.

The President warned: "Time is now of critical importance."

The House combined the President's three foreign-aid programs in one bill that was passed by a vote of 329 to 74, March 31. Minor differences between the House and Senate bills were ironed out easily, and Congress sent to the President a foreign-aid program more than 2 weeks before the critical Italian elections of April 18.

The results of congressional approval of the administration's plan for helping the war-torn world were immediate. The Italian people turned back the Communists in their important national elections. Democracy was bolstered in France. The tired, careworn faces of the European peoples saw genuine rays of hope.

But the thoughtful program worked out by the best brains of both political parties—a program which Communist Russia fought unceasingly—was sabotaged by isolationists.

Two months after Congress had authorized the Economic Cooperation Administration, the program received a serious setback.

The House Appropriations Committee voted to cut the first-year appropriation of $5,300,000,000 for the program by more than 25 percent.

And the House approved this action June 3 when it passed the Appropriation Committee's bill by a voice vote. Friends of the European Recovery Program both here and abroad were dismayed by this reversal of an earlier vote and by the alarming rebirth of isolationism which such action indicated to Americans and to the world.

In one blow all the hard-won gains were wiped out. An isolationist bloc of die-hard Republicans had seriously weakened our greatest bid for winning a lasting peace.

The Senate realized the importance of President Truman's foreign policy and the hope that it held for world peace.

Democratic Senators joined with Republicans to vote nearly the full amount of funds authorized for the foreign-aid program.

But then the House and Senate versions of money for foreign aid had to go to conference. Long hours were spent by the conferees in trying to work out a sensible, adequate appropriation.

The final appropriation represented a victory for America's bipartisan foreign policy. Both the House and Senate voted finally to appropriate more than $5,000,000,000 for the European Recovery Program during its first year. This amount was substantially what President Truman had requested.

Despite this turn of events the irresponsible action of the House attempting to cut foreign aid funds by 27 percent still was remembered throughout the world.

World peace still hung precariously as a result of the House action. The starving peoples of Europe wondered whether the ERP would be continued or whether Republican isolationists might triumph in some future attack on it.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

When the Atomic Energy Commission was established in 1946, Congress decided the atom should be kept out of politics. Congress acted wisely in voting that the problems of atomic science must be handled with extreme care. They believed that the atom always must be considered in a bipartisan atmosphere. Especially in this field where leadership is the greatest insurance of our own peace and security. Politics has no place in a subject wherein the very existence of the Nation and the world is at stake.

But in 1948 partisan politics did enter into the realm of atomic energy.

President Truman nominated the present Chairman and the four members of the Atomic Energy Commission for terms of from 1 to 5 years as provided by the laws voted by the Congress. The Chairman is David E. Lilienthal. The other members are Robert F. Bacher, Sumner T. Pike, Lewis L. Strauss, and William W. Waymack.

The legislation setting up the Atomic Energy Commission provided that the Chairman and the four members of the Commission should be named for initial terms of 1 year. Subsequent appointments would be made for terms of from 1 to 5 years to assure continuity in the Commission's policies. Thus the framers of the law had hoped to avoid partisan politics in these appointments. But it was too much to expect that this admirable provision would survive the vicissitudes of a political year.

The five members of the Atomic Energy Commission served well during their initial terms of office. Atomic-energy research made heartening progress and our leadership in science was not seriously challenged. The atomic-research program, concerning problems of peace as well as war, is on a firm footing.

However, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy voted to amend the atomic energy legislation to provide 2-year terms for all members of the Commission. And this only after a bitter controversy drew caustic criticism of the Republican leadership for injecting partisan politics into the problem of the Nation's safety.

During the last hours of the Eightieth Congress the Senate voted to reappoint the Atomic Energy Commissioners for 2-year terms in accordance with the Republican partisan amendments to the Atomic Energy Act.

Thus the vital Atomic Energy Commission was turned into a political plum by the Republican-controlled Congress which was more interested in politics than in the security of America.

During the second session of the Eightieth Congress the Republican leadership made another attempt to turn the Atomic Energy Commission into a partisan agency.

Republican leaders in the Senate sponsored a bill that would require loyalty investigations to be made by the FBI of the five members of the Atomic Energy Commission. The reports of these investigations would be turned over to the Senate under the measure. Then, presumably, the Republicans could turn and twist these reports for political use.

It should be remembered that the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission have demonstrated their loyalty to the United States by more than a year of great service to the country. Great strides have been made in atomic research under the guidance of these men.

The Congress acted wisely in refusing to enact this loyalty investigation measure into law. This is no time for witch hunts in the Atomic Energy Commission.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Eightieth Congress dealt a serious blow to our foreign policy, however, by its action on the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

President Truman declared in a special message to Congress March 1:

> The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is a tested and practical means, which had wide bipartisan support, for achieving the benefits of expanding world commerce for the United States and other countries. It is a continuing evidence of the determination of the United States to contribute its full share to the reconstruction of a sound and growing world economy as the basis for enduring peace. As such, I strongly recommend that the act be extended for an additional 3 years.

The first Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed by Congress in 1934. The legislation has been extended four times since then and has been the keystone not only of our economic policy but of our foreign policy as well.

In brief, the act authorizes the President to make agreements with other nations for the reciprocal reduction of tariffs and other hindrances to international trade.

For 14 years the act has worked well. The Congress has extended it each time after thorough study of the effect of the legislation both on the United States and foreign countries.

Trade agreements have been concluded between the United States and 29 nations. These agreements stimulated world commerce by reducing international trade barriers.

Domestic producers always have been protected. Extensive public hearings have been held before negotiations have been started.

Before any trade agreement was concluded the Departments of State, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, the National Military Establishment and the United States Tariff Commission carefully studied the proposals. Each agreement has provided that the United States could withdraw from it or change it if unforeseen developments threaten to hurt domestic producers.

Extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act without crippling amendments would help the United States to carry out the charter of the International Trade Organization, recently drawn up at Habana. The ITO encourages the conduct of trade between nations on fair and liberal principles. The ITO also provides that all member nations stand ready to negotiate for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers on a reciprocal and mutually advantageous basis.

In order to participate in the ITO effectively the United States should have continued the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act in substantially the same form in which it has worked so successfully in the past 14 years.

The reciprocal-trade program should have been authorized for another 3 years. At the end of that time Congress could review again the entire program.

The Republican Party has recognized the importance of the reciprocal-trade agreements. The 1944 Republican Party platform stated:

> The Republican Party pledges that it will join with others in leadership in every cooperative effort to remove unnecessary and destructive barriers to international trade.

Business, led by the United States Chamber of Commerce, has supported the reciprocal trade program. Labor and agriculture also have found the reciprocal trade program to be sound legislation.

The House Ways and Means Committee considered extension of the reciprocal trade program at hearings early in May. Many Congressmen and citizens' organizations criticized the committee for hearing testimony in secret, executive sessions.

The measure reported by the committee substantially changed the reciprocal trade program. The bill passed the House May 26 by a vote of 234 to 149. The principal provisions of the House legislation were:

First. The program would be extended only a year instead of 3 years as proposed by President Truman.

Second. The Tariff Commission, at present only a fact-finding body, would recommend trade agreements after holding hearings.

Third. If the President does not follow the findings of the Tariff Commision, Congress can veto any tariff decisions made by the President.

Many Republicans joined Democrats in protesting against these revisions of the reciprocal trade program. Secretary of State Marshall said the measure passed by the House was worse than no reciprocal trade program at all.

Many critics of the House measure pointed to the successful operation of the reciprocal trade program for the 14 years as ample proof of the soundness of the previous legislation.

Other critics of the House measure thought that it would hamper American trade with other countries so much as to bring back the days of the Smoot-Hawley high-tariff restrictions. In fact one provision of the House version provided that, under some circumstances, a tariff 50 percent higher than under the disastrous Smoot-Hawley Act could be levied.

The Senate Finance Committee held a week of hearings on reciprocal trade. The committee is to be commended for keeping its sessions open to the public. Many witnesses were heard.

The measure reported by the Finance Committee was not as restrictive as the bill that passed the House. But the Senate legislation was still far from the sound tariff proposals made by President Truman.

The Senate passed the committee's bill June 14 by a vote of 70 to 18. Efforts by the Democratic minority to extend the Trade Agreements Act, without change, for 3 years, 2 years, and 1 year were defeated by narrow margins.

The Senate bill did not give Congress a veto power over reciprocal-trade agreements made by the President.

However, the Senate measure provided that the Tariff Commission must make extended studies of the effect of proposed tariff agreements on American industries.

The President may not make reciprocal-trade agreements until he has received the Tariff Commission's reports.

The legislation also provides that if the President makes agreements beyond the Commission's recommendations, he will have to explain his actions to Congress within 30 days.

The amended Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was extended only until June 30, 1949, instead of for 3 years as requested by the President.

The House agreed to the Senate version of the bill June 16.

The measure that was sent to the White House can easily turn back American tariff policy toward the protectionist, logrolling days of Smoot and Hawley.

THE UNITED NATIONS

The United Nations has been supported strongly by President Truman and the Democratic administration. The President repeatedly has called for strengthening the United Nations. The President pledged and gave the United Nations America's wholehearted support.

However, President Truman recognized that the United Nations was not working perfectly.

During the Eightieth Congress many proposals were heard concerning the United Nations. Some persons wanted to scrap the United Nations and to return the United States to isolationism. Others wanted to form a new world organization without Russia. Still others wanted to continue to work for peace through the present United Nations organization.

After careful consideration of the question, President Truman and his advisers decided the true course to peace was through the existing machinery. The Democratic administration decided wisely that the United States should work earnestly to improve and expand the United Nations.

With this end in view, the Democratic administration and the Republican Senate concurred in a resolution urging America to develop a strengthened United Nations.

The Senate passed this resolution June 11. There was little opposition. This was what the Senate asked the United States to do:

First. The United States should work to eliminate the veto power in the Security Council except in a very few instances of matters of high policy.

Second. The United States should encourage regional defense agreements as provided in the United Nations Charter.

Third. The United States should continue to make every effort to preserve the peace through the United Nations.

Congress failed to enact legislation providing a $65,000,000 loan to the United Nations. This money would have been used to help in the construction of United Nations headquarters in New York.

The Senate passed the bill authorizing the loan. The House Foreign Affairs Committee reported the measure to the House.

But House Republican leaders were not able to find time to consider the bill in the closing days of the Eightieth Congress.

This legislation should have been passed by the Eightieth Congress. As a result of congressional inaction, some member nations of the United Nations are talking of moving its headquarters to Europe.

DISPLACED PERSONS

Since the end of World War II President Truman has called for the admission of displaced persons to the United States.

His most recent plea was in his state of the Union message January 7. The President said:

> Many thousands of displaced persons, still living in camps overseas, should be allowed entry into the United States. I again urge the Congress to pass suitable legislation at once so that this Nation may do its share in caring for homeless and suffering refugees of all faiths. I believe that the admission of these persons will add to the strength and energy of this Nation.

After long months of argument and delay the Senate passed a bill early in June to admit 200,000 displaced persons.

The Senate bill had many hampering restrictions. The measure provided that half of the DP's must be farmers and that half must come from Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia. It also said that American citizens or organizations must underwrite the DP's who came here to prevent them from becoming public charges.

A few days after the Senate acted the House also passed displaced persons legislation. The House measure was a much better bill. It provided that DP's be admitted regardless of occupation, race, or creed. It would have charged the DP's against future immigration quotas.

In the final hours of the Eightieth Congress a compromise displaced persons bill was approved by the House and the Senate. The measure was a great disappointment to those who wanted adequate legislation to help the unfortunate refugees of war in Europe. Even though inadequate, it was supported by the Democratic minority as being better than nothing.

The displaced persons bill contained clauses that seriously discriminated against Jews and Catholics in Europe.

Some said that this legislation will do more to prevent displaced persons from entering the United States than to encourage them to come to America.

The Eightieth Congress cannot point with pride to its record on displaced persons.

THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

President Truman urged the second session of the Eightieth Congress to enact an adequate defense program. The President made his recommendations January 7 in his state of the Union message and March 17 in a special message on defense and the European recovery program.

The President's program was in three parts:

First. Adequate funds must be appropriated for the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

Second. A peacetime selective service law must be enacted.

Third. Universal training legislation should be passed by Congress.

The Eightieth Congress followed President Truman's recommendations on funds for defense and on selective service. But the Congress failed to enact a universal training law. Nothing was done on this important phase of our effort to remain strong and so preserve the peace.

Both House and Senate Appropriations Committee held long hearings on the President's budget requests for the armed services. The measures reported by the committees followed the President's recommendations.

The appropriations bills for the Army, Navy, and Air Force passed both the House and Senate by almost unanimous votes.

In addition to the regular appropriations for the Department of Defense, Congress also voted money to increase the size of the Air Force from its present 55 groups to 70 groups.

Funds voted for the defense program totaled $13,000,000,000. Although this figure is high for peacetime, the Congress agreed with the President that an adequate Army, Navy, and Air Force are needed to insure peace during this unsettled postwar period.

Following a thorough study of the tense international atmosphere, President Truman recommended limited peacetime selective-service legislation in his special message to Congress March 17.

The President stated:

> I recommend the temporary reenactment of selective-service legislation in order to maintain our armed forces at their authorized strength.
>
> Our armed forces lack the necessary men to maintain their authorized strength. They have been unable to maintain their authorized strength through voluntary enlistments, even though such strength has been reduced to the very minimum necessary to meet our obligations abroad and is far below the minimum which should always be available in the continental United States.

The Senate Armed Services Committee began hearings on the draft question on the same day that the President addressed Congress. The House Armed Services Committee opened its hearings soon after.

The peacetime selective-service legislation was debated first in the Senate. Few objections to the draft were raised on the Senate floor. Some minor amendments were adopted, but the bill that was sent to the House was substantially what the President requested.

These were the main provisions of the draft bill passed by the Senate:

First. Strength of the armed services is increased from the present 1,446,000 men to 1,795,000. The Organized Reserve strength is increased from 1,066,000 to 1,520,000.

Second. Men from 19 to 26 years are subject to 2 years' service in the armed services. This duty will be followed by training of 2 to 5 years in the Organized Reserve.

Third. Exemptions will be granted for most World War II veterans and members of the Organized Reserves. Ministers, ministerial students, and conscientious objectors are exempted.

Fourth. Deferments will be granted to high-school students; college students following courses in medicine and science; and married men and persons in occupations essential to the national health, safety, or interest.

Fifth. Men who are drafted will have reemployment and seniority rights as during World War II.

But the draft bill ran into a GOP bottleneck in the House Rules Committee. House leaders refused to let the measure go quickly to the floor for debate.

When the Senate passed its draft bill, the House Armed Services Committee already had reported a measure similar to the Senate legislation. The differences between the two bills could have been resolved easily by amendment during the floor debate or in a conference between Senators and Representatives.

However, the House leaders, through the Rules Committee, decided to stall.

The Rules Committee is charged with sending legislation to the House floor in an orderly fashion. But in this instance, the Rules Committee put obstacle after obstacle in the path of the selective-service legislation.

House leaders ordered the Rules Committee to hold additional hearings on the selective-service bill. Opponents of the draft among House Members were rounded up to testify.

The House Rules Committee held intermittent hearings for several weeks on the selective-service bill. The committee's chairman introduced a substitute for the draft that would have attempted to recruit adequate armed forces through an expensive enlistment bonus. The President correctly described this so-called bribe-for-patriotism scheme of the committee's chairman as asinine.

It must be remembered that these delaying tactics were adopted by House Republican leaders after the House Armed Services Committee had voted to report a draft bill.

If the House leaders had followed the democratic procedures for representative government laid down by the founding fathers, the Rules Committee could have scheduled the bill for floor debate early in May.

But the House leaders wanted to kill or hamstring the draft at all costs. The House leaders paid no regard to the security of the United States.

After weeks of delay showed that the majority of House Members would not toy with the national safety, the House leaders finally allowed the selective-service legislation to get to the House floor in the last days of the session.

But the obstructionists in the House had not given up. Nearly 50 amendments were introduced by the opponents of draft legislation.

The House leaders decided that if the United States was going to have a peacetime draft it was to be ineffective.

Opponents of the draft legislation admitted freely that they would use every delaying tactic possible to prevent Congress from enacting a peacetime selective-service law.

The most crippling amendment was adopted early in the House debate. This change in the Senate legislation would limit the draft period to 1 year instead of 2, as recommended by the President and the Senate.

The chiefs of the armed forces had told congressional committees time after time that 2 years was the minimum limit on draft legislation. The defense chiefs know that it would take at least 2 years for the Army, Navy, and Air Force to train men adequately.

The House dealt another severe blow to the draft legislation when it adopted an amendment delaying induction of men through selective service until November or December.

President Truman put politics aside and placed the welfare of the country uppermost in his mind when he recommended selective service as a necessary part of America's defense program. The President called for a draft bill to strengthen the security of the United States.

House leaders apparently opposed a draft bill in hopes that the failure of Congress to enact a selective-service measure would enhance Republican chances at the polls in November.

When the selective-service legislation was sent back to conference in the last days of the session the outlook was dim for enactment of an adequate defense program.

But the Senate conferees should be commended for fighting for a sound draft bill. The result of the compromise embodied most of the necessary provisions of the original Senate bill.

The major difference between the original Senate bill and the compromise measure was the length of service. This was cut from 24 to 21 months.

But the other provisions of the bill provided for a good, although far from an excellent, draft law. The size of the armed forces will be increased along the lines recommended by President Truman. And the armed forces will have fairly adequate funds to modernize its equipment and carry on necessary research.

However, the bill passed by the House stands as a grim reminder to Americans that a large number of Republican leaders still are more concerned with politics than with the national security.

Universal training legislation was not enacted into law.

President Truman first called for universal training in September 1945. The late President Roosevelt had recognized UMT legislation as vital in his state of the Union message in aJnuary 1945.

President Truman has repeated his UMT requests many times. He recommended UMT in his 1946, 1947, and 1948 state of the Union messages. He called for UMT once again in his special message to Congress March 17, 1948.

Last March the President told Congress:

> Universal training is the only feasible means by which the civilian components of our armed forces can be built up to the strength required if we are to be prepared for emergencies. Our ability to mobilize large numbers of trained men in time of emergency could forestall future conflict and, together with other measures of national policy, could restore stability to the world.

UMT was endorsed strongly by the House Select Committee on Postwar Military Policy in a report in July 1945. UMT also was recommended by the President's Advisory Commission on Universal Military Training in a report in May 1947.

The House Armed Services Committee held long hearings on UMT a year ago. The committee reported UMT legislation July 26, 1947, the day before the first session of the Eightieth Congress adjourned and too late for action at the first session.

The measure backed by the House committee would have authorized 6 months of training for men between 18 and 20 years. Following this basic work the men would have served an additional period in the organized Reserve.

The UMT bill went from the Armed Services Committee to the Rules Committee for clearance for floor action. Nearly all legislation is routed through the Rules Committee in the House. The group is charged with maintaining an orderly flow of bills to the House floor.

Again, however, the Rules Committee failed to act. The Rules Committee held no hearings on the measure, and the House was not given an opportunity to debate UMT on the floor.

In the Senate Armed Services Committee much time was devoted to discussion of universal military training. All sides of the question were weighed. And the Senate committee decided to abandon universal military training in favor of voluntary enlistments by 18-year-olds. Youths who entered the Army for a year on turning 18 then would be exempt from peacetime selective service when they reached 20. But when the committee's bill got to the Senate floor it was decided to strike this provision from the measure, possibly because this was an election year.

It is regrettable that the Congress failed to write UMT legislation, for UMT is necessary to a balanced defense program.

DOMESTIC ISSUES

In the field of domestic activities the Republican majority failed both to enact necessary legislation proposed by the President and to adopt the program of legislation which the majority had promised to vote into law.

The Republican Congress failed to make its promised fantastic reductions in expenditures.

It passed an unwise tax reduction law at the wrong time—a tax reduction law which gave a few dollars to low-income families and which gave thousands of dollars to upper-bracket taxpayers.

It took no effective action to curb inflation, which is the most important problem on the domestic front.

In the fields of housing, health, education, it is appropriate to repeat the refrain which described the action of the first session of the Congress on these vital problems: Nothing was done.

There were many promises in these vital areas, but there was no performance.

HIGH PRICES

Inflation is the most important domestic problem facing the American people. But the Congress failed to act effectively to curb the inflationary spiral. Prices continue to climb higher and higher each month. Many commodities are out of reach of a large segment of the American people because of the dangerously advancing price spiral.

The most recent figures available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics show:

First. The consumers' price index for April 1948 was at an all-time high at 169.3 percent of the 1935–39 average. The index was 8.4 percent higher than a year ago, 27 percent higher than June 1946, and 71.7 percent above the August 1939 level.

Second. The retail food price index for April 1948, was at 207.9 percent of the 1935–39 average. This compares with a figure of 188 percent in April 1947, 145.6 in June 1946, and 93.5 in August 1939.

Few Americans have to be told that the price of meat, butter, vegetables, shoes, clothing, furniture is too high.

President Truman has issued repeated warnings concerning the dangers of inflation. Ever since price controls were removed in 1946, the President has urged Congress to watch the domestic economy carefully and to be ready to act to curb inflation.

In the fall of 1947 the President believed inflation had progressed to a point where serious injury was being done to the economy. The dangers of inflation coupled with the need for interim aid to Europe prompted the President to call a special session of Congress beginning November 17.

President Truman told the special session of Congress concerning inflation:

> Today, inflation stands as an ominous threat to the prosperity we have achieved. We can no longer treat inflation—with spiraling prices and living costs—as some vague condition we may encounter in the future. We already have an alarming degree of inflation. And even more alarming, it is getting worse.
> The harsh effects of price inflation are clear. They are felt by wage earners, farmers, and businessmen. Wage earners are finding that bigger checks this year buy less than smaller pay checks bought last year. Despite generalities about high farm prices, the income of many farm families cannot keep up with rising costs of the things they buy. Small-business men are being squeezed by rising costs. Even those who are well off are asking, "How long can it last? When is the break coming?"

The President repeated his warnings in his state of the Union message and Economic Report to Congress in January.

To deal with inflation the President proposed a 10-point program. This was the way he summarized it in his November speech:

> In summary, the immediate anti-inflation program that I recommend calls for the following legislative action:
> 1. To restore consumer-credit controls and to restrain the creation of inflationary bank credit.
>
> 2. To authorize the regulation of speculative trading on the commodity exchanges.
>
> 3. To extend and strengthen export controls.
>
> 4. To extend authority to allocate transportation facilities and equipment.
>
> 5. To authorize measures which will induce the marketing of livestock and poultry at weights and grades that represent the most efficient ultilization of grain.
>
> 6. To enable the Department of Agriculture to expand its program of encouraging conservation practices in this country, and to authorize measures designed to increase the production of foods in foreign countries.
>
> 7. To authorize allocation and inventory control of scarce commodities which basically affect the cost of living or industrial production.
>
> 8. To extend and strengthen rent control.
> 9. To authorize consumer rationing on products in short supply which basically affect the cost of living.
> 10. To authorize price ceilings on products in short supply which basically affect the cost of living or industrial production, and to authorize such wage ceilings as are essential to maintain the necessary price ceilings.

To really understand the magnitude of the congressional failure, it is important to examine carefully congressional action on this realistic anti-inflation program. Let us consider each proposal separately:

First. Restoration of consumer and banking credit controls: Consumer credit controls were imposed originally in 1941 as a brake on wartime spending. They were continued until the first session of the Eightieth Congress when the House and Senate agreed to end them November 1, 1947.

In general the credit-control legislation provided that persons must make down payments of at least one-third and complete payments on goods within 12 or 18 months. The law worked well as a restraint on inflation.

Last December the Senate responded to the President's proposal by passing a measure setting up credit controls until March 15, 1949.

However, the House failed to act on the measure. The House Banking and Currency Committee voted against sending the bill to the House floor.

Last November about $11,000,000,000 in consumer credit was outstanding in the United States. Today more than $13,000,000,000 is outstanding. And nothing has been done.

Bank credit controls were considered by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and the Joint Committee on the Economic Report. Lengthy hearings were held.

But neither committee recommended any legislation. In fact, formal reports on bank-credit-control legislation were never issued by the committees. Nothing was done.

Second. Regulation of trading on the commodity exchanges: Committees in both the House and Senate investigated speculation on the commodity exchanges. Many days were devoted to long and sometimes bitter hearings. And the spectacle of candidates seeking to make a political carnival by using the Congress as a sounding board for charges was presented to the country.

But no legislation concerning speculation was ever recommended by a committee of the Eightieth Congress. Also, none of the investigation committees ever issued formal reports on its hearings. In simple language: Nothing has been done.

Third. Extend and strengthen export controls: Congress followed President Truman's recommendations for continued export controls. In the anti-inflation bill passed December 19, 1947, Congress extended existing export controls. But they were not strengthened as requested by the President.

With shortages of many basic materials still continuing here and with high prices throughout the world, it is essential that the Government keep a careful check on goods exported and prices charged for the goods.

Fourth. Extension of authority to allocate transportation facilities and equipment: Congress agreed to President Truman's recommendation when it extended transportation regulations through February 1949.

These laws needed to be continued because of the shortage of equipment and facilities.

Fifth. Efficient use of grain through sound livestock and poultry marketing practices: The President recognized the world grain shortage. He wanted to encourage marketing of livestock and poultry at medium weights and grades so that farmers would use less grain for feeding. In this way more grain would be made available for shipment to Europe and other countries in need of bread.

However, the Eightieth Congress took no action on this request. Again—nothing was done.
